

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY THE SIXTH.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE historical transactions in this play take in the compass of above thirty years. In the three parts of King Henry VI. there is no very precise attention to the date and disposition of facts; they are shuffled backwards and forwards out of time. For instance, the Lord Talbot is killed at the end of the fourth act of this play, who in reality did not fall till the 13th of July, 1453; and the Second Part of King Henry VI. opens with the marriage of the king, which was solemnized eight years before Talbot's death, in the year 1445. Again, in the second part, dame Eleanor Cobham is introduced to insult Queen Margaret: though her poisoning and banishment for sorcery happened three years before that princess came over to England. There are other transgressions against history, as far as the order of time is concerned.

Mr. Malone has written a dissertation to prove that the First Part of King Henry VI. was not written by Shakespeare: and that the Second and Third Parts were only altered by him from the old play, entitled 'The Contention of the Two famous Houses of York and Lancaster,' printed in two parts, in quarto, in 1594 and 1595. The substance of his argument, as far as regards this play, is as follows:—

1. The diction, versification, and allusions in it, are all different from the diction, versification, and allusions of Shakespeare, and corresponding with those of Greene, Peele, Lodge, Marlowe, and others who preceded him: there are more allusions to mythology, to classical authors, and to ancient and modern history, than are found in any one piece of Shakespeare's written on an English story: they are such as do not naturally rise out of the subject, but seem to be inserted merely to show the writer's learning. These allusions, and many particular expressions, seem more likely to have been used by the authors already named than by Shakespeare.—He points out many of the allusions, and instances the words proditor and immunity, which are not to be found in any of the poet's undisputed works.—The versification he thinks clearly of a different colour from that of Shakespeare's genuine dramas; while at the same time it resembles that of many of the plays produced before his time. The sense concludes or pauses almost uniformly at the end of every line; and the verse has scarcely ever a redundant syllable. He produces numerous instances from the works of Lodge, Peele, Greene, and others, of similar versification.

A passage in a pamphlet written by Thomas Nashe, an intimate friend of Greene, Peele, Marlowe, &c. shows that the First Part of King Henry VI. had been on the stage before 1592; and his favourable mention of the piece may induce a belief that it was written by a friend of his. 'How would he have joyed brave Talbot, the terror of the French, to think that, after he had lye[n] two hundred years in his tombe, he should triumph again on the stage; and have his bones new embalmed with the teares of ten thousand spectators at least (at several times,) who in the tragedie that represents his person behold him fresh bleeding.'—Pierce Penniless, his Supplication to the Devil, 1602.

That this passage related to the old play of King Henry VI. or, as it is now called, the First Part of King Henry VI. can hardly be doubted. Talbot appears in the First Part, and not in the Second or Third Part, and is expressly spoken of in the play, as well as in Hall's Chronicle, as 'the terror of the French.' Holinshed, who was Shakespeare's guide, omits the passage in Hall, in which Talbot is thus described; and this is an additional proof that this play was not the production of our great poet.

There are other internal proofs of this:—

1. The author does not seem to have known precisely how old Henry VI. was at the time of his father's death. He supposed him to have passed the state of infancy before he lost his father, and even to have remembered some of his sayings. In the Fourth Act, Sc. 4, speaking of the famous Talbot, he says:—

When I was young (as yet I am not old,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword.'

But Shakespeare knew that Henry VI. could not possibly remember any thing of his father:—

'No sooner was I crept out of my cradle,
But I was made a king at nine months old.'

King Henry VI. Part II. Act IV. Sc. 9.

'When I was crown'd I was but nine months old.'

King Henry VI. Part III. Act I. Sc. 1.

The first of these passages is among the additions made by Shakespeare to the old play, according to Mr. Malone's hypothesis. The other passage does occur in the True Tragedie of Richard Duke of York; and therefore it is natural to conclude that neither Shakespeare nor the author of that piece could have written the First Part of King Henry VI.

2. In Act II. Sc. 5. of this play, it is said that the earl of Cambridge raised an army against his sovereign. But Shakespeare, in his play of King Henry V. has represented the matter truly as it was: the earl being in that piece, Act II., condemned at Southampton for conspiring to assassinate Henry.

3. The author of this play knew the true pronunciation of the word Hecate, as it is used by the Roman writers:—

'I speak not to that raffing Heecote.'

But Shakespeare, in Macbeth, always uses Hecate as a disyllable.

The second speech in this play ascertains the author to have been very familiar with Hall's Chronicle:—

'What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech.'

This phrase is introduced upon almost every occasion by Hall when he means to be eloquent. Holinshed, not Hall, was Shakespeare's historian. Here then is an additional minute proof that this play was not Shakespeare's.

This is the sum of Malone's argument, which Steevens has but feebly combated in notes appended to it; and I am disposed to think more out of a spirit of opposition than from any other cause. Malone conjectured that this piece which we now call the First Part of King Henry VI. was, when first performed, called The Play of King Henry VI.; and he afterwards found his conjecture confirmed by an entry in the accounts of Henslowe, the proprietor of the Rose Theatre on the Bank Side. It must have been very popular, having been played no less than thirteen times in one season: the first entry of its performance is dated March 3, 1591. It is worthy of remark that Shakespeare does not appear at any time to have had the smallest connexion with that theatre, or the companies playing there; which affords additional argument in favour of Malone's position, that the play could not be his. 'By whom it was written (says Malone,) it is now, I fear, difficult to ascertain. It was not entered on the Stationers' books, nor printed till the year 1623; when it was reprinted with Shakespeare's undisputed plays by the editors of the first folio, and improperly entitled the Third Part of King Henry VI. In one sense it might be called so; for two plays on the subject of that reign had been printed before. But considering the history of that king, and the period of time which the piece comprehends, it ought to have been called, what in fact it is, The First Part of King Henry VI. At this distance of time it is impossible to ascertain on what principle it was that Hemminge and Condell admitted it into their volume; but I suspect that they gave it a place as a necessary introduction to the two other parts; and because Shakespeare had made some slight alterations, and written a few lines in it.'

Mr. Malone's arguments have made many converts to his opinion; and perhaps Mr. Morgann, in his elegant Essay on the Dramatic Character of Falstaff, led the way, when he pronounced it 'That drum-and-trumpet thing,—written doubtless, or rather exhibited long before Shakespeare was born, though afterwards repaired and furnished up by him with here and there a little sentiment and diction.'

* This applies only to the title in the Register of the Stationers' Company: in the first folio it was called the First Part of King Henry VI.

SCENE—partly in England, and partly in France.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Westminster Abbey. Dead March.
Corpses of King Henry the Fifth discovered, lying in state; attended on by the DUKES OF BEDFORD, GLOSTER, and EXETER; the EARL OF WARWICK,¹ the BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, Heralds, &c.

Bedford.

HUNG be the heavens with black,² yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal³ tresses in the sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars,
That have consented⁴ unto Henry's death!
Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long!
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne'er had a king, until his time.
Virtue he had, deserving to command;
His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams;
His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings;
His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than midday sun fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech:
He ne'er lift up his hand, but conquer'd.

Ess. We mourn in black; Why mourn we not in blood?

Henry is dead, and never shall revive;
Upon a wooden coffin we attend;
And death's dishonourable victory
We with our stately presence glorify,

Like captives bound to a triumphant car.

What? shall we curse the planets of mishap,

That plotted thus our glory's overthrow?

Or shall we think the subtle-witted French

Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,

By magick verses⁵ have contriv'd his end?

Win. He was a king bless'd of the King of kings.

Unto the French the dreadful judgment day

So dreadful will not be, as was his sight.

The battles of the Lord of Hosts he fought:

The church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it? Had not churchmen pray'd,

His thread of life had not so soon decay'd:

None do you like but an effeminate prince,

Whom, like a schoolboy, you may overawe.

Win. Gloster, whate'er we like, thou art protector;

And lookest to command the prince, and realm.

Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe,

More than God, or religious churchmen, may.

Glo. Name not religion, for thou lov'st the flesh;
And ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars, and rest your minds in peace!

Let's to the altar:—Heralds, wait on us:—

Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms;

Since arms avail not, now that Henry's dead.—

Fosterly, await for wretched years,

When at their mothers' moist eyes babes shall suck

Our isle be made a nourish⁶ of salt tears,

And none but women left to wait the dead.—

² Alluding to the ancient practice of hanging the stage with black when a tragedy was to be acted.

³ Crystal is an epithet repeatedly bestowed on comets by our ancient writers.

⁴ Consented here means conspired together to promote the death of Henry by their malignant influence on human events. Our ancestors had, but one word to express consent, and consent, which meant accord and agreement, whether of persons or things.

⁵ There was a notion long prevalent that life might be taken away by merical charms.

⁶ Nurse, was anciently spelt nourryce and norypys and, by Lydgate, even nourish.

Henry the Fifth! thy ghost I invoke;
Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils!
Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make,
Than Julius Cæsar, or bright——

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all!
Bad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guienne, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans,
Paris, Guysors, Poitiers, are all quite lost.³

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's corse?

Speak softly; or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his head, and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? is Rouen yielded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost.

Esc. How were they lost? what treachery was us'd?

Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money.
Among the soldiers this is mutter'd,—

That here you maintain several factions;
And, whilst a field should be despatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals.

One would have ling'ring wars, with little cost;
Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third man thinks, without expense at all,
By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.

Awake, awake, English mobility!
Let not sloth dim your honours, new begot:
Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Esc. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,
These tidings would call forth her flowing tides.⁴

Bed. Me they concern; regent I am of France.—
Give me my steed, coal, I'll fight for France.—
Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Wounds I will lead the French, instead of eyes,
To weep their intermissive miseries.⁴

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mischance,

France is revolted from the English quike;
Except some petty towns of no import:
The Dauphin Charles is crown'd king in Rheims;
The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Reignier, duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The duke of Alencon fieth to his side.

Esc. The Dauphin is crown'd king! all fly to him!

O, whither shall we fly from this reproach?

Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' threats;
Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.

Bed. Gloster, why doubt'st thou of my forward-
ness?

An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is overrun.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords, to add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bewail King Henry's hearse,—
I must inform you of a dismal fight,
Betwixt the stout Lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is't so?

3 Mess. O, no; wherein Lord Talbot was o'er-thrown:

The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.

The tenth of August last, this dreadful lord,

Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three and twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon:
No leisure had he to enrank his men;
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof, sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him;
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he slew:
The French exclaim'd, The devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood amaz'd on him:
His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up,
If Sir John Fastolf had not play'd the coward;
He being in the vaward (plac'd behind,
With purpose to relieve and follow them),
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre;
Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,

Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself,
For living idly here, in pomp and ease,
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foeman is betray'd.

3 Mess. O no, he lives; but is took prisoner,
And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford
Most of the rest slaughter'd, or took, likewise.

Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall pay:
I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne,
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.—
Farewell, my masters; to my task will I;
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast withal:
Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is be-sieg'd;

The English army is grown weak and faint:
The earl of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Esc. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn;

Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it; and here take leave,
To go about my preparation. [Exit.]

Glo. I'll to the Tower, with all the haste I can,
To view the artillery and munition;

And then I will proclaim young Henry king. [Exit.]

Esc. To Eltham will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governor;

And for his safety there I'll best devise. [Exit.]

Win. Each hath his place and function to attend:
I am left out for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office;
The king from Eltham I intend to steal,⁵
And sit at chiefest stern of public weal.

[Exit. Scene closes.]

1 Pope conjectured that this blank had been supplied by the name of Francis Drake, which, though a glaring anachronism, might have been a popular, though not judicious, mode of attracting plaudits in the theatre. Part of the arms of Drake was two blazing stars.

2 Capel proposed to complete this defective verse by the insertion of Rouen among the places lost, as Gloster infers that it had been mentioned with the rest.

3 I. e. England's flowing tides.

4 I. e. their miseries which have only a short intermission.

5 For an account of this Sir John Fastolf, vide Biographia Britannica, by Kippis, vol. v.; in which is his life, written by Mr. Gough.

6 The old copy reads send, the present reading was proposed by Mason, who observes that the king was not at this time in the power of the cardinal, but under the care of the duke of Exeter. The second article of accusation brought against the bishop by the duke of Gloucester is 'that he purposed and disposed him to set hand on the king's person, and to have removed him from Eltham to Wyndesore, to the intent to put him in governance as him list.' Holinshed vol. iii. p. 591.

Char. Mars his true moving,¹ even as in the heavens,
So in the earth, to this day is not known:
Late did he shine upon the English side;
Now we are victors, upon us he smiles.
What towns of any moment, but we have?
At pleasure here we lie, near Orleans;
Otherwhiles, the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly beseege us one hour in a month.
Alen. They want their porridge, and their fat bull-beeves:

Either they must be dieted like mules,
And have their provender tied to their mouths,
Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice.

Reig. Let's raise the siege; Why live we idly here?

Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear:
Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury;
And he may well in fretting spend his gall,
Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound alarm; we will rush on them.
Now for the honour of the forlorn France:—
Him I forgive my death, that killeth me,
When he sees me go back one foot, or fly. [Exeunt.]

Alarums: Excursions: afterwards a Retreat.

Re-enter CHARLES, ALENCON, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I?—
Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would ne'er have fled,
But that they left me 'midst my enemies.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fighteth as one weary of his life.
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.²

Alen. Froissard, a countryman of ours, records,
England all Olivers and Rowlands' bred,
During the time Edward the Third did reign.
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons, and Goliasses
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!
Lean raw-bon'd rascals; who would e'er suppose
They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:

Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down, than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd gimmals⁴ or device,
Their arms are set, like clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do.
By my consent, we'll e'en let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the prince Dauphin, I have news for him.

Char. Bastard⁵ of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

Bast. Methinks, your looks are sad, your cheer⁶ appall'd:

Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?

Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:
A holy maid hither with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,
Ordained is to raise this tedious siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome;⁷
What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.

1 'You are as ignorant in the true movings of my muse as the astronomers are in the true movings of Mars, which to this day they could never attain to.' Ga-briel Harvey's Hunt is up, by Nash, 1596, Preface.
2 I. e. the prey for which they are hungry.

3 These were two of the most famous in the list of Charlemagne's twelve peers; and their exploits are the theme of the old romances. From the equally doughty and unheard of exploits of these champions, arose the saying of Giving a Rowland for an Oliver, for giving a person as good as he brings.

Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words,
For they are certain and infallible.

Char. Go, call her in: [Exit Bastard.] But, first to try her skill,

Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:
Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern:—
By this mean shall we sound what skill she hath.

[Retires.]

Enter LA PUCELLE, Bastard of Orleans, and others.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats?

Puc. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?—

Where is the Dauphin?—come, come from behind;
I know thee well, though never seen before.

Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me:

In private will I talk with thee apart:—

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave a while.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Puc. Dauphin, I am thy birth's shepherd's daughter.

My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.

Heaven, and our Lady gracious, hath it pleas'd

To shine on my contemptible estate:

Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,

And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,

God's mother deign'd to appear to me;

And, in a vision full of majesty,

Will'd me to leave my base vocation,

And free my country from calamity:

Her aid she promis'd, and assur'd success:

In complete glory she reveal'd herself;

And, whereas I was black and swart before,

With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,

That beauty am I bless'd with, which you see.

Ask me what question thou canst possible,

And I will answer unpremeditated:

My courage try by combat, if thou dar'st,

And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.

Resolve on this: Thou shalt be fortunate,

If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms;

Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,—

In single combat thou shalt buckle with me:

And, if thou vanquishest, thy words are true;

Otherwise, I renounce all confidence.

Puc. I am prepar'd: here is my keen-edged sword,

Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side:

The which at Touraine, in Saint Katharine's churchyard,

Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

Char. Then come o' God's name, I fear no woman.

Puc. And, while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.

[They fight.]

Char. Stay, stay thy hands; thou art an Amazon,

And fightest with the sword of Deborah.

Puc. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak.

Char. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must help me:

Impatiently I burn with thy desire;

My heart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd.

Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,

Let me thy servant, and not sovereign, be;

'Tis the French Dauphin sueth thus to thee.

Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love,

For my profession's sacred from above:

When I have chased all thy foes from hence,

Then will I think upon a recompense.

4 By gimmals, gimboles, gimmiers, or gimmoes, any kind of device or machinery producing motion was meant. Baret has 'the gimmo or hinge of a door.'

5 Bastard was not in former times a title of reproach.

6 Cheer in this instance means heart or courage, as in the expression 'be of good cheer.'

7 Warburton says that, 'there were no nine sibyls of Rome, it is a mistake for the nine Sibylline Oracles brought to one of the Tarquins.' But the poet followed the popular books of his day, which say that 'the ten sibyls were women that had the spirit of prophecy (enunciating them) and that they prophesied of Christ'

8 I. e. be convinced of it.

Char. Mean time, look gracious on thy prestrate thrall.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless he shrives this woman to her smock;

Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?

Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know:

These women are shew'd tempters with their tongues.

Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?

Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Puc. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants!

Fight till the last gasp, I will be your guard.

Char. What she says, I'll confirm; we'll fight it out.

Puc. Assign'd am I to be the English scourge.

This night the siege assuredly I'll raise:

Expect Saint Martin's summer,¹ halcyon days,

Since I have entered into these wars.

Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,

Till, by broad spreading, it disperse to naught;²

With Henry's death, the English circle ends;

Dispersed are the glories it included.

Now am I like that proud insulting ship,

Which Cæsar and his fortune bare at once.

Char. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?³

Thou with an eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the mother of great Constantine,

Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters,⁴ were like thee.

Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth,

How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays, and let us raise the siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our honours;

Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd.

Char. Presently we'll try:—Come let's away about it:

No prophet will I trust, if she prove false. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. London. Hill before the Tower.

Enter, at the Gates, the Duke of GLOSTER, with his Serving-men in blue Coats.

Glo. I am come to survey the Tower this day;

Since Henry's death, I fear there is conveyance.⁵

Where be these warders, that they wait not here?

Open the gates; Gloucester it is that calls.

[Serving-men knock.]

1 Ward. [Within.] Who is there that knocks so imperiously?

2 Ward. [Within.] Who'er he be, you may not be let in.

3 Ward. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?

4 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd.

Glo. Who will'd you? or whose will stands, but mine?

There's none protector of the realm, but I.—

Break up⁶ the gates, I'll be your warrantize:

Shall I be scouted thus by dunghill grooms?

[Serving-men knock.]

5 Ward. [Within.] Who is there that knocks so imperiously?

6 Ward. [Within.] Who'er he be, you may not be let in.

7 Ward. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?

8 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd.

Glo. Who will'd you? or whose will stands, but mine?

There's none protector of the realm, but I.—

Break up⁶ the gates, I'll be your warrantize:

Shall I be scouted thus by dunghill grooms?

10 Ward. [Within.] Who'er he be, you may not be let in.

11 Ward. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?

12 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd.

Glo. Who will'd you? or whose will stands, but mine?

There's none protector of the realm, but I.—

Break up⁶ the gates, I'll be your warrantize:

Shall I be scouted thus by dunghill grooms?

[Serving-men knock.]

13 Ward. [Within.] Who is there that knocks so imperiously?

14 Ward. [Within.] Who'er he be, you may not be let in.

15 Ward. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?

16 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd.

Glo. Who will'd you? or whose will stands, but mine?

There's none protector of the realm, but I.—

Break up⁶ the gates, I'll be your warrantize:

Shall I be scouted thus by dunghill grooms?

Servants rush to the Tower Gates. Enter, to the Gates, WOODVILLE, the Lieutenant.

Wood. [Within.] What noise is this? what traitors have we here?

Glo. Lieutenant, is it you, whose voice I hear?

Open the gates; here's Gloucester, that would enter.

Wood. [Within.] Have patience, noble duke: I may not open;

The cardinal of Winchester forbids:

From him I have express commandment,

That thou, nor none of thine, shall be let in.

Glo. Faint-hearted Woodville, prisest him more me?

Arrogant Winchester? that haughty prelate,

Whom Henry, our late sovereign, ne'er could brook?

Thou art no friend to God, or to the king:

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

1 Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector;

Or we'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter WINCHESTER, attended by a Train of Servants in tawny Coats.

Win. How now, ambitious Humphrey? what means this?

Glo. Fie! d'art thou dost thou command me to be shut out?

Win. I do, thou most usurping proditor,⁹

And not protector of the king or realm.

Glo. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator;

Thou, that contriv'dst to murder our dead lord;

Thou, that giv'st whored indulgences to sing!¹⁰

I'll canvas¹¹ thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,

If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Win. Nay, stand thou back, I will not budge a foot;

This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain,

To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Glo. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee back:

Thy scarlet robes, as a child's bearing-cloth

I'll use, to carry thee out of this place.

Win. Do what thou dar'st: I heard thee to thy face.

Glo. What? am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?

Draw, men, for all this privileged place;

Blue-coats to tawny-coats. Priest, beware your beard;

[GLOSTER and his men attack the Bishop.]

I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly:

Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat;

In spite of pope or dignities of church,

Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down.

Win. Gloucester, thou'lt answer this before the pope.

Glo. Winchester goose,¹² I cry—a rope! a rope!

Now beat them hence: Why do you let them stay?

Thee I'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's array.

Out, tawny coats!—out scarlet!—hypocrite!

Here a great Tumult. In the midst of it, Enter the Mayor of London,¹³ and Officers.

May. Fye, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumaciously should break the peace!

Glo. Peace, mayor: thou know'st little of my wrongs:

9 Traitor.

10 The public stews in Southwark were under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Winchester. Upton had seen the office book of the court leet, in which was entered the fees paid, and the customs and regulations of these brothels.

11 To canvas was 'to toss in a sieve; a punishment (says Cotgrave) inflicted on such as commit gross abominations.'

12 A Winchester goose was a particular stage of the disease contracted in the stews, hence Gloucester bestows the epithet on the bishop in derision and scorn.

13 In King Henry VIII. the earl of Surrey, with a similar allusion to Cardinal Wolsey's habit, calls him 'scarlet sin.'

14 It appears from Pennant's London that this mayor was John Coventry, an opulent mercer, from whom the present earl of Coventry is descended.

5 Conveyance anciently signified any kind of suttive knavery, or privy stealing.

6 To break up was the same as to break open.

7 It appears that the attendants upon ecclesiastical courts, and a bishop's servants, were then, as now, distinguished by clothing of a sombre colour.

Here's Beaumont, that regards nor God nor king,
Hath here disdain'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here's Gloster too, a foe to citizens;
One that still motions war, and never peace,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines;
That seeks to overthrow religion,
Because he is protector of the realm;
And would have armour here out of the Tower,
To crown himself king, and suppress the prince.

Glo. I will not answer thee with words, but blows.

[Here they skirmish again.]

May. Nought rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,

But to make open proclamation:—

Come, officer; as loud as e'er thou can'st.

Off. All manner of men, assembled here in arms this day against God's peace and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use, any sword, weapon, or dagger,
henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law:
But we shall meet, and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloster, we'll meet; to thy dear cost, be sure:

Thy heart-blood I will have, for this day's work.

May. I'll call for clubs,¹ if you will not away:
This cardinal is more haughty than the devil.

Glo. Mayor, farewell: thou dost but what thou may'st.

Win. Abominable Gloster! guard thy head;

For I intend to have it, ere long. [Exeunt.]

May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.—

'Good God! that nobles should such stomachs² bear!

I myself fight not once in forty year. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. France. Before Orleans. Enter, on the Walls, the Master Gunner and his Son.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieg'd:

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Son. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them,
Howe'er, unfortunate, I miss'd my aim.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou rul'd by me:

Chief master-gunner am I of this town;
Something I must do, to procure me grace:³
The prince's espials⁴ have inform'd me,
How the English, in the suburbs close intrench'd,
Wont,⁵ through a secret grate of iron bars
In yonder tower, to overpeer the city;
And thence discover how, with most advantage,
They may vex us, with shot, or with assault.
To intercept this inconvenience,
A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd;
And fully even these three days have I watch'd,
If I could see them. Now, boy, do thou watch,
For I can stay no longer.

If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word;
And thou shalt find me at the governor's. [Exit.]

Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care:
I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.

Enter, in an upper Chamber of a Tower, the LORDS
SALISBURY and TALBOT, SIR WILLIAM GLANSDALE, SIR THOMAS GARGRAVE, and others.

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd!
How wert thou handled, being prisoner?

¹ Malone erroneously thinks the mayor cries out for peace-officers armed with clubs or staves. The practice of calling out Clubs! clubs! to call out the London apprentices upon the occasion of any affray in the streets, has been before explained, see As You Like It, Act v. Sc. 2.

² Stomach is pride, a haughty spirit of resentment

³ Favour.

⁴ Spies. Vide note on Hamlet, Act III. Sc. 1.

⁵ The old copy reads went; the emendation is Mr.

Tyrwhitt's

⁷ This man [Talbot] was to the French people a

Or by what means got'tst thou to be releas'd?

Discourse, I pry'thee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The duke of Bedford had a prisoner,
Called—the brave Lord Ponton de Bantrailles;
For him I was exchange'd and ransomed,
But with a baser man of arms by far,
Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me.
Which I, disdaining, scorn'd; and craved death
Rather than I should be so vile esteem'd.⁶

In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.
But, O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffs, and scorns, and contumelious taunts.

In open market-place produc'd they me,
To be a public spectacle to all;
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,⁷
The scare-crow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me;
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground
To hurt at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread,
That they suppos'd, I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant:
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had,
That walk'd about me every minute-while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd;
But we will be reveng'd sufficiently.

Now it is supper-time in Orleans:
Here, through this grate, I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify;

Let us look in, the sight will much delight thee.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale.

Let me have your express opinions,
Where is best place to make our battery next.

Ger. I think, at the north gate, for there stand lords.

Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.
Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,
Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.

[Shot from the Tower. SALISBURY and SIR
THO. GARGRAVE fall.]

Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners.
Ger. O Lord, have mercy on me, woeful man!

Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath cross'd us?

Speak, Salisbury: at least, if thou canst speak;
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?

One of thy eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off!⁷—
Accurs'd tower! accurs'd fatal hand,
That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedy!

In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame;
Henry the Fifth he first train'd to the wars;

Whilst any trumpet did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.—

Yet liv'st thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,

One eye thou hast to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.—

Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands!—

Bear hence his body, I will help to bury it.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?

Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.

very accurate and a daily terror, inasmuch that as his person was fearful and terrible to his adversaries present, so his name and fame was spiteful and dreadful to the common people absent; inasmuch that women in France, to fears their young children, would cry the Talbot cometh. Hall's Chronicle.

⁸ Camden says, in his Remaines, that the French scarce knew the use of great ordnance till the siege of Mans in 1455, when a breach was made in the walls of that town by the English, under the conduct of this earl of Salisbury; and that he was the first English gentleman that was slain by a cannon ball.

Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort;
Thou shalt not die, whiles——
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me;
As who should say, When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.—
Plantagenet, I will; and like thee, Nero,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:
Wretched shall France be only in my name.

[Thunder heard; afterwards an Alarm.
What stir is this? What tumult's in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarm, and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd
head:
The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,—
A holy propheteess, now risen up,—
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

[SALISBURY groans.

Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth groan!
It irks his heart, he cannot be revenged.—
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you:—
Pucelle or puzzel,¹ dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.—
Convey me Salisbury into this tent,
And then we'll try what these dastard Frenchmen dare. [Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.

SCENE V. The same. Before one of the Gates.
Alarm. Skirmishing. TALBOT pursueth the Dauphin, and driveth him in: then enter JOAN LA PUCELLE, driving Englishmen before her. Then enter TALBOT.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?

Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them:
A woman, clad in armour, chaseth them.

Enter LA PUCELLE.

Here, here she comes:—I'll have a bout with
thee;

Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a witch,
And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Puc. Come, come, 'tis only I that must disgrace
thee.

[They fight.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail?
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
And I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come:
I must go victual Orleans forthwith.
O'ertake me, if thou canst; I scorn thy strength.
Go, go, cheer up thy hungry, starved men;
Help Salisbury to make his testament:
This day is ours, as many more shall be.

[PUCELLE enters the Town, with Soldiers.

Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;

I know not where I am, nor what I do:
A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal,²
Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists:
So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives, and houses, driven away.
They call'd us, for our fierceness, English dogs;
Now, like to whelps, we crying run away.

[A short Alarm.

Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight,
Or tear the lions out of England's coat;
Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead:

¹ Puzzel means a dirty wench or a drab, 'from puz-se, i. e. malus fœtor,' says Minshew.

² The superstition of those times taught that he who could draw a witch's blood was free from her power.

³ Alluding to Hannibal's stratagem to escape, by fixing bundles of lighted twigs on the horns of oxen, recorded by Livy, lib. xxij. c. xvj.

⁴ Old copy treacherous. Corrected by Pope.

⁵ Wobes. Thus the second folio, the first omits that word, and the epithet bright prefixed to Astrea in the next line but one. Malone follows the reading of the first folio, and contends that by a licentious pronunciation a syllable was added, thus English, Asteroe.

Sheep run not half so timorous⁶ from the wolf,
Or horse, or oxen, from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.

[Alarm. Another Skirmish.

It will not be:—Retire into your trenches:
You all consented unto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.—
Pucelle is entered into Orleans,
In spite of us, or aught that we could do.
O, would I were to die with Salisbury!
The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

[Alarm. Retreat. Exeunt TALBOT and his Force, &c.

SCENE VI. The same. Enter, on the Walls, PUCELLE, CHARLES, REIGNIER, ALENÇON, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls;
Rescu'd is Orleans from the English wolves:—
Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.

Char. Divinest creature, bright Astrea's daughter,
How shall I honour thee for this success?
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.⁷—
France, triumph in thy glorious propheteess!—
Recover'd is the town of Orleans:
More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.

Reig. Why ring not out the bells throughout the town?

Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires,
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

Alen. All France will be replete with mirth and joy,

When they shall hear how we have play'd the men.

Char. 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won;
For which, I will divide my crown with her:
And all the priests and friars in my realm
Shall, in procession, sing her endless praise.
A statelier pyramid to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's, of Memphis, ever was:⁸
In memory of her, when she is dead,
Her ashes, in an urn more precious
Than the rich-jewel'd coffer of Darius,⁹
Transported shall be at high festivals
Before the kings and queens of France.
No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry,
But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint.
Come in; and let us banquet royally,
After this golden day of victory. [Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. The same. Enter to the Gates, a French Sergeant, and Two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noise, or soldier, you perceive,
Near to the walls, by some apparent sign,
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.¹

1 Sent. Sergeant, you shall. [Exit Sergeant.]

Thus are poor servitors
(When others sleep upon their quiet beds)
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, and Forces, with Scaling Ladders; their Drums beating a dead
March.

Tal. Lord Regent,—and redoubted Burgundy,—
By whose approach, the regions of Artois,
Walloon, and Picardy, are friends to us,—
This happy night the Frenchmen are secure,
Having all day carous'd and banqueted:

⁶ The Adonis hort were nothing but portable earthen pots, with some lettuce or fennel growing in them.

⁷ The old copy reads:—

'Than Rhodope's or Memphis ever was.'

Rhodope, or Rhodops, a celebrated courtesan, who was a slave in the same service with Æsop, at Samos.

⁸ 'In what price the noble poems of Homer were holden by Alexander the Great, inasmuch that every night they were layd under his pillow, and by day were carried in the rich jewel coffer of Darius, lately before vanquished by him.' Puttenham's Arts of English Poets, 1680.

⁹ The same as guard-room.

Embrace we then this opportunity ;
As fitting best to quittance their deceit,
Contriv'd by art, and baleful sorcery.

Bed. Coward of France?—how much he wrongs his fame,

Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches, and the help of hell.

Bur. Traitors have never other company.—

But what's that Pucelle, whom they term so pure ?

Tal. A maid, they say.

Bed. A maid ! and be so martial !

Bur. Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long ;
If underneath the standard of the French,
She carry armour as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits :

God is our fortress ; in whose conquering name,
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot ; we will follow thee.

Tal. Not all together : better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways ;

That, if it chance the one of us do fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed ; I'll to yon corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.—

Now, Salisbury ! for thee, and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appear
How much in duty I am bound to both.

[*The English scale the Walls, crying St. George !
a Talbot ! and all enter by the Town.*]

Sent. [Within.] Arm, arm ! the enemy doth make assault !

The French leap over the Walls in their shirts. Enter, several ways, BASTARD, ALENÇON, REIGNIER, half ready, and half unwary.

Alen. How now, my lords ? what all unready ! so ?

Bast. Unready ! ay, and glad we 'scap'd so well.

Reig. 'Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds,

Hearing alarms at our chamber doors.

Alen. Of all exploits, since first I follow'd arms,
Never heard I of a warlike enterprise
More venturous, or desperate than this.

Bast. I think, this Talbot be a fiend of hell.

Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour
him.

Alen. Here cometh Charles ; I marvel how he saped.

Enter CHARLES and LA PUCELLE.

Bast. Tut ! holy Joan was his defensive guard.

Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame ?
Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal,
Make us partakers of a little gain,

That now our loss might be ten times so much ?

Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend ?

At all times will you have my power alike ?

Sleeping, or waking, must I still prevail,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me ?—
Improvident soldiers ! had your watch been good,
This sudden mischief never could have fall'n.

Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default ;
That, being captain of the watch to-night,
Did look no better to that weighty charge.

Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept,
As that whereof I had the government,
We had not been thus shamefully surpris'd.

Bast. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my lord.

Char. And for myself, most part of all this night,
Within her quarter, and mine own precinct,
I was employ'd in passing to and fro,
About relieving of the sentinels :

Then how, or which way, should they first break in ?

Puc. Question, my lords, no further of the case,

How, or which way : 'tis sure, they found some place

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made,
And now there rests no other shift but this,—
To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms* to endanger them.

Alarum. Enter an English Soldier, crying a Tal bot ! a Talbot ! They fly, leaving their Clothes behind.

Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left,
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword ;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name. [Exit.

SCENE II. Orleans. Within the Town. Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

[Retreat sounded.]

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury ;

And here advance it in the market-place,

The middle centre of this cursed town.—

Now have I paid my vow unto his soul ;

For every drop of blood was drawn from him,

There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-night.

And, that hereafter ages may behold

What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,

Within their chiefest temple I'll erect

A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be interr'd :

Upon the which, that every one may read,

Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans ;

The treacherous manner of his mournful death,

And what a terror he had been to France.

But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,

I muse,* we met not with the Dauphin's grace ;

His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc ;

Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. 'Tis thought, Lord Talbot, when the fight began,

Rous'd on the sudden from their drowsy beds,

They did amongst the troops of armed men,

Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bur. Myself (as far as I could well discern,

For smoke, and dusky vapours of the night)

Am sure I scar'd the Dauphin, and his trull ;

When arm in arm they both came swiftly running,

Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves,

That could not live asunder day or night.

After that things are set in order here,

We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords ! which of this princely train

Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts

So much applauded through the realm of France ?

Tal. Here is the Talbot ; who would speak with him ?

Mess. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne,

With modesty admiring thy renown,

By me entreats, good lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe

To visit her poor castle where she lies ;†

That she may boast she hath beheld the man

Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Bur. Is it even so ? Nay, then, I see our wars

Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport,

When ladies crave to be encounter'd with.—

You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me then ; for, when a world of

men

Could not prevail with all their oratory,

Yet hath a women's kindness overru'd :—

And therefore tell her, I return great thanks ;

And in submission will attend on her.—

Will not your honours bear me company ?

Bed. No, truly ; it is more than manners will :

And I have heard it said,—Unbidden guests

Are often welcomest when they are gone.

1 Unready is undressed.

2 Plans, schemes.

3 Wonder.

4 I.e. where she dwells.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,
I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.
Come hither, captain. [Whisper.]—You perceive my mind.

Capt. I do, my lord; and mean accordingly.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Auvergne. Court of the Castle.
Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge;
And, when you have done so, bring the keys to me.
Port. Madam, I will. [Exit.]

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out right,

I shall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Thomyris by Cyrus' death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account:
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
To give their censure¹ of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and TALBOT.

Miss. Madam,
According as your ladyship desir'd,
By message crav'd, so is Lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the man?

Miss. Madam, it is.

Count. Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?²
I see report is fabulous and false:
I thought I should have seen some Hercules,
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
Alas! this is a child, a silly dwarf:
It cannot be, this weak and writhed³ shrimp
Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you:
But, since your ladyship is not at leisure,
I'll sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What means he now?—Go ask him, whither he goes.

Miss. Stay, my Lord Talbot; for my lady craves to know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,
I go to certify her, Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter, with Keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.
Tal. Prisoner! to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord;
And for that cause I train'd thee to my house.
Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my gallery thy picture hangs;
But now the substance shall endure the like;
And I will chain these legs and arms of thine.
That hast by tyranny, these many years,
Wasted our country, slain our citizens,
And sent our sons and husbands captivate.⁴

Tal. Ha, ha, ha!

Count. Laughest thou, wretch? thy mirth shall turn to moan.

Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond,⁵
To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow,
Whereon to practise your severity.

Count. Why, art not thou the man?

Tal. I am indeed.

Count. Then have I substance too.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself:

² Dryden has transplanted this idea into his Don Sebastian:—

'Nor shall Sebastian's formidable name
Be longer used, to lull the crying babe.'

³ Writhed for wrinkled.

⁴ Thus in Solyman and Persida:—

'If not destroy'd and bound and captivate,
If captive, then forc'd from holy faith.'

⁵ I. e. foolish, silly, weak.

⁶ This is a riddling merchant for the nonce.¹ The term merchant, which was, and even now is, frequently applied to the lowest kind of dealers, seems anciently to have been used on these familiar occasions in contradiction to gentleman; signifying that the person showed by his behaviour he was a low fellow.

For what you see, is but the smallest part
And least proportion of humanity:
I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here,
It is of such a spacious lofty pitch,
Your roof were not sufficient to contain it.

Count. This is a riddling merchant for the nonce;⁶

He will be here, and yet he is not here:

How can these contraries agree?

Tal. That will I show you presently.

He winds a Horn. Drums heard; then a Peal of Ordnance. The Gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded,
That Talbot is but shadow of himself?
These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength,
With which he yoketh your rebellious necks;
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns,
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse:

I find, thou art no less than fame hath bruited,⁷

And more than may be gather'd by thy shape.

Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;

For I am sorry, that with reverence

I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue

The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake

The outward composition of his body.

What you have done, hath not offended me:

No other satisfaction do I crave,

But only (with your patience) that we may

Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have;

For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart: and think me honoured

To feast so great a warrior in my house. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. The Temple Garden. Enter the Earls of SOMERSET, SUFFOLK, and WARWICK; RICHARD PLANTAGENET, VERNON, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords, and gentlemen, what means this silence?

Dare no man answer in a case of truth?

Suff. Within the Temple hall we were too loud:
The garden here is more convenient.

Plan. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the truth;
The garden here is more convenient.

Or, else, was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Suff. 'Faith, I have been a truest in the law;

And never yet could frame my will to it;

And, therefore, frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, these between us.

War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch,

Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,

Between two blades, which bears the better temper,

Between two horses, which doth bear him best,⁸

Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,

I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment:

But in these nice sharp quillots of the law,

Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plan. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance:

The truth appears so naked on my side,

That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,

So clear, so shining, and so evident,

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-ty'd, and so loath to speak,

In dumb significants¹¹ proclaim your thoughts:

tion to gentleman; signifying that the person showed by his behaviour he was a low fellow.

⁷ Bruited is reported, loudly announced.

⁸ We should read a lawyer. This lawyer was probably Roger Neville, who was afterwards hanged. See W. Wycroft, p. 475.

⁹ Johnson observes that 'there is apparently a want of opposition between the two questions here, but there is no reason to suspect that the text is corrupt.

¹⁰ I. e. regulate his motions most adroitly. We still say that a horse carries himself well.

¹¹ Dumb significants, which Malone would have changed to significance, is nothing more than signs or tokens.

Let him, that is a true-born gentleman,
And stande upon the honour of his birth,
If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no coward, nor no flatterer,
But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.

War. I love no colours;¹ and, without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery,
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.

Suff. I pluck this red rose, with young Somerset;
And say withal, I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen: and pluck no more,

Till you conclude—that he, upon whose side
The lowest roses are clogg'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good master Vernon, it is well objected;²
If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I. [case,

Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the
I pluck this pale, and maiden blossom here,
Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off;
Lest, bleeding, you do paint the white rose red,
And fall on my side so against your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt,
And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: Who else?

Law. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you held, was wrong in you;
[To SOMERSET.

In sign whereof, I pluck a white rose too.

Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here, in my scabbard; meditating that,
Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red.

Plan. Mean time, your cheeks do counterfeit our roses;

For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet,
'Tis not for fear; but anger,—that thy cheeks
Blush for pure shame, to counterfeit our roses;³
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;

Whites thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding
roses,

That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee and thy faction,⁴ peevish boy.

Suff. Turn not thy scorn this way, Plantagenet.

Plan. Proud Poole, I will; and scorn both him and thee.

Suff. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole!
We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.

² Well objected is properly proposed, properly thrown in our way.

³ It is not for fear that my cheeks look pale, but for anger: anger produced by this circumstance—namely, that thy cheeks blush, &c.

⁵ The poet mistakes. Plantagenet's paternal grandfather was Edmund of Langley, duke of York. His maternal grandfather was Roger Mortimer, earl of March, who was the son of Philippa, the daughter of Lionel, duke of Clarence. The duke therefore was his maternal great great grandfather.

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him,
Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel, duke of Clarence?⁷
Third son to the third Edward, king of England;

Spring crestless yeomen⁸ from so deep a root?

Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,⁹

Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words

On and plot of ground in Christendom:

Was not thy father, Richard, earl of Cambridge,

For treason executed in our late king's day?

And, by his treason, stand'st not thou attainted,

Corrupted, and exempt¹⁰ from ancient gentry?

His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;

And, till thou be restor'd, thou art a yeoman.

Plan. My father was attached, not attainted;

Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;

And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,

Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.

For your partaker¹¹ Poole, and you yourself,

I'll note you in my book of memory,¹²

To scourge you for this apprehension:¹³

Look to it well; and say you are well warn'd.

Som. Ay, thou shalt find us ready for these still:

And know us, by these colours, for thy foes;

For these my friends, in spite of thee, shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,

As cognizance¹⁴ of my blood-drinking hate,

Will I for ever, and my faction, wear;

Until it wither with me to my grave,

Or flourish to the height of my degree.

Suff. Go forward, and be chok'd with thy ambition!

And so farewell, until I meet thee next. [Exit.

Som. Have with thee, Poole.—Farewell, ambitious

Richard. [Exit.

Plan. How I am brav'd, and must perforce endure it! [house,

War. This blot, that they object against your

Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament.

Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster:

And, if thou be not then created York,

I will not live to be accounted Warwick.

Mean time, in signal of my love to thee,

Against proud Somerset, and William Poole,

Will I upon thy party wear this rose:

And here I prophesy,—This brawl to-day,

Grown to this faction, in the Temple garden,

Shall send, between the red rose and the white,

A thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plan. Good master Vernon, I am bound to you,

That you on my behalf will pluck a flower.

Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same

Law. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, let us four to dinner: I dare say,

This quarrel will drink blood another day. [Exeunt.

It is true, blows may have been prohibited by the regulations of the society: the author perhaps did not much consider the matter, but represents it as suited his purpose.

DICTIONNAIRE & PONTIFICATION.

First Part. Ains Paris, 1714. 4. 1. 1. 1.

Even like a man new haled from the rack,
So fare my limbs with long imprisonment :
And these gray locks, the pursuivants of death,¹
Nestor-like aged, in an age of care,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.
These eyes,—like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,—

Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent :²
Weak shoulders, overborne with burd'ning grief,
And pitiless³ arms, like to a wither'd vine
That droops his sapless branches to the ground :—
Yet are these feet—whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,—
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As witting I no other comfort have.—

But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come ?
I keep. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come :
We sent unto the Temple, to his chamber ;
And answer was return'd that he will come.

Mor. Enough ; my soul shall then be satisfied.—
Poor gentleman ! his wrong doth equal mine.
Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign
(Before whose glory I was great in arms,)
This loathsome sequestration have I had ;
And even since then hath Richard been obscur'd,
Deprived of honour and inheritance :
But now, the arbitrator of despairs,
Just death, kind umpire⁴ of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence ;
I would, his troubles likewise were expir'd,
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET.

I keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend ? Is he come ?

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your nephew, late-despis'd⁵ Richard, comes.

Mor. Direct mine arms, I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp :
O, tell me, when my lips do touch his cheeks,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss.—
And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock,

Why didst thou say—of late thou wert despis'd ?

Plan. First, lean thine aged back against mine arm ;

And, in that ease, I'll tell thee my disease.⁶

This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me :
Among which terms he used his lavish tongue,
And did upbraid me with my father's death ;
Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him ;
Therefore, good uncle,—for my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And for alliance' sake,—declare the cause
My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head.

Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me,
And hath detain'd me, all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
Was cursed instrument of his decease.

Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was ;
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess.

Mor. I will ; if that my fading breath permit,

Edmund Mortimer, who was trusted and employed by Henry V. throughout his reign, died of the plague in his own castle at Trim, in Ireland, in 1424-5 ; being then only thirty-two years old.

And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, grandfather to this king,
Depos'd his nephew⁸ Richard ; Edward's son,
The first-begotten, and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent :
During whose reign, the Percies of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne ;
The reason mov'd these warlike lords to this,
Was—for that (young King Richard thus remov'd, Leaving no heir begotten of his body)
I was the next by birth and parentage ;
For by my mother I deriv'd am
From Lionel duke of Clarence, the third son
To King Edward the Third, whereas he,
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
But mark ; as, in this haughty⁹ great attempt,
They labour'd to plant the rightful heir,
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.
Long after this, when Henry the Fifth,— Succeeding his father Bolingbroke,—did reign,
Thy father, earl of Cambridge,—then deriv'd
From famous Edmund Langley, duke of York,— Marrying my sister, that thy mother was,
Again, in pity of my hard distress,
Levied an army ; weening¹⁰ to redeem,
And have install'd me in the dukedom :
But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.

Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True ; and thou seest, that I no issue have ;
And that my fainting words do warrant death :
Thou art my heir ; the rest, I wish thee gather :¹¹
But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me :
But yet, methinks, my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.

Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic ;
Strong-fixed is the house of Lancaster,
And, like a mountain, not to be remov'd.¹²
But now thy uncle is removing hence ;
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O, uncle, 'would, some part of my young years

Might but redeem the passage of your age !¹³

Mor. Thou dost then wrong me ; as the slaught' rer doth,

Which giveth many wounds, when one will kill.
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good ;
Only, give order for my funeral ;
And so farewell : and fair be all thy hopes !
And prosperous be thy life, in peace and war !

[Diss.

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soul !
In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage,
And like a hermit overpass'd thy days.—

Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast ;
And what I do imagine, let that rest.—
Keepers, convey him hence ; and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life.—

[Exeunt Keepers, bearing out MORTIMER.

Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer, that town for France, on the information of this very earl of March.

10 I. e. I acknowledge thee to be my heir ; the consequences which may be collected from thence I recommend it thee to draw.

11 Thus Milton, Paradise Lost, book iv. :—
'Like Teneriffe or Atlas unremov'd.'

12 The same thought occurs in the celebrated dialogue between Horace and Lydia. There is some resemblance to it in the following lines, supposed to be addressed by a married lady, who died very young, to her husband. Malone thinks that the inscription is in the church of Trent :—

'Immatura perii ; sed tu diuturnum annos
Vive meos, conjux optime, vive tuos.'

13 I. e. oppressed by those whose right to the crown was not so good as his own.

And, for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,—
I doubt not, but with honour to redress:
And therefore haste I to the parliament;
Either to be restored to my blood,
Or make my ill¹ the advantage of my good.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. The same. The Parliament House.²
Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, EXETER, GLOSTER, WARWICK, SOMERSET, and SUFFOLK;
the Bishop of Winchester, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, and others. GLOSTER offers to put up a Bill:³ Winchester snatches it and tears it.

Win. Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets studiously devis'd,
Humphrey of Gloster? if thou canst accuse,
Or ought intend't to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention suddenly;
As I with sudden and extemporal speech
Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glo. Presumptuous priest! this place commands
my patience,

Or thou should'st find thou hast dishonour'd me.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen:
No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissenuous pranks,
As very infants prattle of thy pride.
Thou art a most pernicious usurer;
Froward by nature, enemy to peace;
Lascivious, wanton, more than well becomes
A man of thy profession and degree;
And for thy treachery, What's more manifest?
In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life,
As well at London Bridge, as at the Tower?
Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloster, I do defy thee.—Lords, vouchsafe
To give me hearing what I shall reply.

If I were covetous, ambitious, or perverse,
As he will have me, How am I so poor?
Or how haps it, I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?
And for dissension, Who preferreth peace
More than I do,—except I be provok'd?
No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
It is not that, that hath incens'd the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one, but he, should be about the king;
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar those accusations forth.
But he shall know, I am as good—

Glo. As good?
Thou bastard of my grandfather!⁴

Win. Ay, lordly sir; For what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in another's throne?

Glo. Am I not the protector, saucy priest?
Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?

Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloster!
Glo. Thou art reverent
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.

1 My ill is my ill usage. This sentiment resembles another of Falstaff, in the Second Part of King Henry IV.:—'I will turn diseases to commodity.'

2 This parliament was held in 1436 at Leicester, though here represented to have been held in London. King Henry was now in the fifth year of his age. In the first parliament, which was held at London shortly after his father's death, his mother Queen Katharine brought the young king from Windsor to the metropolis, and sat on the throne with the infant in her lap.

3 i. e. articles of accusation.

4 The bishop of Winchester was an illegitimate son

Win. This Rome shall remedy.

War. Hoam⁵ thither them

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

War. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.

Som. Methinks, my lord should be religious,
And know the office that belongs to such.

War. Methinks, his lordship should be humbler;
It fitteth not a prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near.

War. State holy, or unhallow'd, what of that?
Is not his grace protector to the king?

Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue;
Lest it be said, Speak, sirrah, when you should;

Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?

Else would I have a fling at Winchester. [Aside.]

K. Hen. Uncles of Gloster, and of Winchester,

The special watchmen of our English weal;

I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,

To join your hearts in love and amity.

O, what a scandal is it to our crown,

That two such noble peers as ye, should jar!

Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,

Civil dissension is a viperous worm,

That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.—

[A noise within; Down with the tawny coats!
What tumult's this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the bishop's men.

[A noise again; Stones! Stones!

Enter the Mayor of London, attended.

May. O, my good lords,—and virtuous Henry,— Pity the city of London, pity us!

The bishop and the duke of Gloster's men,

Forbidden late to carry any weapon,

Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble-stones;

And, banding themselves in contrary parts,

Do pelt so fast at one another's pate,

That many have their giddy brains knock'd out:

Our windows are broke down in every street,

And we, for fear, compell'd to shut our shops.

Enter, skirmishing, the Retainers of GLOSTER and WINCHESTER, with bloody pates.

K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself,

To hold your slaughter'd hands, and keep the peace.
Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.

1 Serv. Nay, if we be Forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.

2 Serv. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.

[Skirmish again.]
Glo. You of my household, leave this peevish broil,

And set this unaccustom'd⁶ fight aside.

3 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man

Just and upright; and, for your royal birth,

Inferior to none, but his majesty:

And ere that we will suffer such a prince,

So kind a father of the commonweal,

To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate,

We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,

And have our bodies slaughter'd by thy foes.

1 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails

Shall pitch a field, when we are dead.

[Skirmish again.]

Glo. Stay, stay, I say!

And, if you love me, as you say you do,

Let me persuade you to forbear a while.

K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul!

of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, by Katharine Swynford, whom the duke afterwards married.

5 The jingle between room and Rome is common to other writers.

6 Johnson explains unaccustomed by unusually, indecent; and in a note on Romeo and Juliet he says that he thinks he has observed it used in old books for scandalous, powerful, efficacious. But he could find no instances of either of these strange uses of the word when he compiled his dictionary.

7 i. e. a bookish person, a pedant, applied in contempt to a scholar. Inkhornisms and inkhorn-terms were common expressions.

Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
My sighs and tears, and will not once relent?
Who should be pitiful, if you be not?
Or who should study to prefer a peace,
If holy churchmen take delight in broils?
War. My lord protector, yield;—yield, Winchester;

Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.
Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stoop;
Or, I would see his heart out, ere the priest
Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the duke
Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,
As by his smoothed brow it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern, and tragical?

Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.
K. Hen. Fye, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you preach,

That malice was a great and grievous sin:
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But prove a chief offender in the same?

War. Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly gird.¹

For shame, my lord of Winchester! relent;
What shall a child instruct you what to do?

Win. Well, duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee;
Love for thy love, and hand for hand I give.

Glo. Ay; but, I fear me, with a hollow heart.—
See here, my friends, and loving countrymen;
This token serveth for a flag of truce,
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers:
So help me God, as I dissemble not!

Win. So help me God, as I intend it not!
[Aside.]

K. Hen. O, loving uncle, kind duke of Gloster,
How joyful am I made by this contract!—
Away, my masters! trouble us no more;
But join in friendship, as your lords have done.

1 Serv. Content; I'll to the surgeon's.
2 Serv. And so will I.
3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords. [Exeunt Servants, Mayor, &c.]

War. Accept this scroll, most gracious sovereign;
Which, in the right of Richard Plantagenet,
We do exhibit to your majesty.

Glo. Well urg'd, my lord of Warwick;—for, sweet prince,

And if your grace mark every circumstance,
You have great reason to do Richard right:
Especially, for those occasions
At Eltham-place I told your majesty.

K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of force:

Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is,
That Richard be restored to his blood.

War. Let Richard be restored to his blood;
So shall his father's wrongs be recompens'd.

Win. As will the rest, so willoth Winchester.

K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that alone,
But all the whole inheritance I give,
That doth belong unto the house of York,
From whence you spring by lineal descent.

Plan. Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And humble service, till the point of death.

K. Hen. Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;

And, in requerdon² of that duty done,
I girt thee with the valiant sword of York:
Bee, Richard, like a true Plantagenet;
And rise created princely duke of York.

1 A kindly gird is a kind or gentle reproof. A gird, properly, is a cutting reply, a sarcasm, or taunting speech.

2 Requerdon is recompense, requard. It is perhaps a corruption of regardant, Latin of the middle ages.

3 Ignes suppellex inest doloso.—Har.

4 I. e. so will the malignity of this discord propagate itself, and advance

Plan. And so thrive Richard, as thy foes may fall!
And as my duty springs, so perish they
That grudge one thought against your majesty!

All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty duke of York!

Som. Perish, base prince, ignoble duke of York!
[Aside.]

Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty,
To cross the seas, and to be crown'd in France:
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends;
As it disanimates his enemies.

K. Hen. When Gloster says the word, King Henry goes;

For friendly counsel cuts off many foes.
Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.

[Exeunt all but EXETER.]

Ex. Ay, we may march in England, or in France,
Not seeing what is likely to ensue;
This late dissension, grown betwixt the peers,
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,³
And will at last break out into a flame:
As fester'd members rot by degrees,
Till bones, and flesh, and sinews, fall away.
So will this base and envious discord breed.⁴
And now I fear that fatal prophecy,
Which in the time of Henry, nam'd the fifth,
Was in the mouth of every sucking babe,—
That Henry, born at Monmouth, should win all;
And Henry, born at Windsor, should lose all:
Which is so plain, that Exeter doth wish
His days may finish ere that hapless time. *[Exit.]*⁵

SCENE II. France. Before Rouen. Enter LA
PUCELLE disguised, and Soldiers dressed like Countrymen, with Sacks upon their backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen,
Through which our policy must make a breach:
Take heed, be wary how you place your words;
Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men,
That come to gather money for their corn.
If we have entrance (as, I hope, we shall),
And that we find the stithful watch but weak,
I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

1 Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city,
And we be lords and rulers over Rouen;
Therefore we'll knock. [Knocks.]

Guard. [Within.] Qui est la?

Puc. Paisans, peusurs gens de France:
Poor market-folks, that come to sell their corn.

Guard. Enter, go in; the market-bell is rung.

[Opens the Gate.]

Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground. [PUCELLE, &c. enter the City.]

Enter CHARLES, Bastard of Orleans, ALENGON and Forces.

Char. Saint Dennis bless this happy stratagem!
And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen.

Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her practisants;⁶
Now she is there, how will she specify
Where is the best and safest passage in?

Alen. By thrashing out a torch from yonder
tower;

Which, once discern'd, shows, that her meaning is,—
No way to that,⁷ for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter LA PUCELLE on a Battlement; holding out a Torch burning.

Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding torch,
That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen:
But burning fatal to the Talbotites.

Bast. See, noble Charles! the beacon of our friend,
The burning torch in yonder turret stands.

5 The duke of Exeter died shortly after the meeting of this parliament, and the earl of Warwick was appointed governor or tutor to the king in his room.

6 Rouen was anciently written and pronounced Raen.

7 Practice, in the language of the time, was treachery or insidious stratagem. Practisants are therefore con- federates in treachery.

8 I. e. no way like or compared to that.

Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,
A prophet to the fall of all our foes!

Alen. Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends;
Enter, and cry—The Dauphin!—presently,
And then do execution on the watch. [They enter.]

Alarums. Enter TALBOT, and certain English.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,
If Talbot but survive thy treachery.—
Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,
Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escaped the pride¹ of France.
[Exeunt to the Town.]

Alarums: Escursions. Enter from the Town, BED-
FORD, brought in sick in a Chair, with TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and the English Forces. Then, enter on the Walls, LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, Bastard, ALENGON, and others.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants! want ye corn for bread?

I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast,
Before he'll buy again at such a rate:
²'Twas full of darnel!³ Do you like the taste?

Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend, and shameless courtesan!

I trust, ere long, to choke thee with thine own,
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Char. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time.

Bed. O, let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason!

Puc. What will you do, good gray-beard? break
a lance,

And run a tilt at death within a chair?

Tal. Foul fiend of France, and hag of all despite,
Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours!

Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,

And twit with cowardice a man half dead?

Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,

Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Puc. Are you so hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy peace;

If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow.—

[TALBOT, and the rest, consult together.]

God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker?

Tal. Dare ye come forth and meet us in the field?

Puc. Belike, your lordship takes us then for fools,

To try if that our own be ours, or no.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate,

But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest;

Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?

Alen. Signior, no.

Tal. Signior, hang!—base muleteers of France!
Like peasant footboys do they keep the walls;
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Puc. Captains, away: let's get us from the walls;
For Talbot means no goodness, by his looks.—
God be wi' you, my lord! we came, sir, but to tell you
That we are here.

[Exeunt LA PUCELLE, &c. from the Walls.]

Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long,

Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame!—

Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,

(Prick'd on by public wrongs, sustain'd in France,)

Either to get the town again, or die:

And I,—as sure as English Henry lives,

And as his father here was conqueror;

As sure as in this late-betrayed town

Great Coward-Lion's heart was buried;—

So sure I swear, to get the town, or die.

Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy vows.

Tal. But, ere we go, regard this dying prince,
The valiant duke of Bedford:—Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sickness, and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me.

Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen,

And will be partner of your weal, or woe.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade
you.

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read,
That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick,⁴
Came to the field, and vanquish'd his foes;⁵
Methinks, I should revive the soldiers' hearts,
Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!—
Then be it so:—Heavens keep old Bedford safe!—
And now no more ado, brave Burgundy,
But gather we our forces out of hand,
And set upon our boasting enemy.

[Exeunt BURGUNDY, TALBOT, and Forces, leaving BEDFORD, and others.]

Alarums: Escursions. Enter SIR JOHN FASTOLFE and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste?

Fast. Whither away? to save myself by flight;
We are like to have the overthrow again.

Cap. What! will you fly, and leave Lord Talbot?

Fast. Ay,

All the Talbots in the world to save my life. [Exit.]

Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee.

[Exit.]
Retreat: Escursions. Enter, from the Town, LA PUCELLE, ALENGON, CHARLES, &c. and escort, singing.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please;
For I have seen our enemies' overthrow.

What is the trust or strength of foolish man?

They, that of late were daring with their scoffs,

Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.

[Dies, and is carried off in his Chair.]

Alarums: Enter TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and others.

Tal. Lost, and recover'd in a day again!

This is a double honour, Burgundy:

Yet, heavens have glory for this victory!

Bur. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy

Enshrines thee in his heart; and there erects

Thy noble deeds, as valour's monument.

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle
now?

I think, her old familiar is asleep:

Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks?⁶

What, all a-mort? Rouen hangs her head for grief,
That such a valiant company are fled.

Now will we take some order⁷ in the town,

Placing therein some expert officers;

And then depart to Paris, to the king;

For there young Harry, with his nobles, lies.

Bur. What wills Lord Talbot, pleaseth Burgundy.

Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget

The noble duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,

But see his exequies fulfill'd in Rouen;

A braver soldier never couched lance,

³ This is from Harding's Chronicle, who gives this account of Uther Pendragon:

⁴ For which the king ordained a horse-litter

To bear him so then unto Verolame,

Where Occa lay and Oyssa also in fear,

That Saynt Albons, now hight of noble fame,

Bet downe the wallies, but to him forth thei came

Wher in battayl Occa and Oyssa were slayne,

The felde he had, and thereof was ful fayne.

⁵ The Duke of Bedford died at Rouen in September

1435; but not in any action before that town.

⁶ Scoffs

⁷ i. e. what quite cast down, or dispriced

Make some necessary dispositions.

afterwards says, in Act. iv.:

"And from the pride of Gallia rescued thee."

² Darnel (says Gerard, in his Herbal) hurlteth the eyes, and maketh them dim, if it happen either in corns for breade, or drinke.' Hence the old proverb—Lolio viciatire, applied to such as were dim-sighted. Thus also Ovid. Fast. l. 691:—

"Et careant loliis oculos viciantibus agri."

La Pucelle means to intimate that the corn she carried with her had produced the same effect on the guards of Rouen; otherwise they would have seen through her disguise, and defeated her stratagem.

A gentler heart did never sway in court :
But kings and mightiest potentates must die ;
For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. The Plains near the City.
Enter CHARLES, the Bastard, ALENÇON, LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered ;
Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,
For things that are not to be remedied.
Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a peacock sweep along his tail :
We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train,
If Dauphin, and the rest, will be but rul'd.

Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy cunning had no diffidence ;
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Rast. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statue in some holy place,
And have thee reverenc'd like a blessed saint ;
Employ thee then, sweet virgin, for our good.

Puc. Then thus it must be ; this doth Joan devise :
By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words,
We will entice the duke of Burgundy
To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.

Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that,
France were no place for Henry's warriors ;
Nor should that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirp'd¹ from our provinces.

Alen. For ever should they be expul's² from France,
And not have title to an earldom here.

Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will work,
To bring this matter to the wished end. [Drums heard.]

Hark ! by the sound of drum, you may perceive
Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over at a distance, TALBOT and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot with his colours spread ;
And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the DUKE of BURGUNDY and Forces.

Now, in the rearward, comes the duke, and his ;
Fortune, in favour, makes him lag behind.
Summon a parley, we will talk with him.

[A Parley sounded.]

Char. A parley with the duke of Burgundy.

Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy ?

Puc. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman.

Bur. What say'st thou, Charles ? for I am marching hence.

Char. Speak, Pucelle ; and enchant him with thy words.

Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France !
Stay, let thy bumble handmaid speak to thee.

Bur. Speak on ; but be not over-tedious.

Puc. Look on thy country, look on fertile France,
And see the cities and the towns defac'd
By wasting ruin of the cruel foe !

As looks the mother on her lowly babe,
When death doth close his tender dying eyes,
See, see, the pining malady of France ;
Behold the wounds, the moest unnatural wounds,
Which thou thyself hast given her woeful breast !

O, turn thy edged sword another way ;
Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help !
One drop of blood, drawn from thy country's bosom,

² Expul's is expell'd.

⁴ Haughty does not mean disdainful, or violent, as Johnson supposed ; but elevated, high-spirited.

⁵ The inconstancy of the French was always the subject of satire. 'I have read (says Johnson) a dissertation

Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore ;
Return thee, therefore, with a flood of tears,
And wash away thy country's stained spots !

Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words,
Or nature makes me suddenly relent.

Puc. Besides, all French and France exclaims on thee,

Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny.

Who join'st thou with, but with a lordly nation,
That will not trust thee, but for profit's sake ?

When Talbot hath set footing once in France,
And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,

Who then but English Henry will be lord,

And thou be thrust out, like a fugitive ?

Call we to mind,—and mark but this, for proof ;—

Was not the duke of Orleans thy foe ?

And was he not in England prisoner ?

But, when they heard he was thine enemy,

They set him free,⁶ without his ransom paid

In spite of Burgundy, and all his friends.

See then ! thou fightest against thy countrymen,

And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men.

Come, come, return ; return, thou wand'ring lord,

Charles, and the rest, will take thee in their arms.

Bur. I am vanquish'd : these haughty words of hers

Have batter'd me like roaring cannon shot,

And made me almost yield upon my knees.—

Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen !

And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace :

My forces and my power of men are yours ;

So, farewell, Talbot ; I'll no longer trust thee.

Puc. Done like a Frenchman, turn, and turn again !⁷

Char. Welcome, brave duke ! thy friendship makes us fresh.

Bur. And doth beget new courage in our breasts.

Alen. Pucelle hath bravely played her part in this,

And doth deserve a coronet of gold.

Char. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers ;

And seek how we may prejudice the foe. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Paris. A Room in the Palace. Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and other Lords, VERNON, BASSET, &c. To them TALBOT, and some of his Officers.

Tal. My gracious prince,—and honourable peers,—

Hearing of your arrival in this realm,

I have a while given truce unto my wars,

To do my duty to my sovereign :

In sign whereof, this arm,—that hath reclaim'd

To your obedience fifty fortresses,

Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength,

Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem,—

Lets fall his sword before your highness' feet ;

And, with submissive loyalty of heart,

Ascribes the glory of his conquest got,

First to my God, and next unto your grace.

K. Hen. Is this the Lord Talbot, uncle Gloucester,⁸

That hath so long been resident in France ?

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain, and victorious

lord !

When I was young (as yet I am not old),

I do remember how my father said,⁹

A stouter champion never handled sword.

Long since we were resolv'd¹⁰ of your truth,

Your faithful service, and your toil in war ;

Yet never have you tasted our reward,

Or been requerd¹¹ with so much as thanks,

Because till now we never saw your face :

Therefore, stand up ; and, for these good deserts,

Let us written to prove that the index of the wind upon our steeples was made in form of a cock to ridicule the French for their frequent changes.¹²

⁶ Hamner supplied the apparent deficiency in this line,

by reading :—

'Is this the fam'd Lord Talbot,' &c.

⁷ Malone remarks that 'Henry was but nine months old when his father died, and never saw him.' The poet did not perhaps deem historical accuracy necessary.

⁸ Convinced.

⁹ Rewarded

We here create you earl of Shrewsbury;
And in our coronation take your place.

[Exeunt KING HENRY, GLOSTER, TALBOT, and Nobles.]

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea,
Disgracing of these colours¹ that I wear
In honour of my noble lord of York.—
Darest thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?

Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue
Against my lord the duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.

Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.

Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that.

[Strikes him.]

Bas. Villain, thou knowest the law of arms is such,

That whoso draws a sword, 'tis present death;²
Or else this blow should broach thy dearest blood.

But I'll unto his majesty, and crave

I may have liberty to vengeance this wrong;

When thou shalt see, I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you;

And, after, meet you sooner than you would.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. A Room of State. Enter
KING HENRY, GLOSTER, EXETER, YORK, SUR-
FOLK, SOMERSET, WINCHESTER, WARWICK,
TALBOT, the Governor of Paris, and others.

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.

Win. God save King Henry, of that name the sixth!

Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,
[Governor kneels.]

That you elect no other king but him:

Esteem none friends, but such as are his friends;

And none your foes, but such as shall pretend³

Malicious practices against his state:

This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

[Exeunt Gov. and his Train.]

Enter SIR JOHN FASTOLFE.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,

To haste unto your coronation,

A letter was deliver'd to my hands,

Writ to your grace from the duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy, and thee!

I vow'd base knight, when I did meet thee next,

To tear the garter from thy craven⁴ leg,

[Plucking it off.]

(Which I have done,) because unworthily

Thou wast installed in that high degree.—

Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:

This dastard, at the battle of Patay,⁵

When but in all I was six thousand strong,

And that the French were almost ten to one,—

Before we met, or that a stroke was given,

Like to a trusty squire, did run away;

In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;

Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,

Where there surpris'd and taken prisoners.

Then judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;

² By the ancient law before the conquest, fighting in the king's palace, or before the king's judges, was punished with death. And still by the Stat. 35 Hen. VIII. c. xii. maliciously striking in the king's palace, whereby blood is drawn, is punishable by perpetual imprisonment and fine, at the king's pleasure, and also with loss of the offender's right hand. Stowe gives a circumstantial account of Sir Edmund Knevet being found guilty of this offence, with the ceremonials for carrying the sentence into execution. He petitioned the king to take his left hand instead of his right; and the king was pleased to pardon him altogether.—Annals, edit. 1605, p. 978.

³ To pretend is to intend, to design.

⁴ Warburton would read 'thy craven leg.' Craven is mean, dastardly.

Or whether that such cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yea, or no.

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,
And ill becoming any common man;

Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.

Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,

Knights of the garter were of noble birth:

Valiant, and virtuous, full of haughtiness⁶ courage,

Such as were grown to credit by the wars;

Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,

But always resolute in most extremes.⁷

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,

Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,

Profaning this most honourable order;

And should, (if I were worthy to be judge,)

Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain

That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hear'st thy doom:

Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight;

Henceforth we banish thee, on pain of death.—

[Exit FASTOLFE.]

And now, my lord protector, view the letter

Sent from our uncle duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style? [Viewing the superscription.]

No more but, plain and bluntly,—To the king?

Hath he forgot, he is his sovereign?

Or doth this churlish superscription

Pretend⁸ some alteration in good will?

What's here?—I have upon especial cause,—

[Reads.]

Mov'd with compassion of my country's woe,

Together with the pitiful complaints

Of such as your oppression feeds upon,—

Forsoaken your pernicious faction,

And join'd with Charles, the rightful king of France.

O monstrous treachery! Can this be so;

That in alliance, amity, and oaths,

There should be found such false dissembling guile?

K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?

Glo. He doth, my lord; and is become your foe.

K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain?

Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.

K. Hen. Why then, Lord Talbot there shall talk

with him,

And give him chastisement for this abuse:—

My lord, how say you? are you not content?

Tal. Content, my liege? Yes; but that I am prevented,⁹

I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.

K. Hen. Then, gather strength, and march unto him straight:

Let him perceive how ill we brook his treason;

And what offence it is, to lout his friends.

Tal. I go, my lord; in heart desiring still,

You may behold confusion of your foes. [Exit.]

Enter VERNON and BEAUM.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign!

Bas. And me, my lord, grant me the combat too!

York. This is my servant; hear him, noble prince!

Som. And this is mine; Sweet Henry, favour him!

K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them leave to speak.—

Say, gentlemen, What makes you thus enclain?

And wherefore crave you combat? or with whom?

⁵ The old copy has Poitiers instead of Patay. The battle of Poitiers was fought in 1357, the 81st of King Edward III. and the scene now lies in the 7th of King Henry VI. viz. 1428. The action happened (according to Holinshed) 'neere unto a village in Beauce, called Patay'.—From this battle departed, without any stroke stricken, Sir John Fastolfe, the same year by his valiantness elected into the order of the garter. But for doubt of misdealing at this hunt, the duke of Bedford took from him the image of St. George and his garter, &c.

⁶ Vide note 8 on p. 13; and note 4 on p. 17.

⁷ I. e. in greatest extremities. More and most were used by our ancestors for greater and greatest.

⁸ See note 8.

⁹ Prevented is anticipated.

Ver. With him, my lord, for he hath done me wrong.

Bas. And I with him; for he hath done me wrong.
K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?

First let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bas. Crossing the sea, from England into France,
This fellow here, with obvious, carving tongue,
Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
Saying—the sanguine colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks,
When stubbornly he did repugn' the truth,
About a certain question in the law,
Argu'd betwixt the duke of York and him;
With other vile and ignominious terms:
In confutation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my lord's worthiness,
I crave the benefit of law of arms.

Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord;
For though he seem, with forged quaint conceit,
To set a gloss upon his bold intent,
Yet know, my lord, I was provok'd by him;
And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing—that the paleness of this flower
Betray'd the faintness of my master's heart.

York. Will not this malice, Somerset, be left?

Som. Your private grudge, my lord of York, will out,
Though he'er so cunningly you smother it.

K. Hen. Good lord! what madness rules in brain-sick men;

When, for so slight and frivolous a cause,
Such factious emulations shall arise!—
Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,
Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.

York. Let this discussion first be tried by fight,
And then your highness shall command a peace.

Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then.

York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bas. Confirm it so, mine honourable lord.

Glo. Confirm it so? Confounded be your strife!

And perish ye, with your audacious prate!

Presumptuous vassals! are you not ashamed,

With this immodest, clamorous outrage,

To trouble and disturb the king and us?

And you, my lords,—methinks you do not well,

To bear with their perverse objections;

Much less, to take occasion from their mouths

To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves;

Let me persuade you take a better course.

Bas. It grieves his highness;—Good my lords, be friends.

K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be combatants:

Henceforth, I charge you, as you love our favour,
Quite to forget this quarrel and the cause.—

And you, my lords,—remember where we are:

In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation:

If they perouse dissension in our looks,

And that within ourselves we disagree,

How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd

To wilful disobedience, and rebel?

Beside, What infamy will there arise,

When foreign princes shall be certified,

That, for a toy, a thing of no regard,

King Henry's peers, and chief nobility,

Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France?

O, think upon the conquest of my father,

My tender years; and let us not forgo

That for a trifle, that was bought with blood!

Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.

I see no reason, if I wear this rose,

[Putting on a red Rose.

That any one should therefore be suspicious

I more incline to Somerset than York:

Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both:

As well may they upbraid me with my crown,

Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd.

But your discretions better can persuade,

Than I am able to instruct or teach:

And therefore, as we hither came in peace,

So let us still continue peace and love.—

Cousin of York, we institute your grace

To be our regent in these parts of France:

And good my lord of Somerset, unite

Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot;—

And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,

Go cheerfully together, and digest

Your angry cholour on your enemies.

Ourselves, my lord protector, and the rest,

After some respite, will return to Calais;

From thence to England; where I hope ere long

To be presented by your victories,

With Charles, Alençon, and that traitorous reut.

[Flourish. Exeunt K. Hen. Glo. Som.

Win. Sur. and Bassett.

War. My lord of York, I promise you, the king

Prettily, methought, did play the orator.

York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,

In that he wears the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush! that was but his fancy, blame him

not;

I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.

York. And if I wist he did,—But let it rest;

Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exeunt YORK, WARWICK, and VERNON.

Bas. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice:

For, had the passions of thy heart burst out,

I fear we should have seen decipher'd there

More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils,

Than yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd.

But howsoever, no simple man that sees

This jarring discord of nobility,

This should'ring of each other in the court,

This factious bandying of their favourites,

But that it doth presage some ill event.

'Tis much, when sceptres are in children's hands;

But more, when envy breeds unkind division;

There comes the ruin, there begins confusion.

[Exit.

SCENE II. France. Before Bordeaux. Enter

TALBOT, with his Forces.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bordeaux, trumpet,

Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds a Parley. Enter, on the Walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.

English John Talbot, captain, calls you forth,

Servant in arms to Harry king of England;

And thus he would,—Upon your city gates,

Be humble to us; call my sovereign yours,

And do him homage as obedient subjects,

And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power:

But, if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,

Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;

Who, in a moment, even with the earth

Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,

If you break the offer of our love.

Ger. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death,

Our nation's terror, and their bloody scourge!

he instantly checks his threat with, let it rest. It is an example of a rhetorical figure not uncommon.

4 'Tis an alarming circumstance, a thing of great consequence, or much weight.

5 Envy, in old English writers, frequently means malice, enmity.

6 Unkind is unnatural.

7 The old editions read 'their love.' Sir Thomas

Hammer altered it to 'our love;' and I think, with

Stevens, that the alteration should be adopted.

1 To repugn is to resist. From the Latin repugno.
2 I. a. discovered.

3 The old copy reads 'And if I wish he did'—an evident typographical error. York says that he is not pleased that the king should prefer the red rose, the badge of Somerset, his enemy; Warwick desires him not to be offended at it, as he dares say the king meant no harm. To which York, yet unsatisfied, hastily replies, in a menacing tone, 'If I thought he did'—but

The period of thy tyranny approacheth.
On us thou canst not enter, but by death:
For, I protest, we are well fortified,
And strong enough to issue out and fight:
If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the smires of war to tangle thee:
On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight;
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,
But death doth front thee with apparent spoil,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,
To rive their dangerous artillery!
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.
Lo! there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit:
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, due thee withal;
For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.

[Drum afar off.]

Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

[Exeunt General, &c. from the Walls.]

Tal. He fables not,¹ I hear the enemy:—
Out, some light horsemen, and pursue their wings.—
O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale;
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maid with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be then in blood:²
Not rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch;
But rather moody-mad, and desperate stage,
Turn on the bloody bounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,
And they shall find dear deer of us, my friends.—
God, and Saint George! Talbot, and England's right!

Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Plains in Gascony. Enter YORK, with Forces; to him a Messenger.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?

Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out,
That he is march'd to Bordeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot: As he march'd along,
By your espials³ were discovered,
Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led;
Which join'd with him, and made their march for Bordeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset;
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am louted⁴ by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier:
God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English strength,

¹ 'To rive their dangerous artillery' is merely a figurative way of expressing to discharge it. 'To rive is to burst'; and burst is applied by Shakespeare more than once to thunder, or to a similar sound.

² Due for endue, or giving due and merited praise.

³ So Milton's Comus:—

'She fables not, I feel that I do fear.'

⁴ In blood is a term of the forest; a deer was said to be in blood when in vigour or in good condition, and full of courage, here put in opposition to rascal, which was the term for the same animal when lean and out of condition.

⁵ Espies

⁶ 'To lout' may signify to depress, to lower, to dishonour,' says Johnson: but in his Dictionary he explains it to overpower. Stevens knows not what to make of it: 'to let down, to be subdued, or vanquished,

Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot;
Who now is girded with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim destruction:
To Bordeaux, warlike duke! to Bordeaux, York!
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honour.

York. O God! that Somerset—who in proud heart

Doth stop my cornets—were in Talbot's place!
So should we save a valiant gentleman,
By forfeiting a traitor and a coward.

Mad ire, and wrathful fury, make me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd lord!

York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word;
We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get;
All 'long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then, God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul!

And on his son, young John; whom, two hours since,

I met in travel toward his warlike father!
This seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.⁸

York. Alas! what joys shall noble Talbot have,
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?

Away! vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.—

Lucy, farewell: no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.—

Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours, are won away,
'Long all of Somerset, and his delay. [Exit.]

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture⁹ of sedition
Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,
Sleeping neglect doth betray to loss
The conquest of our scarce-cold conqueror,
That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth:—Whiles they each other cross,
Lives, honours, lands, and all, hurry to loss. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. Other Plains of Gascony. Enter
SOMERSET, with his Forces; an Officer of TALBOT's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by York, and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted; all our general force
Might with a sally of the very town

Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour,
By this unheeded, desperate, wild adventure:
York set him on to fight, and die in shame,
That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.

Off. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me
Set from our o'ermatch'd forces forth for aid.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Som. How now, Sir William? whither were you sent?

Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold
Lord Talbot;¹⁰

Who, ring'd about¹¹ with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
To beat assailing death from his weak legions.

or baffled.' 'To be treated with contempt like a low or country fellow,' says Malone. But the meaning of the word here is evidently loitered, retarded: and the following quotation from Colgrave will show that this was sometimes the sense of to lout:—'Loricarder, to luske, low, or lubber it; to loiter about like a master less man.'

— those sleeping stones
That as a waist do girdle you about'

King John.

8 I. e. expended, consumed. Malone says that the word is still used in this sense in the western counties.

9 Alluding to the tale of Prometheus.

10 I. e. from one utterly ruined by the treacherous practices of others. The expression seems to have been proverbial; intimating that foul play had been used.

11 Encircled, environed.

And whiles the honourable captain there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs,
And, in advantage ling'ring,¹ looks for rescue,
You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour,
Keep off aloof with worthless emulation.²
Let not your private discord keep away
The levied succours that should lend him aid,
While he, renowned noble gentleman,
Yields up his life unto a world of odds:
Orleans the Bastard, Charles, and Burgundy,
Alençon, Reigner, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. York set him on, York should have sent him aid.

Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;

Swearing that you withhold his levied host,
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the horse:

I owe him little duty, and less love;
And take foul scorn, to fawn on him by sending.

Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,

Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot:
Never to England shall he bear his life;
But dies, betrayed to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will despatch the horsemen straight:

Within six hours they will be at his aid.

Lucy. Too late comes rescue; he is ta'en, or slain;
For fly he could not, if he would have fled;
And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then adieu!

Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The English Camp, near Bordeaux.

Enter TALBOT and JOHN his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war;
That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd,
When sapless age, and weak unable limbs,
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But,—O malignant and ill boding stars!—
Now thou art come unto a feast of death,³
A terrible and unavoidable⁴ danger:
Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse;
And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sudden flight: come, dally not, begone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?
And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother,
Dishonour not her honourable name,
To make a bastard, and a slave of me:
The world will say—He is not Talbot's blood,
That basely fled, when noble Talbot stood.⁵

Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain.

John. He, that flies so, will ne'er return again.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die.

John. Then let me stay; and, father, do you fly:
Your loss is great, so your regard⁶ should be;
My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.
Upon my death the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will, that no exploit have done:
You fled for vantage every one will swear;
But, if I bow, they'll say—it was for fear.
There is no hope that ever I will stay,
If the first hour, I shrink, and run away.
Here, on my knee, I beg mortality,
Rather than life preserv'd with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb?

² Emulation here signifies envious rivalry, not struggle for superior excellence.

³ To a field where death will be feasted with slaughter.

⁴ Unavoided for unavoidable.

⁵ For what reason this scene is written in rhyme (says Dr. Johnson) I cannot guess. If Shakspeare had not in other plays mingled his rhymes and blank verses

John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's womb.

Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go.

John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. Part of thy father may be sav'd in thee.

John. No part of him, but will be shame in me.

Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it.

John. Yes, your renowned name: Shall flight abuse it?

Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, being slain,
If death be so apparent, then both fly.

Tal. And leave my followers here, to fight, and die?

My age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?

No more can I be sever'd from your side,

Than can yourself yourself in twain divide:

Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I;

For live I will not, if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,

Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

Come, side by side together live and die;

And soul with soul from France to heavens fly.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. A Field of Battle. Alarm: Excursions, wherein TALBOT'S Son is hemmed about, and TALBOT rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight!

The regent hath with Talbot broke his word,

And left us to the rage of France his sword.

Where is John Talbot?—pause, and take thy breath;
I gave thee life, and rescu'd thee from death.

John. O twice my father! twice am I thy son:

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;

Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,

To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,

It warm'd thy father's heart with proud desire

Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age,

Quicken'd with youthful spleen, and warlike rage,

Beat down Alençon, Orleans, Burgundy,

And from the pride of Gallia rescu'd thee.

The ireful bastard Orleans—that drew blood

From thee, my boy; and had the maidenhood

Of thy first fight—I soon encountered;

And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed

Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace,

Bespoke him thus: Contaminated, base,

And misbegotten blood I spill of thine,

Mean and right poor; for that pure blood of mine,

Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy:—

Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy,

Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's care;

Art thou not weary, John? How dost thou fare?

Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly,

Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry?

Fly, to revenge my death, when I am dead;

The help of one stands me in little stead.

O, too much folly is it, well I wot,

To hazard all our lives in one small boat.

If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage,

To-morrow I shall die with mickle age:

By me they nothing gain, an if I stay,

'Tis but the short'ning of my life one day:

In thee thy mother dies, our household's name,

In the same manner, I should have suspected that this dialogue had been part of some other poem, which was never finished, and that being loath to throw his labour away, he inserted it here.⁷ Mr. Boswell remarks that it was a practice common to all Shakspeare's contemporaries.

⁶ Your care of your own safety.

⁷ Determined here must signify prescribed, limited, appointed; and not ended, as Steevens and Malone concur in explaining it. John could not be meant to say that his time of life was actually ended.

My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame:
All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
All these are sav'd, if thou wilt fly away.

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me smart,
[heart:]

These words of yours draw life-blood from my
On that advantage, bought with such a shame
(To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame,) Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly,
The coward horse, that bears me, fall and die:
And, like¹ me to the peasant boys of France;
To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance!
Surely, by all the glory you have won,
An if I fly, I am not Talbot's son:
Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot;²
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete,⁴

Thou Icarus; thy life to me is sweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side;
And, commendable prov'd, let's die in pride.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Another Part of the same. Alarm:
Excursions. Enter TALBOT wounded, supported by a Servant.

Tal. Where is my other life?—mine own is gone;—

O, where's young Talbot?—where is valiant John?—
Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity!¹
Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee:—
When he perceiv'd me shrink, and on my knee,
His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
And, like a hungry lion, did commence
Rough deeds of rage, and stern impatience;
But when my angry guardant stood alone,
Tend'ring my ruin,² and assail'd of none,
Dizzy-ey'd fury, and great rage of heart,
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clust'ring battle of the French:
And in that sea of blood my boy did drench
His overmounting spirit; and there died
My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride.

Enter Soldiers, bearing the Body of JOHN TALBOT.

Serv. O my dear lord! lo, where your son is borne!

Tal. Thou antic death, which laugh'st us here to scorn,³

Anon, from thy insulting tyranny,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
O Talbots, winged through the lither⁴ sky,
In thy despite shall 'escape mortality.—
O thou, whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
Speak to thy father, ere thou yield thy breath:
Brave death by speaking, whether he will, or no;
Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy foe.—
Poor boy! he smiles, methinks; as who should say—
Had death been French, then death had died to-day.
Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms;
My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have,
Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave.
[Disce.]

¹ Prior has borrowed this thought in his Henry and Emma:—

² Are there not poisons, racks, and flames, and swords,
That Emma thus must die by Henry's words?

³ I. e. compare me, reduce me to a level by comparison.

⁴ See note on King Richard II. Act I. Sc. 1.

⁵ Thus in the Third Part of King Henry VI.:—

'What a peevish fool was that of Crete.'

⁶ Triumphant death, though thy presence is made more terrible, on account of the stain of dying in captivity, yet young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee.

⁷ 'Watching me with tenderness in my fall.'

⁸ In King Richard II. we have the same image:—

'—within the hollow crown

That rounds the mortal temples of a king
Keeps death his court: and there the antic sits Seeking his state, and grinning at his pomp.'

⁹ Lither is flexible, pliant, yielding.

Alarms. Excant Soldiers and Servant, leaving the two Bodies. Enter CHARLES, ALENCON, BURGUNDY, Bastard, LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue, we should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging-wood,⁹

Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Puc. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said,

Thou maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid:

But—with a proud, majestic high scorn,—

He answer'd thus; Young Talbot was not born

To be the pillage of a giglot¹⁰ wench:

So, rushing in the bowels of the French,¹¹

He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtless, he would have made a noble knight:

See, where he lies inberr'd in the arms

Of the most bloody nurse of his harms.

Bas. Hew them to pieces, hack their bones

asunder;

Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. O, no; forbear: for that which we have fed

During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter Sir WILLIAM LUCY, attended, a French Herald preceding.

Lucy. Herald,

Conduct me to the Dauphin's tent; to know¹²

Who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission, Dauphin? 'tis a mere French word;

We English warriors wot not what it means.

I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en,

And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners ask'st thou? heil our pr¹³ son is.

But tell me whom thou seek'st?

Lucy. Where is the great Alcides of the field,

Valiant Lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury?

Created, for his rare success in arms,

Great earl of Washford,¹⁴ Waterford, and Valence;

Lord Talbot of Goodring and Urchinfield,

Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdun of Alton,

Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of Sheffield,

The thrice victorious lord of Falconbridge;

Knight of the noble order of Saint George;

Worthy Saint Michael, and the Golden Fleese;

Great marshal to Henry the Sixth,

Of all his wars within the realm of France?

Puc. Here is a silly stately style indeed!

The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms hath,

Writes not so tedious a style as this.—

Him, that thou magnifiest with all these titles,

Stinking and flyblown, lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Is Talbot slain; the Frenchman's only scourge,

Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?

O, were mine eyeballs into bullets turn'd,

That I, in rage, might shoot them at your faces!

O, that I could but call these dead to life!

It were enough to fright the realm of France:

Were but his picture left among you here,

Meet, Don Andrea! yea, in the battle's bowels.¹⁵

12 Lucy's message implied that he knew who had obtained the victory: therefore, Hammer reads:—

'Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent.'

13 Washford, in Ireland, was anciently called Weyford.

In Crompton's Mansion of Magnanimité, 1590, it is written as here, Washford. This long list of titles is from the epitaph formerly existent on Lord Talbot's tomb at Rouen. It is to be found in the work above cited, with one other, 'Lord Lovell of Worcester,' which would not easily fall into the verse. It concludes as here, and adds, 'who died in the battle of Bordeaux,

1453.'

It would amaze¹ the proudest of you all.
Give me their bodies; that I may bear them hence,
And give them burial as becometh their worth.

Puc. I think, this upstart is old Talbot's ghost,
He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit.
For God's sake, let him have 'em: to keep them
here,

They would but stink, and putrefy the air.

Char. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lacy. I'll bear them hence:
But from their ashes shall be rear'd²
A phoenix that shall make all France afraid.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with 'em what thou wilt.

And now to Paris, in this conquering vein;

All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace. Enter
KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and EXETER.

K. Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope,

The emperor, and the earl of Armagnac?

Glo. I have, my lord; and their intent is this,—

They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a godly peace concluded of,
Between the realms of England and of France.

K. Hen. How doth your grace affect their motion?

Glo. Well, my good lord; and as the only means
To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And 'tablish quietness on every side.

K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought,
It was both impious and unnatural,
That such inhumanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glo. Beside, my lord—the sooner to effect,

And surer bind, this knot of amity,—

The earl of Armagnac—near knit to Charles,

A man of great authority in France,— Proffers his only daughter to your grace

In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

K. Hen. Marriage, uncle! alas! my years are young;³

And fitter is my study and my books,

Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.

Yet, call the ambassadors; and, as you please,

So let them have their answers every one:

I shall be well content with any choice,

Tends to God's glory, and my country's weal.

Enter a Legate, and Two Ambassadors, with WIN-CHESTER, in a Cardinal's Habit.

Ess. What! is my lord of Winchester install'd,

And call'd unto a cardinal's degree?⁴

Then, I perceive, that will be verified,

Heary the Fifth did sometime prophesy,—

If once he come to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown.

K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits

Have been consider'd and debated on:

Your purpose is both good and reasonable:

And, therefore, are we certainly resolv'd

To draw conditions of a friendly peace;

Which, by my lord of Winchester, we mean

Shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my lord your master,—

I have inform'd his highness so at large,

¹ To amaze is to dismay, to throw into consternation.
'A cicle amazed or astoned with feare. Urbe lymphaus horribilus.' Baret.

² A word is wanting to complete the metre, which Hammer thus supplied:—

'But from their ashes, Dauphin, shall be rear'd.'

³ Immanitas (immanitas, Lat.) outrageousness, cruelty, excess. Bount. 'A belline kind of immanity never rages so amongst men.' Hoswell's Letters, iii. 15.

⁴ The king was, however, twenty-four years old.

⁵ The poet has here forgot himself. In the first act Gloster says:—

'I'll canvas thee in thy broad cardinal's hat.'

And it is strange that Exeter should not know of his

As—liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,

Her beauty, and the value of her dower,—

He doth intend she shall be England's queen.

K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract, Bear her this jewel, [To the Amb.] pledge of my affection.

And so, my lord protector, see them guarded,

And safely brought to Dover; where, inshipp'd,

Commit them to the fortune of the sea.

[Exeunt KING HENRY and Train; GLOSTER,
EXETER, and Ambassadors.

Win. Stay, my lord legate; you shall first receiv-

The sum of money, which I promised

Should be deliver'd to his holiness

For clothing me in these grave ornaments

Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure.

Win. Now, Winchester will not submit, I trow,

Or be inferior to the proudest peer.

Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive.

That, neither in birth, or for authority,

The bishop will be overcome by thee:

I'll either make thee stoop, and bend thy knee,

Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. France. Plains in Anjou. Enter
CHARLES, BURGUNDY, ALENÇON, LA PU-
CELLE, and Forces, marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits:

'Tis said, the stout Parisians do revolt,
And turn again unto the warlike French.

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of France,

And keep not back your powers in dalliance.

Puc. Peace be amongst them, if they turn to us;

Else, ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Success unto our valiant general,

And happiness to his accomplices!

Char. What tidings send our scouts? I pry thee
speak.

Mess. The English army, that divided was

Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;

And means to give you battle presently.

Char. Somewhat too sudden, sir, the warning is;

But we will presently provide for them.

Bar. I trust the ghost of Talbot is not there;

Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions, fear is most accurs'd:—

Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be thine;

Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.

Char. Then on, my lords; And France be fortunate! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. Before Angiers. Ala- rons: Excursions. Enter LA PUCELLE.

Puc. The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly.—

Now help, ye charming spells, and periapts;⁵

And ye choice spirits that admonish me,

And give me signs of future accidents! [Thunder.]

You speedy helpers, that are substitutes

Under the lordly monarch of the north,

Appear, and aid me in this enterprise!

Enter Fiends.

This speedy quick appearance argues proof

Of your accusom'd diligence to me.

Now, ye familiar spirits, that are cull'd advancement. It appears that he would imply that Winchester obtained his hat only just before his present entry. He in fact obtained it in the fifth year of Henry's reign.

⁵ Periapts were certain written charms worn about the person as preservatives from disease and danger.
Of these the first chapter of St. John's Gospel was deemed the most efficacious. See Scott's Discovery of Witchcraft, 1664, p. 212, &c.

⁷ The monarch of the north was Zimmar, one of the four principal devils invoked by witches. The north was supposed to be the particular habitation of bad spirits. Milton assembles the rebel angels in the north.

Out of the powerful regions¹ under earth,
Help me this once, that France may get the field.

[They walk about, and speak not.]

O, hold me not with silence over-long!
Where? I was wont to feed you with my blood,
I'll lop a member off, and give it you,
In earnest of a further benefit;
So you do condescend to help me now.—

[They hang their heads.]

No hope to have redress?—My body shall Pay recompense, if you will grant my suit.

[They shake their heads.]

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Entreat you to your wanted furtherance?
Then take my soul; my body, soul, and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.

[They depart.]

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come,
That France must vail² her lofty-plumed crest,
And let her head fall into England's lap.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with:
Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust. [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter French and English, fighting.

LA PUCELLE and YORK fight hand to hand. LA

PUCELLE is taken. The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think I have you fast;
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty.—
A goodly prize, fit for the devil's grace!
See, how the ugly witch doth bend her brows,
As if, with Circe, she would change my shape.

Puc. Chang'd to a worse shape thou canst not be.

York. O, Charles the Dauphin is a proper man;
No shape but his can please your dainty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischief light on Charles, and thee!

And may ye both be suddenly surpris'd

By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds!

York. Fell, banning⁴ hag! enchantress, hold thy tongue.

Puc. I pry thee, give me leave to curse a while.

York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake. [Exeunt.]

*Alarums. Enter SUFFOLK, leading in LADY
MARGARET.*

Suff. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.
[Gazes on her.]

O fairest beauty, do not fear, nor fly;
For I will touch thee but with reverent hands,
And lay them gently on thy tender side.
I kiss these fingers [Kisses her hand.] for eternal peace;

Who art thou? say, that I may honour thee.

Mar. Margaret my name; and daughter to a king,
The king of Naples, whose'er thou art.

Suff. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.

Be not offended, nature's miracle,

Thou art allotted to be taken by me:

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.

Yet, if this servile usage once offend,
Go, and be free again as Suffolk's friend.

[She turns away as going.]

O, stay!—I have no power to let her pass;
My hand would free her, but my heart says—no.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.⁶

¹ Warburton thought that we should read legions here, the same mistake having occurred before in this play.

² Where for whereas, a common substitution in old writers; whereas is also sometimes used for where.

³ To vail is to lower. See note on Merchant of Venice, Act I. Sc. 1.

⁴ To ban is to curse.

⁵ This comparison, made between things sufficiently unlike (Johnson observes,) is intended to express the softness and delicacy of Lady Margaret's beauty, which delighted, but did not dazzle: which was bright, but gave no pain by its lustre.

Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak:

I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind:

Fye, De la Poole! disable not thyself;

Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner?

Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight?

Ay; beauty's princely majesty is such,

Confound the tongue, and makes the senses rough.*

Mar. Say, earl of Suffolk,—if thy name be so,—

What ransom must I pay before I pass?

For, I perceive, I am thy prisoner.

Suff. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suit,

Before thou make a trial of her love? [Aside.]

Mar. Why speak'st thou not? what ransom must

I pay?

Suff. She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd:

She is a woman; therefore to be won. [Aside.]

Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom, yea, or no?

Suff. Foodman! remember, that thou hast a wife:

Then how can Margaret be thy paramour? [Aside.]

Mar. I were best leave him, for he will not hear.

Suff. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling care.⁶

Mar. He talks at random; sure, the man is mad.

Suff. And yet a dispensation may be had.

Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.

Suff. I'll win this lady Margaret. For whom?

Why, for my king: Tush! that's a wooden thing.⁷

Mar. He talks of wood: It is some carpenter.

Suff. Yet so my fancy¹⁰ may be satisfied,

And peace established between these realms.

But there remains a scruple in that too;

For though her father be the king of Naples,

Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet he is poor,

And our nobility will scorn the match. [Aside.]

Mar. Hear ye, captain? Are you not at leisure?

Suff. It shall be so, disdain thy ne'er so much:

Henry is youthful, and will quickly yield.—

Madam, I have a secret to reveal.

Mar. What though I be enthral'd? he seems a knight,

And will not any way dishonour me. [Aside.]

Suff. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

Mar. Perhaps, I shall be rescu'd by the French:

And then I need not crave his courtesy. [Aside.]

Suff. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—

Mar. Tush: women have been captivate ere now.

[Aside.]

Suff. Lady, wherefore talk you so?

Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but quid pro quo.

Suff. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose

Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

Mar. To be a queen in bondage, is more vile,

Than is a slave in base servility;

For princes should be free.

Suff. And so shall you,

If happy England's royal king be free.

Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?

Suff. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen;

To put a golden sceptre in thy hand,

And set a precious crown upon thy head,

If thou wilt condescend to be my—

Mar.

What?

Suff. His love.

Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.

Suff. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am

To woo so fair a dame to be his wife,

And have no portion in the choice myself.

How say you, madam; are you so content?

Mar. An if my father please, I am content.

⁶ 'Do not represent thyself so weak.' To disable was to dispraise, or impeach.

⁷ The meaning of rough here is not very evident. Sir Thomas Hamner reads crouch.

⁸ A cooling card was most probably a card so decisive as to cool the courage of the adversary. Metaphorically, something to damp or overwhelm the hopes of an expectant.

⁹ I. e. an awkward business, an undertaking not likely to succeed. 'It is sport to see a bold fellow out of countenance, for that puts his face into a most shrunken and wooden posture.'

¹⁰ I. e. love.

Suff. Then call our captains, and our colours, forth:
And, madam, at your father's castle walls
We'll crave a parley to confer with him.

[Troops come forward.]

A Parley sounded. Enter REIGNIER, on the Walls.

Suff. See, Reignier, see, thy daughter prisoner.

Reig. To whom?

Suff. To me.

Reig. Suffolk, what remedy?
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Suff. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:
Consent (and for thy honour, give consent.)
Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king;
Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto:
And this her easy-held imprisonment
Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.

Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks?

Suff. Fair Margaret knows,
That Suffolk doth not flatter, face,¹ or feign.
Reig. Upon thy princely warrant, I descend,
To give thee answer of thy just demand.

[Exit from the Walls.]

Suff. And here I will expect thy coming.

Trumpets sounded. Enter REIGNIER, below.

Reig. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories:
Command in Anjou what your honour pleases.

Suff. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child.

Fit to be made companion with a king:
What answer makes your grace unto my suit?

Reig. Since thou dost deign to woo her little worth,

To be the princely bride of such a lord;
Upon condition I may quietly
Enjoy mine own, the county Maine, and Anjou,
Free from oppression, or the stroke of war,
My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.

Suff. That is her ransom, I deliver her;
And those two counties, I will undertake,
Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.

Reig. And I again,—in Henry's royal name,
As deputy unto that gracious king,
Give thee her hand, for sign of plighted faith.

Suff. Reignier of France, I give thee kindly thanks,
Because this is in traffic of a king:
And yet, methinks, I could be well content
To be mine own attorney in this case. [Aside.]

I'll over then to England with this news,
And make this marriage to be solemniz'd;
So, farewell Reignier! Set this diamond safe
In golden palaces, as it becomes.

Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian prince, King Henry, were he here.

Mar. Farewell, my lord? Good wishes, praise, and prayers,

Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. [Going.]

Suff. Farewell, sweet madam! But hark you,
Margaret;

No princely commendation to my king?

Mar. Such commendations as become a maid,
A virgin, and his servant, say to him.

Suff. Well, sweetly plac'd and modestly directed.
But madam, I must trouble you again—
No loving token to his majesty?

Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unspotted heart,
Never yet taint with love, I send the king.

Suff. And this withal. [Kisses her.]

Mar. That for thyself:—I will not so presume,
To send such peevish² tokens to a king.

[Exeunt REIGNIER and MARGARET.]

Suff. O, wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk, stay;

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotaurs, and ugly treasons, lurk.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise:
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount;
Mad,³ natural graces that extinguish art;
Repeat their semblance often on the seas,
That, when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,
Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Camp of the Duke of York, in Anjou Enter YORK, WARWICK, and others.

York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn.

Enter LA PUCELLE, guarded, and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah, Joan! this kill thy father's heart outright!

Have I sought every country far and near,
And, now it is my chance to find thee out,
Must I behold thy timeless⁴ cruel death?

Ah, Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee!

Puc. Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!

I am descended of a gentler blood:

Thou art no father, nor no friend of mine.

Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you, 'tis not so;

I did beget her, all the parish knows:

Her mother liveth yet, can testify,

She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?

York. This argues what her kind of life hath been;

Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.

Shep. Fye, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstacle⁵!

God knows, thou art a collop of my flesh:

And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:

Deny me not, I prythee, gentle Joan.

Puc. Peasant, avaunt!—You have suborn'd this man,

Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest,

The morn that I was wedded to her mother.—

Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.

Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time

Of thy nativity! I would the milk

Thy mother gave thee, when thou suck'dst her breast,

Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake!

Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field,

I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!

Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?

O, burn her, burn her; hanging is too good. [Exit.]

York. Take her away, for she hath liv'd too long,

To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First, let me tell you whom you have condemn'd;

Not one begotten of a shepherd swain

But issu'd from the progeny of kings;

Virtuous and holy; chosen from above,

By inspiration of celestial grace,

To work exceeding miracles on earth.

I never had to do with wicked spirits:

But you,—that are polluted with your lusts,

Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,

Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,—

Because you want the grace that others have,

You judge it straight a thing impossible

To compass wonders, but by help of devils.

No, misconceived! Joan of Arc hath been

A virgin from her tender infancy,

Chaste and immaculate in very thought;

Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effus'd,

Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay;—away with her to execution.

War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,

Spare for no fagots, let there be enough:

¹ To face is to carry a false appearance, to play the hypocrite. Hence the name of one of Ben Jonson's characters in The Alchemist.

² I. e. silly, foolish.

³ Mad has been shown by Stevens to have been occasionally used for staid, in which sense we must take it here; if we do not, with others, suspect it an error of the press for And or Her.

⁴ Timeless is untimely.

⁵ Miser has no relation to avarice in this passage, but simply means a miserable creature.

⁶ This vulgar corruption of obstinate has oddly lasted till now, says Johnson.

⁷ No, ye misconceivers, ye who mistake me and my qualities.

Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.

Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?—
Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity;
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.—
I am with child, ye bloody homicides;
Murder not then the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hate me to a violent death.

York. Now heaven forefend! the holy maid with child!

War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye wrought;
Is all your strict preciseness come to this?
York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling;
I did imagine what would be her refuge.

War. Well, go to; we will have no bastards live:
Especially, since Charles must father it.

Puc. You are deceived; my child is none of his;
It was Alençon, that enjoy'd my love.

York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel!¹
It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. O, give me leave, I have deluded you;
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I nam'd,
But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail'd.

War. A married man! that's most intolerable.
York. Why, here's a girl! I think, she knows not well,

There were so many, whom she may accuse.

War. It's a sign, she hath been liberal and free.
York. And, yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure.—
Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat, and thee:
Use no entreaty, for it is in vain.

Puc. Then lead me hence; with whom I leave my curse:

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you; till mischief, and despair,
Drive you to break your necks, or hang yourselves!

[Exit, guarded.]

York. Break thou in pieces, and consume to ashes,

Thou foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter CARDINAL BEAUFORT, attended.

Car. Lord Regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.
For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,
Mov'd with remorse² of these outrageous broils,
Have earnestly implor'd a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And here at hand the Dauphin, and his train,
Approacheth, to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect?
After the slaughter of so many peers,
So many captains, gentlemen and soldiers,
That in this quarrel have been overthrown,
And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the towns,
By treason, falsehood, and by treachery,
Our great progenitors had conquer'd?—
O, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief
The utter loss of all the realm of France.

Wat. Be patient, York: if we conclude a peace,
It shall be with such strict and severe covenants,
As little shall the Frenchman gain thereby.

Enter CHARLES, attended; ALENÇON, Bastard, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peaceful truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by yourselves
What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choler chokes

The hollow passage of my poison'd voice,
By sight of these our baleful³ enemies.

1 The character of Machiavel seems to have made so very deep an impression on the dramatic writers of this age, that he is many times introduced without regard to anachronism.

2 Compassion, pity.

3 Baleful had anciently the same meaning as harmful.

Wat. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus.
That—in regard King Henry gives consent,
Of mere compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country of distressful war,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,—
You shall become true liegemen to his crown:
And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,
Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him,
And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself?
Adorn his temples with a coronet;⁴
And yet, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?
This proffer is absurd and reasonless.

Char. 'Tis known, already, that I am possess'd
With more than half the Gallian territories,
And therein reverence'd for their lawful king:
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?
No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep
That which I have, than, coveting for more,
Be cast from possibility of all.

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret means

Used intercession to obtain a league;
And, now the matter grows to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloof upon comparison?
Either accept the title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit⁵ proceeding from our king,
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract;
If once it be neglected, ten to one,
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy,
To save your subjects from such massacre,
And ruthless slaughters, as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostility:
And therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

[Aside to CHARLES.]

War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our com-dition stand?

Char. It shall:

Only reserv'd, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty;
As thou art knight, never to disobey,
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.—

[CHARLES, and the rest, give tokens of fealty.]
So, now dismiss your army when ye please;
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still.
For here we entertain a solemn peace. [Exit.]

SCENE V. London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, in conference with SUR-FOLK; GLOSTER and EXETER following.

K. Hen. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl,

Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtues, graced with external gifts,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart:
And like as rigour in tempestuous gusts
Provokes the mightiest hulk against the tide;
So am I driven, by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Surf. Tush! my good lord' this superficial tale
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame
(Had I sufficient skill to utter them,)
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit.
And, which is more, she is not so divine,

ful. It is an epithet frequently bestowed on poisonous plants and reptiles.

4 Coronet is here used for crown.

5 Benefit is here a term of law.

So full replete with choice of all delights,
But, with as humble lowliness of mind,
She is content to be at your command;
Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste intents,
To love and honour Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume.

Therefore, my lord protector, give consent,
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.

Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd
Unto another lady of esteem;
How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not deface your honour with reproach?

Suff. As doth a ruler with unlawful oaths;
Or one, that, at a triumph¹ having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds:
A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds:
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than that?

Her father is no better than an earl,
Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suff. Yes, my good lord, her father is a king,
The king of Naples, and Jerusalem;
And of such great authority in France,
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the earl of Armagnac may do,
Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Ese. Beside, his wealth doth warrant liberal dower;

While Reignier sooner will receive than give.

Suff. A dower, my lords! disgrace not so your king,

That he should be so abject, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love.

Henry is able to enrich his queen,

And not to seek a queen to make him rich:

So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.

Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship:²

Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,

Must be companion of his nuptial bed:

And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,

It most of all these reasons bindeth us,
In our opinions she should be preferred.

For what is wedlock forced, but a hell,
An age of discord and continual strife?

Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliss,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.

Whom should we match with Henry, being a king,

But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?

Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,

Approves her fit for none, but for a king?

Her valiant courage, and undaunted spirit
(More than in women commonly is seen,)

Will answer our hope in issue of a king;

For Henry, son unto a conqueror,

Is likely to beget more conquerors,

If with a lady of so high resolve,
As is fair Margaret, he be link'd in love.

Then yield, my lords; and here conclude with me,
That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report,

My noble lord of Suffolk; or for that

1 A triumph then signified a public exhibition; such as a tournament, mask, or revel.

2 By the intervention of another man's choice; or the discretionary agency of another. The phrase occurs twice in King Richard III.:

'Be the attorney of my love to her.'

Again:—

'I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother.'

My tender youth was never yet attain'd

With any passion of inflaming love,

I cannot tell; but this I am assur'd,

I feel such sharp dissension in my breast,

Such fierce alarms both of hope and fear,

As I am sick with working of my thoughts.

Take, therefore, shipping: post, my lord, to France;

Agree to any covenants: and procure

That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come

To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd

King Henry's faithful and anointed queen:

For your expenses and sufficient charge,

Among the people gather up a tenth.

Be gone, I say; for, till you do return,

I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.—

And you, good uncle, banish all offence:

If you do censure me by what you were,

Not what you are, I know it will excuse

This sudden execution of my will.

And so conduct me, where from company,

I may revolve and ruminate my grief.³ [Exit.

Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.

[Enter GLOSTER and EXETER.

Suff. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd: and thus he goes,

As did the youthful Paris once to Greece;

With hope to find the like event in love,

But prosper better than the Trojan did.

Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;

But I will rule both her, the king, and realm. [Exit.

OF this play there is no copy earlier than that of the folio in 1623, though the two succeeding parts are extant in two editions in quarto. That the second and third parts were published without the first, may be admitted as no weak proof that the copies were surreptitiously obtained, and that the printers of that time gave the public those plays, not such as the author designed, but such as they could get them. That this play was written before the two others is indubitably collected from the series of events; that it was written and played before Henry the Fifth is apparent, because in the epilogue there is mention made of this play, and not of the other parts:—

'Henry the Sixth in swaddling bands crown'd king;
Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France, and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage hath shown.'

France is lost in this play. The two following contain, as the old title imports, the contention of the houses of York and Lancaster.

The Second and Third Parts of Henry VI. were printed in 1600. When Henry V. was written, we know not, but it was printed likewise in 1600, and therefore before the publication of the first and second parts. The First Part of Henry VI. had been often shown on the stage, and would certainly have appeared in its place, had the author been the publisher. JOHNSON.

THAT the second and third parts, as they are now called, were printed without the first, is a proof, in my apprehension, that they were not written by the same author: and the title of The Contention of the Houses of York and Lancaster, being affixed to the two pieces which were printed in quarto, is a proof that they were a distinct work, commencing where the other ended, but not written at the same time; and that this play was never known by the title of The First Part of King Henry VI. till Heminge and Condell gave it that name in their volume, to distinguish it from the two subsequent plays; which being altered by Shakspeare, assumed the new titles of the Second and Third Parts of King Henry VI. that they might not be confounded with the original pieces on which they were formed. The first part was originally called The Historical Play of King Henry VI. MALONE.

3 To censure is here simply to judge. 'If in judging me you consider the past frailties of your own youth.'

4 Grief, in the first line, stands for pain, uneasiness, in the second, especially for sorrow.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY THE SIXTH.

RELIMINARY REMARKS.

THIS and the Third Part of King Henry VI. contain that troublesome period of this prince's reign, which took in the whole contention between the houses of York and Lancaster: and under that title were these two plays first acted and published. The present play opens with King Henry's marriage, which was in the twenty-third year of his reign [A. D. 1445], and closes with the first battle fought at St. Albans, and won by the York faction, in the thirty-third year of his reign [A. D. 1455]: so that it comprises the history and transactions of ten years.

The Contention of the Two Famous Houses of York and Lancaster was published in quarto; the first part in 1604; the second, or True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York, in 1595; and both were reprinted in 1600. In a dissertation annexed to these plays, Mr. Malone has endeavoured to establish the fact that these two dramas were not originally written by Shakspeare, but by some preceding author or authors before the year 1590; and that upon them Shakspeare formed this and the following drama, altering, retrenching, or amplifying as he thought proper. I will endeavour to give a brief abstract of the principal arguments. 1. The entry on the Stationers' books, in 1594, does not mention the name of Shakspeare; nor are the plays printed with his name in the early editions; but, after the poet's death, an edition was printed by one Pavier without date, but really, in 1619, with the name of Shakspeare on the title-page. This he has shown to be a common fraudulent practice of the booksellers of that period. When Pavier re-published The Contention of the Two Houses, &c. in 1619, he omitted the words 'as it was acted by the earl of Pembroke his servants,' which appeared on the original title-page,—just as on the republication of the old play of King John, in two parts, in 1611, the words 'as it was acted in the honourable city of London,' were omitted; because the omitted words in both cases marked the respective pieces not to be the production of Shakspeare. And, as in King John, the letters W. Sh. were added, in 1611, to deceive the purchaser; so in the republication of The whole Contention, &c. Pavier, having dismissed the words above-mentioned, inserted these:—'Newly corrected and enlarged by William Shakspeare;' knowing that these pieces had been made the groundwork of two other plays: that they had in fact been corrected and enlarged, (though not in his copy, which was a mere reprint from the edition of 1600,) and exhibited under the titles of the Second and Third Parts of King Henry VI.; and hoping that this new edition of the original plays would pass for those altered and augmented by Shakspeare, which were then unpublished.

A passage from Greene's Groatsworth of Wit, ad-dressed by Mr. Tyrwhitt, first suggested and strongly supports Malone's hypothesis. The writer, Robert Greene, is supposed to address himself to his poetical friend, George Peele, in these words:—'Yes, trust them not [alluding to the players], for there is an upstart crowe beautified with our feathers, that with his tygers heart wrapped in a players hide, supposes hee is well able to bombaste out a blank verse as the best of you; and, being an absolute Joannes faciturn, is, in his own conceit, the only Shakspeare in a country.' 'O tygers heart wrapped in a woman's hide!' is a line in the old quarto play entitled The First Part of the Contention, &c. There seems to be no doubt that the allusion is to Shakspeare, that the old plays may have been the production of Greene, Peele, and Marlowe, or some of them; and that Greene could not conceal his mortification, at the fame of himself and his associates, old and established playwrights, being eclipsed by a new upstart writer, (for so he calls the poet,) who had then perhaps first attracted the notice of the public by exhibiting two plays formed upon old dramas written by them, considerably enlarged and improved. The very term that Greene uses, 'to bombaste out a blank verse,' exactly corresponds with what has been now suggested. This new poet, says he, knows as well as any man how to amplify and swell out a blank verse.

Shakspeare did for the old plays, what Berni had before done to the Orlando Innamorato of Boiardo. He wrote new beginnings to the Acts; he new versified, he new modelled, he transposed many of the parts; and greatly amplified and improved the whole. Several lines, however, and whole speeches, which he thought sufficiently polished, he accepted, and introduced, without any, or very slight, alterations.

Malone adopted the following expedient to mark these alterations and adoptions, which has been followed in the present edition:—All those lines which the poet adopted without any alteration, are printed in the usual manner; those speeches which he altered or expanded are distinguished by inverted commas; and to all lines entirely composed by himself asterisks are prefixed.

The internal evidences upon which Malone relies to establish his position are, 1. The variations between the old plays in quarto, and the corresponding pieces in the folio edition of Shakspeare's dramatic works, which are of so peculiar a nature as to mark two distinct hands. Some circumstances are mentioned in the old quarto plays, of which there is not the least trace in the folio; and many minute variations occur that prove the pieces in the quarto to have been original and distinct compositions. No copyist or shorthand writer would invent circumstances totally different from those which appear in Shakspeare's new-modelled draughts, as exhibited in the first folio; or insert whole speeches, of which scarcely a trace is found in that edition. In some places a speech in one of these quartos consists of ten or twelve lines: in Shakspeare's folio the same speech consists perhaps of only half the number. A copyist by the ear, or an unskilful shorthand writer, might mutilate and exhibit a poet's thoughts or expressions imperfectly; but he would not dilate and amplify them, or introduce totally new matter.

Malone then exhibits a sufficient number of instances to prove, beyond the possibility of doubt, his position: so that (as he observes) we are compelled to admit, either that Shakspeare wrote two sets of plays on the story which forms his Second and Third Parts of King Henry VI., hasty sketches, and entirely distinct and more finished performances; or else we must acknowledge that he formed his pieces on a foundation laid by another writer or writers; that is upon the two parts of The Contention of the Two Houses of York, &c. It is a striking circumstance that almost all the passages in the Second and Third Parts of King Henry VI. which resemble others in Shakspeare's undisputed plays, are not found in the original pieces in quarto, but in his ri-facimento in folio. As these resemblances to his other plays, and a peculiar Shakspearian phraseology, ascertain a considerable portion of these disputed dramas to be the production of that poet; so, on the other hand, other passages, discordant, in matters of fact, from his other plays, are proved by this discordancy not to have been composed by him: and these discordant passages, being found in the original quarto plays, prove that those pieces were composed by another writer.

It is observable that several portions of English history had been dramatised before the time of Shakspeare. Thus we have King John, in two parts, by an anonymous writer; Edward I. by George Peele; Edward II. by Christopher Marlowe; Edward III. anonymous; Henry IV. containing the deposition of Richard II. and the accession of Henry to the crown, anonymous; Henry V. and Richard III. both by anonymous authors. It is therefore highly probable that the whole of the story of Henry VI. had been brought on the scene, and that the first of the plays here printed, formerly called The Historical Play of King Henry VI. and now named The First Part of King Henry VI. as well as the Two Parts of the Contention of the Houses of York and Lancaster, were the compositions of some of the authors who had produced the historical dramas above enumerated.

Mr. Boswell, speaking of the originals of the second and third of these plays, says, 'That Marlowe may have had some share in these compositions, I am not disposed to deny; but I cannot persuade myself that they entirely proceeded from his pen. Some passages are possessed of so much merit, that they can scarcely be ascribed to any one except the most distinguished of Shakspeare's predecessors; but the tameness of the genera! style is very different from the peculiar characteristics of that poet's mighty line which are great energy both of thought and language, degenerating too frequently into tumour and extravagance. The versification appears to me to be of a different colour.—That Marlowe, Peele, and Greene, may all of them have had a share in these dramas, is consonant to the frequent practice of the age; of which ample proofs may be found in the extracts from Henslowe's MS. printed by Mr. Malone.

From the passage alluding to these plays, in Greene's Groatworth of Wit, it seems probable that they were produced previous to 1592, but were not printed until they appeared in the folio of 1622.

To Johnson's high panegyric of that impressive scena in this play, the death of Cardinal Beaufort, we may add that Schlegel says, 'It is sublime beyond all praise. Can any other poet be named who has drawn aside the curtain of eternity at the close of this life in such an overpowering and awful manner? And yet it is not mere horror with which we are filled, but solemn emotion; we have an exemplification of a blessing and a curse in close proximity; the pious king is an image of the heavenly mercy, which, even in his last moments, labours to enter into the soul of the sinner.'

Suffolk.

As by your high imperial majesty
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As procurator¹ to your excellence,
To marry Princess Margaret for your grace;
So, in the famous ancient city, Tours,—
In presence of the kings of France and Sicil,
The dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretagne, and Alençon,

Seven earls, twelve barons, twenty reverend bishops,—

I have perform'd my task, and was espous'd;

And humbly now upon my bended knees,

In sight of England and her lordly peers,

Deliver up my title in the queen

To your most gracious hands, that are the substance²

Of that great shadow I did represent;

The happiest gift that ever marquess gave,

The fairest queen that ever king receiv'd.

K. Hen. Suffolk, arise.—Welcome, Queen Margaret;

I can express no kinder sign of love,

Than this kind kiss.—O Lord, that lends me life,

¹ 'The marquess of Suffolk, as procurator to King Henry, espoused the said lady in the church of St. Martins. At the which marriage were present, the father and mother of the bride; the French king himself, that was uncle to the husband; and the French queen also, that was aunt to the wife. There were also the Dukes of Orleans, of Calabre, of Alanson, and of Britaine: seven earls, twelve barons, twenty bishops.'—Hall and Holinshed.

² I.e. to the gracious hands of you, my sovereign, who are, &c. In the old play the line stands:—
'Unto your gracious excellence, that are.'

Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness!

For thou hast given me, in this beauteous face,

'A world of earthly blessings to my soul,

* If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

Q. Mar. Great king of England, and my gracious lord;

'The mutual conference that my mind hath had'—

'By day, by night; waking, and in my dreams;

'In courtly company, or at my beads,—

'With you mine alder-liest³ sovereign,

'Makes me the bolder to salute my king

'With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,

'And over-joy of heart doth minister.

K. Hen. Her sight did ravish: but her grace in speech,

'Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty,

'Makes me, from wondering fall to weeping joys;⁴

'Such is the fulness of my heart's content.—

'Lords with one cheerful voice welcome my love.

All. Long live Queen Margaret, England's happiness!

Q. Mar. We thank you all.

[Flourish.

Suff. My lord protector, so it please your grace,

Here are the articles of contracted peace,

Between our sovereign and the French king Charles,

For eighteen months concluded by consent.

Glo. [Reads.] Imprimis, It is agreed between the French king, Charles, and William de la Poole, marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry king of England,—that the said Henry shall espouse the lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier king of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem; and crown her queen of England, ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing. Item—That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine, shall be released and delivered to the king her father—

³ I am the bolder to address you, having already familiarized you to my imagination.

⁴ I.e. most beloved of all: from alder, of all; formerly used in composition with adjectives of the superlative degree; and liest, dearest, or most loved.

⁵ This weeping joy, of which there is no trace in the original play, Shakspeare frequently uses. It is introduced in Much Ado about Nothing, King Richard II. Macbeth, and King Lear.

K. Hen. Uncle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord;
Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.

K. Hen. Uncle of Winchester, I pray, read on.

Win. Item,—It is further agreed between them,— that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king her father; and she sent over of the king of England's own proper cost and charges, without having dowry.

K. Hen. They please us well.—Lord marquess, kneel down;

We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk,
And girt thee with the sword.—
Cousin of York, we here discharge your grace
From being regent in the parts of France,
Till term of eighteen months be full expir'd.—
Thanks, uncle Winchester, Gloster, York, and Buckingham,

Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwick;

We thank you all for this great favour done,

In entertainment to my princely queen.

Come, let us in; and with all speed provide

To see her coronation be perform'd.

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.]

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,

To you Duke Humphrey must unload his grief,

Your grief, the common grief of all the land.

What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,

His valour, coin, and people, in the wars?

Did he so often lodge in open field,

In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,

To conquer France, his true inheritance?

And did my brother Bedford toil his wits,

To keep by policy what Henry got?

Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,

Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick,

Receiv'd deep scars in France and Normandy?

Or hath my uncle Beaufort, and myself,

With all the learned council of the realm,

Studied so long, sat in the council-house,

Early and late, debating to and fro

How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe?

And hath his highness in his infancy

Been crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes?

And shall these labours, and these honours, die?

Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,

Your deeds of war, and all our counsel, die?

O peers of England, shameful is this league!

Fatal this marriage, cancelling our fame:

Blotting your names from books of memory:

Razing the characters of your renown:

Defacing monuments of conquer'd France;

Undoing all, as all had never been!

* Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse?

* This peroration with such circumstance?

* For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still.

* Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can;

* But now it is impossible we should:

Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast,

Hath given the duchies of Anjou and Maine

Unto the poor king Reigner, whose large style

Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.*

* Sal. Now, by the death of him that died for all,

* These counties were the keys of Normandy:—

But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son?

* War. For grief, that they are past recovery:

* For, were there hope to conquer them again,

* My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no

tears.

* Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both;

* Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer:

* And are the cities, that I got with wounds,

* Deliver'd up again with peaceful words?

* Mort Dieu!

1 This speech crowded with so many circumstances of aggravation.

2 King Reigner, her father, for all his long style, had too short a purse to send his daughter honourably to the king her spouse.—Hotinshed.

3 The indignation of Warwick is natural, but might have been better expressed: there is a kind of jingle

* York. For Suffolk's duke—may he be suffocate,

* That dims the honour of this warlike isle!

* France should have torn and rent my very heart,

* Before I would have yielded to this league.

* I never read but England's kings have had

* Large sums of gold, and dowries, with their wives:

* And our King Henry gives away his own,

* To match with her that brings no vantages.

* Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before

* That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth,

* For costs and charges in transporting her!

* She should have staid in France, and starv'd in France,

* before—

* Car. My lord of Gloster, now you grow too hot;

* 'Twas the pleasure of my lord the king.

* Glo. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind.

* 'Tis not my speeches that you do mislike,

* But 'tis my presence that doth trouble you.

* Rancour will out: Proud prelate, in thy face

* I see thy fury: if I longer stay,

* We shall begin our ancient bickerings.

Lordings, farewell; and say, when I am gone,

I prophesied—France will be lost ere long. [Exit.]

* Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage.

* 'Tis known to you he is mine enemy:

* Nay, more, an enemy unto you all;

* And no great friend, I fear me, to the king;

* Consider, lords, he is the next of blood,

* And heir apparent to the English crown;

* Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,

* And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,

* There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.

* Look to it, lords; let not his smoothing word

* Bewitch your hearts; be wise, and circumspect.

* What though the common people favour him,

* Calling him—Humphrey the good duke of Gloster;

* Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice—

* Jesus maintain your royal excellence!

* With—God preserve the good duke Humphrey!

* I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,

* He will be found a dangerous protector.

* Buck. Why should he then protect our sovereign,

* He being of age to govern of himself,

* Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,

* And all together—with the duke of Suffolk,

* We'll quickly hoise Duke Humphrey from his seat.

* Car. This weighty business will not brook delay;

* I'll to the duke of Suffolk presently. [Exit.]

* Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's pride,

* And greatness of his place be grief to us,

* Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal;

* His insolence is more intolerable

* Than all the princes in the land beside;

* If Gloster be displac'd, he'll be protector.

* Buck. Or thou, or I, Somerset, will be protector,

* Despight Duke Humphrey, or the cardinal.

[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and SOMERSET.]

* Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him.

* While these do labour for their own preferment,

* Behooves it us to labour for the realm.

* I never saw but Humphrey duke of Gloster

* Did bear him like a noble gentleman.

* Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal—

* More like a soldier, than a man o' the church,

* As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,—

* Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself

* Unlike the ruler of a common-weal.—

* Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age!

* Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy house-keeping,

* Hath won the greatest favour of the commons,

* Excepting none but good duke Humphrey.—

* And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland, intended in wounds and words. In the old play 'the ju-gle is different. And must that then which we won with our swords, be given away with words?

4 Richard Plantagenet, duke of York, married Cicely, the daughter of Ralph Neville, earl of Westmoreland, by Joan, daughter to John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, by his third wife, dame Catharine Swinford. Richard Neville, earl of Salisbury, was son to the earl of Westmore-

'In bringing them to civil discipline;
'Thy late exploits, done in the heart of France,
'When thou wert regent for our sovereign,
'Have made thee fear'd, and honour'd, of the people:—

'Join we together, for the public good;
'In what we can to bridle and suppress
'The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal;
'With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;
'And, as we may, cherish Duke Humphrey's deeds;
'While they do tend the profit of the land.
'War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,
'And common profit of his country!

* York. And so says York, for he hath greatest cause.

Sol. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main! O father, Maine is lost;
That Maine, which by main force Warwick did win,
* And would have kept, so long as breath did last:
Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine;

Which I will win from France, or else be slain.
(Exeunt WARWICK and SALISBURY.)

York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;

* Paris is lost; the state of Normandy

* Stands on a tickle² point, now they are gone:

* Suffolk concluded on the articles;

* The peers agreed; and Henry was well pleas'd,

* To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter,

* I cannot blame them all; What is't to them?

* 'Tis thine they give away, and not their own.

* Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage,

* And purchase friends, and give to courtesans,

* Still revelling, like lords, till all be gone:

* While-as the silly owner of the goods

* Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands,

* And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,

* While all is shar'd, and all is borne away;

* Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own.

* So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,

* While his own lands are bargain'd for, and sold.

* Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Ireland,

* Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood,

* As did the fatal brand Althea burn'd,

* Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.³

Anjou and Maine, both given unto the French!

Cold news for me; for I had hope of France,

Even as I have of fertile England's soil.

A day will come, when York shall claim his own;

And therefore I will take the Nevils' parts,

And make a show of love to proud Duke Humphrey,

And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown,

For that's the golden mark I seek to hit:

Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,

Nor hold his sceptre in his childish fist,

Nor wear the diadem upon his head,

Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown.

Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve:

Watch thou, and wake, when others be asleep,

To pry into the secrets of the state;

Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,

With his new bride, and England's dear-bought

queen,

And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars;

Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,

With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd;

And in my standard bear the arms of York,

To grapple with the house of Lancaster;

And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,

Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.

Exit.

SCENE II. The same. A Room in the Duke of Gloster's House. Enter GLOSTER and the Duchess.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,

Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load?

* Why doth the great Duke Humphrey knit his brows,

* As frowning at the favours of the world?

* Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,

* Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight?

* What seest thou there? King Henry's diadem,

* Enchas'd with all the honours of the world?

* If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,

* Until thy head be circled with the same.

* Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold:—

* What, is't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine:

* And having both together heav'd it up,

* We'll both together lift our heads to heaven;

* And never more abase our sight so low,

* As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.

* Glo. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy

lord,

* Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts:

* And may that thought, when I imagine ill

* Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry

* Be my last breathing in this mortal world!

* My troublous dream this night doth make me sad.

* Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it

* With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.

* Glo. Methought, this staff, mine office-badge in court,

* Was broke in twain, by whom, I have forgot,

* But, as I think, it was by the cardinal;

* And on the pieces of the broken wand

* Were plac'd the heads of Edmond duke of Somerset,

* And William de la Poole, first duke of Suffolk.

* This was my dream; what doth it bode, God knows.

* Duch. Tut, this was nothing but an argument,

That he that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove,

* Shall lose his head for his presumption.

* But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke:

* Methought I sat in seat of majesty,

* In the cathedral church of Westminster,

* And in that chair where kings and queens are crown'd;

* Where Henry, and dame Margaret, kneel'd to me,

* And on my head did set the diadem.

* Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright:

* Presumptuous dame, ill nurtur'd Eleanor!

Art thou not second woman in the realm;

* And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?

* Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,

* Above the reach or compass of thy thought?

* And wilt thou still be hammering treachery,

* To tumble down thy husband, and thyself,

* From top of honour to disgrace's feet?

Away from me, and let me hear no more.

* Duch. What, what, my lord! are you so cho-leric

* With Eleanor, for telling but her dream?

* Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself,

* And not be check'd.

* Glo. Nay, be not angry, I am pleas'd again.

Enter a Messenger.

* Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness'

pleasure.

* You do prepare to ride into Saint Albans,

* Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk.

* Glo. I go.—Come, Nell, thou wilt ride with us?

land by a second wife. He married Alice, only daughter of Thomas Montacute, earl of Salisbury, who was killed at the siege of Orleans (see Part I. of this play, Act. I. Sc. 3.), and in consequence of that alliance obtained the title of Salisbury in 1429. His eldest son, Richard, having married the sister and heir of Henry Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was created earl of Warwick, 1440.

1 This is an anachronism. The present scene is in 1445; but Richard, Duke of York, was not viceroy of Ireland till 1449.

2 Tickle is frequently used for ticklish by ancient writers.

3 Meleager; whose life was to continue only so long as a certain firebrand should last. His mother Althea having thrown it into the fire, he expired in torment.

4 Ill nurtur'd is ill educated.

5 Whereas for where; a common substitution in old language, as where is often used for whereas.

* Duch. Yes, good my lord, I'll follow presently.
[Exeunt GLOSTER and Messenger.]
 * Follow I must, I cannot go before,
 * While Gloster bears this base and humble mind.
 * Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
 * I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks,
 * And smooth my way upon their headless necks:
 * And, being a woman, I will not be slack
 * To play my part in fortune's pageant.
 * Where are you there? Sir John! nay, fear not,
 man,
 * We are alone; here's none but thee, and I.

Enter HUME.

Hume. Jesu preserve your royal majesty!
 * Duch. What say'st thou, majesty? I am but grace.
Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's advice,
 * Your grace's title shall be multiplied.
 * Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet conferr'd
 * With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch?;
 * And Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer?
 * And will they undertake to do me good?
 * Hume. They have promised,—to show your highness
 * A spirit rais'd from depth of under ground,
 * That shall make answer to such questions,
 * As by your grace shall be propounded him.
 * Duch. It is enough; I'll think upon the questions:
 * When from Saint Albans we do make return,
 * We'll see these things effected to the full.
 * Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry, man,
 * With thy confederates in this weighty cause.

[Exit Duchess.]

* Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold;
 * Marry, and shall. But how now, Sir John Hume?
 * Seal up your lips, and give no words but—mum!
 * The business asketh silent secrecy.
 * Dame Eleanor gives gold, to bring the witch:
 * Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil.
 * Yet have I gold, flies from another coast:
 I dare not say, from the rich cardinal,
 And from the great and new-made duke of Suffolk;
 * Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,
 * They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humour,
 * Have hired me to undermine the duchess,
 * And buz these conjurations in her brain.
 * They say, A crafty knave does need no broker;
 * Yet am I Suffolk and the cardinal's broker.
 * Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near
 * To call them both—a pair of crafty knaves.
 * Well, so it stands: And thus, I fear, at last,
 * Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck;
 * And her attainure will be Humphrey's fall:
 * Sort how it will,¹ I shall have gold for all. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in the Palace.
Enter PETER, and others, with Petitions.

* 1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close; my lord

'protector will come this way by and by, and then
 * 'we may deliver our supplications in the quill.'
 * 2 Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a
 * 'good man! Jesu bless him!

Enter SUFFOLK, and QUEEN MARGARET.

* 1 Pet. Here 'a comes, methinks, and the queen
 * with him: I'll be the first, sure.
 * 2 Pet. Come back, fool; this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.
 * Suff. How now, fellow? would'st any thing with
 me?

* 1 Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me! I took ye
 * for my lord protector.

* Q. Mar. [Reading the superscription.] To my
 * 'lord protector! are your supplications to his lord-
 * 'ship? Let me see them: What is thine?

* 1 Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against
 * John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keep-
 * 'ing my house, and lands, and wife and all, from
 me.

* Suff. Thy wife too? that is some wrong indeed.
 * —What's yours?—What's here? [Reads.] Against the duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Maford.—How now, sir knave?

* 2 Pet. Alas, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

* Peter. [Presenting his petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying, That the duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

* Q. Mar. What say'st thou? did the duke of
 * York say, he was rightful heir to the crown?

* Peter. That my master was? No, forsooth: my * master said, That he was; and that the king was
 * 'an usurper.'

* Suff. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently:—we'll hear more of your matter before the king. [Exeunt Servants, with Peter.]

* Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected

* Under the wings of our protector's grace,
 * Begun your suits anew, and sue to him.

[Tears the Petition.]

* Away, base cullions!—Suffolk, let them go.

* Al. Come, let's be gone. [Exeunt Petitioners.]

* Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise,

* Is this the fashion in the court of England?

* Is this the government of Britain's isle,

* And this the royalty of Albion's king?

* What, shall King Henry be a pupil still,

* Under the surly Gloster's governance?

* Am I a queen in title and in style,

* And must be made a subject to a duke?

* I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours

* Thou rann'st a tilt in honour of my love,

* And stol'st away the ladies' hearts of France;

* I thought King Henry had resembled thee,

* In courage, courtship, and proportion:

* But all his mind is bent to holiness,

* To number Ave-Maries on his beads:

* His champions are—the prophets and apostles,

¹ A title frequently bestowed on the clergy. See the first note on the Merry Wives of Windsor.

² It appears from Rymer's Federa, vol. x. p. 506, that in the tenth year of Henry VI. Margery Jourdain, John Virley Clerk, and Friar John Ashwell, were, on the ninth of May, brought from Windsor by the constable of the castle, to which they had been committed for sorcery, before the council at Westminster, and afterwards committed to the custody of the Lord Chancellor. It was ordered that whenever the said Virley and Ashwell should find security for their good behaviour they should be set at liberty, and in like manner that Jourdainyn should be discharged on her husband's finding security. This woman was afterwards burned in Smithfield, as stated in the play, and also in the Chronicles.

³ This expression was proverbial.

⁴ Let the issue be what it will.

⁵ There have been some strange conjectures in explanation of this phrase, in the quill. Steevens says that it may mean no more than written or penned supplications. Mr. Tollet thinks it means with great exact-ness and observance of form, in allusion to the quilled or platted ruffs. Hawkins suggests that it may be the same with the French en quille, said of a man when he stands upright upon his feet, without moving from the place, in allusion to quille, a ninepin. It appears to be nothing more than an intention to mark the vulgar pronunciation of 'in the coil,' i. e. in the bustle. This word is spelt in the old dictionaries quill, and was no doubt often pronounced by ignorant persons quile, or quill.

⁶ This wrong seems to have been sometimes practised in Shakespeare's time. Among the Lansdowne
 MSS. we meet with the following singular petition:—
 'Julius Bogarucius to the Lord Treasurer. In Latin, complaining that the Master of the Rolls keeps his time from him in his own house, and wishes he may not teach her to be a papist.'

⁷ The quarto reads 'an usurer.'

* Queen. An usurper thou would'st say,
 Ay—an usurper.

8 I. e. scoundrels; from cogioni, Ital.

* His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ ;
 * His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves
 * Are brazen images of canonized saints.
 * I would, the college of cardinals
 * Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,
 * And set the triple crown upon his head ;
 * That were a state fit for his holiness.
 * Suff. Madam, be patient ; as I was cause
 * Your highness came to England, so will I
 * In England work your grace's full content.
 * Q. Mar. Beside the haught protector, have we Beaufort,
 * The imperious churchman ; Somerset, Buckingham,
 * And grumbling York : and not the least of these,
 * But can do more in England than the king.
 * Suff. And he of these, that can do most of all,
 * Cannot do more in England than the Nevils :
 * Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.
 * Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much,
 * As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife.
 * She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
 * More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's
 wife ;
 Strangers in court do take her for the queen :
 * She bears a duke's revenges on her back,
 * And in her heart she scorns her poverty :
 * Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her ?
 * Contemptuous base-born callat as she is,
 * She vaunted 'mongst her minions t'other day,
 The very train of her worst wearing-gown
 Was better worth than all my father's lands,
 * Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms¹ for his daughter.
 * Suff. Madam, myself have lim'd a bush for her ;²
 * And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
 * That she will light to listen to the lays,
 * And never mount to trouble you again.
 * So, let her rest ; And, madam, list to me :
 * For I am bold to counsel you in this.
 * Although we fancy not the cardinal,
 * Yet must we join with him, and with the lords,
 * Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace.
 * As for the duke of York, this late complaint³
 * Will make but little for his benefit :
 * So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last,
 * And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Enter KING HENRY, YORK, and SOMERSET, conversing with him ; DUKE and DUCHESS OF GLOU-CESTER, CARDINAL BEAUFORT, BUCKINGHAM,
 SALISBURY, and WARWICK.

K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which ;

Or Somerset, or York, all's one to me.
York. If York have ill demean'd himself in France,

Then let him be deny'd⁴ the regentship.

Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,
 Let York be regent, I will yield to him.

War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no,
 Dispute not that : York is the worthier.

Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy betters speak.

War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.

Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.

War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.

* Sal. Peace, son ;—and show some reason,
 Buckingham,

* Why Somerset should be preferr'd in this.

* Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.

* Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself

' To give his censure : these are no women's matters.

Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your grace

' To be protector of his excellence ?

* Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm ;

* And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.

* Suff. Resign it then, and leave thine insolence.

* Since thou wert king (as who is king, but thou ?)

* The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck :

* The Dauphin hath prevail'd beyond the seas

* And all the peers and nobles of the realm

* Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.

* Car. The commons hast thou rack'd ; the clergy's bags

* Are lank and lean with thy extortions.

* Som. Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,

* Have cost a mass of public treasury.

* Buck. Thy cruelty in execution,

* Upon offenders, hath exceeded law,

* And left thee to the mercy of the law.

* Q. Mar. Thy sale of offices, and towns in France,—

* If they were known, as the suspect is great,—

* Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.

[Exit GLOUCESTER. The Queen drops her Fan.]

* Give me my fan : What, minion ! can you not ?

[Gives the Duchess a box on the ear.]

* I cry you mercy, madam ; Was it you ?

* Duch. Was't I ? yea, I it was, proud French-
 woman :

* Could I come near your beauty with my nails,
 I'd set my ten commandments in your face.

* K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet ; 'twas against her will.

* Duch. Against her will ! Good king, look to't in time ;

* She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby :

* Though in this place most master wear no
 breeches,

She shall not strike dame Eleanor unreveng'd.
 [Exit DUCHESS.]

* Buck. Lord cardinal, I will follow Eleanor,

* And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds ;

* She's tickled now ; her fume needs no spurs,

* She'll gallop fast enough to her destruction.
 [Exit BUCKINGHAM.]

Re-enter GLOUCESTER.

* Glo. Now, lords, my choler being over-blown,

* With walking once about the quadrangle,

* I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.

* As for your spiteful false objections,

* Prove them, and I lie open to the law :

* But God in mercy so deal with my soul,

* As I in duty love my king and country !

* But, to the matter that we have in hand :

* I say, my sovereign, York is meekest man,

* To be your regent in the realm of France.

* Suff. Before we make election, give me leave

* To show some reason, of no little force,

* That York is most unmeet of any man.

* York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet.

* First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride :

* Next, if I be appointed for the place,

* My lord of Somerset will keep me here,

* Without discharge, money, or furniture,

* Till France be won into the Dauphin's hands.

* Last time, I danc'd attendance on his will,

* Till Paris was besieg'd, famish'd, and lost,

* War. That I can witness ; and a fouler fact

* Did never traitor in the land commit.

* Suff. Peace, headstrong Warwick !

War. Image of pride, why should I hold my peace ?

1 The duchies of Anjou and Maine, which Henry surrendered to Reigner on his marriage with Margaret.

2 In the original play :—

' I have set lime-twig that will entangle them.'

3 I.e. the complaint of Peter the armourer's man against his master, for saying that York was the rightful king

4 Denay is frequently used instead of deny among the old writers.

5 Censure here means simply judgment or opinion, the sense in which it was used by all the writers of the time.

6 This appears to have been a popular phrase for the hands or ten fingers

Enter Servants of SUFFOLK, bringing in HORNER and PETREK.

Suff. Because here is a man accus'd of treason:
Pray God, the duke of York excuse himself!

* York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor?

* K. Hen. What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell me:
What are these?

* Suff. Please it your majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his master of high treason:
His words were these;—that Richard, duke of York,

' Was rightful heir unto the English crown;

' And that your majesty was an usurper.

* K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words?

Hor. An't shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter: God is my witness,
I am falsely accused by the villain.

* Pet. By these ten bones,¹ my lords, [holding up his hands.] he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my lord of York's armour.

* York. Base dunghill villain, and mechanical,
* I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech;
* I do beseech your royal majesty,
* Let him have all the rigour of the law.

Hor. Alas, my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witness of this; therefore, I beseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

* K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

* Glo. This doom, my lord, if I may judge.

* Let Somerset be regent o'er the French,
* Because in York this breeds suspicion;
* And let these have a day appointed them
* For single combat in convenient place;
* For he hath witness of his servant's malice:
This is the law, and this Duke Humphrey's doom.

* K. Hen. Then be it so. My lord of Somerset,

We make your grace lord regent o'er the French.²

Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty.

Hor. And I accept the combat willingly.

* Pet. Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; * for God's * sake, pity my case! the spite of man prevailleth * against me. O, Lord have mercy upon me! I * shall never be able to fight a blow: O Lord, my
* heart!

* Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight, or else be hang'd.

* K. Hen. Away with them to prison: and the day

* Of combat shall be the last of the next month.—

* Come, Somerset, we'll see thee sent away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. The same. The Duke of Gloucester's
Garden. Enter MARGERY JOURDAIN, HUME, SOUTHWELL, and BOLINGBROKE.

* Hume. Come, my masters; the duchess, I tell
* you, expects performance of your promises.

* Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore pro* vided: Will her ladyship behold and hear our
* exorcisms?³

* Hume. Ay; What else? fear you not her cou-
* rage.

¹ We have just heard a duchess threaten to set her ten commandments in the face of a queen. We have here again a similar vulgar expression. It is, however, a very ancient popular adjuration, and may be found in many old dramatic pieces.

² Theobald inserted these two lines from the old play, because without them the king has not declared his assent to Gloucester's opinion: and the duke of Somerset is made to thank him for his regency before the king has deputed him to it. Malone supposes that Shakespeare thought Henry's consent to Humphrey's doom might be expressed by a nod; and therefore omits the lines.

³ By exorcise Shakespeare invariably means to raise spirits, and not to lay them. Vide note on All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. Sc. 3.

⁴ Mutter or business.

⁵ The old quarto reads 'the silence of the night.'
The variation of the copies is worth notice:—

'Dark night, dread night, the silence of the night,

* Boling. I have heard her reported to be a wo* man of an invincible spirit: But it shall be con* venient, master Hume, that you be by her aloft,
* while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go
* in God's name, and leave us. [Exit HUME.]
* Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth;—* John Southwell, read you; and let
* us to our work.

Enter Duchess, above.

* Duch. Well said, my masters; and welcome
* all. To this gear; * the sooner the better.

* Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times:

Deep night, dark night, the silent⁴ of the night.

* The time of night when Troy was set on fire

* The time when screechowls cry, and ban-dogs⁵

howl,

* And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves,

* That time best fits the work we have in hand.

* Madam, sit you, and fear not; whom we raise,

* We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

[Here they perform the Ceremonies appertaining, and make the Circle; BOLINGBROKE, or SOUTHWELL, reads, Conjuro te, &c. It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.

* Spir. Adams.

* M. Jourd. Asmath,

* By the eternal God, whose name and power

* Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask;

* For, till thou speak, thou shalt not pass from hence.

* Spir. Ask what thou wilt:—That I had said and done!

Boling. First, of the king. What shall of him become? [Reading out of a paper.

Spir. The duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose;

But him outlive, and die a violent death.

[As the Spirit speaks SOUTHWELL writes the answer

Boling. What fate awaits the duke of Suffolk?

Spir. By water shall he die, and take his end.

Boling. What shall befall the duke of Somerset?

Spir. Let him shun castles;

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains

Than where castles mounted stand.

* Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Boling. Descend to darkness, and the burning lake;

* False fiend, avoid!

[Thunder and Lightning. Spirit descends.

Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM, hastily, with their Guards, and others.

* York. Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash.

* Beldame. I think, we watch'd you at an inch.—

* What, madam, are you there? the king and commonweal

* Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains;

* My lord protector will, I doubt it not,

* See you well guarden'd⁶ for these good deserts.

* Duch. Not half so bad as time to England's king,

* Injurious duke; that threat'et where is no cause.

Wherein the furies mask in hellish troops,
Send up, I charge you, from Cocytus' lake
The spirit of Aescalon to come to me,
To pierce the bowels of this centric earth,
And hither come in twinkling of an eye!
Aescalon, ascend, ascend!—

Warburton, in a learned but erroneous note, wished to prove that an inter-lunar night was meant. Steevens has justly observed that silent is here used by the poet as a substantive.

⁶ Ban-dog, or band-dog, any great fierce dog which required to be tied or chained up. 'Canis molossus, a mastive, beare-dog, or bull-dog.' It is sometimes called in the dictionaries canis catenarius.

⁷ It was anciently believed that spirits who were raised by incantations, remained above ground, and answered questions with reluctance. See both Lucan and Statius.

⁸ Rewarded.

* Book. True, madam, none at none. What call you this? [Showing her the papers.]
 ' Away with them; let them be clapp'd up close,
 ' And kept asunder:—You, madam, shall with us:
 ' Stafford, take her to thee.—

[Exit Duchess from above.]
 ' We'll see your trinkets here all forth-coming;
 ' All.—Away!

[Exeunt Guards, with SOUTH. BOLING. &c.]
 * York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd her well:

* A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon!
 Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.
 What have we here?

*The duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose;
 But him outline, and die a violent death.*

* Why, this is just,
 * Aio te, Ecceida, Romanos vincere posse.
 Well, to the rest:

Tell me, what fate awaits the duke of Suffolk?
 By water shall he die, and take his end.—

What shall befall the duke of Somerset?
 Let him shun castles;

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains,
 Than where castles mounted stand.

* Come, come, my lords;
 * These oracles are hardly attain'd,
 * And hardly understood.

The king is now in progress toward Saint Albans,
 With him the husband of this lovely lady:

Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry them;

A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.
 ' Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of York,

To be the post, in hope of his reward.
 ' York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—Who's within there, ho!

Enter a Servant.

' Invite my lords of Salisbury, and Warwick,
 ' To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away!

ACT II.

SCENE I. Saint Albans. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, GLOSTER, Cardinal, and SURREY, with Falconers following.

' Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,

' I saw not better sport these seven years' day:
 ' Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high;
 And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.

' K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,

' And what a pitch she flew above the rest!—
 ' To see how God in all his creatures works!

* Yes, man and birds, are fain¹ of climbing high.
 Suff. No marvel, an it like your majesty;

My lord protector's hawks do tower so well;
 They know their master loves to be aloft,

* And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.
 Glo. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind

That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

1 The falconer's term for hawking at water-fowl.

2 Johnson was informed that the meaning here is, 'the wind being high, it was ten to one that the old hawk had flown quite away; a trick which hawks often play their masters in windy weather.' But surely, not going out cannot signify not coming home. Dr. Percy's interpretation is entirely opposed to this: he explains it, —'The wind was so high it was ten to one that old Joan would not have taken her flight at the game.' Steevens says, 'The ancient books of hawking do not enable him to decide on the merits of such discordant explanations.' I think, if he had looked into Latham's Falconry, he would have found that Dr. Percy's is the right explanation. 'When you shall come afterward to fly her she must be altogether guided and governed by her stomack; yea, she will be kept and also lost by the same: for let her fall of that never so little, and every puff of wind will blow her away from you; nay, if there be no

' Car. I thought as much; he'd be above it clouds.

' Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal; How think you by that?

Were it not good, your grace could fly to heaven?
 * K. Hen. The treasury of everlasting joy!

' Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts

' Beat on a crown,⁴ the treasure of thy heart;
 Pernicious protector, dangerous peer,
 That smooth'st it so with king and commonweal!

' Glo. What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown peremptory?

* Tantane animis celestibus ira?
 ' Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such malice;

' With such holiness can you do it?
 ' Suff. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes

' So good a quarrel, and so bad a peer.
 Glo. As who, my lord?

Suff. Why, as you, my lord;
 An't like your lordly lord protectorship.

Glo. Why, Suffolk, England knows thine insolence.

Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloster.
 K. Hen. I prythee, peace

Good queen; and whet not on these furious peers,
 For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.

Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make,
 Against this proud protector, with my sword!

Glo. 'Faith, holy uncle, 'would 'twere come to that!

' Car. Marry, when thou dar'st. [Aside to the Cardinal.]

' Glo. Make up no factious numbers for the matter,

' In thine own person answer thy abuse. [Aside.]

' Car. Ay, where thou dar'st not peep: an if thou dar'st,

' This evening, on the east side of the grove. [Aside.]

' K. Hen. How now, my lords?

' Car. Believe me, cousin Gloster,
 ' Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,

' We had had more sport.—Come with thy two-hand-sword.⁶ [Aside to Glo.]

Glo. True, uncle.
 Car. Are you advie'd?—the east side of the grove?

Glo. Cardinal, I am with you. [Aside.]

' K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloster?

' Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord—

Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your crown for this.

* Or all my fence⁷ shall fail. [Aside.]

* Car. Medice teipsum;
 ' Protector, see to't well, protect yourself. } [Aside.]

' K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomaches, lords.

* How irksome is this music to my heart!

* When such strings jar, what hope of harmony?
 * I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter an Inhabitant of Saint Albans, crying
 A Miracle!

Glo. What means this noise?
 Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?

wind stirring, yet she will wheele and sinke away from him and from his voice, that all the time before had lured and trained her up.' Booke I. p. 60, Ed. 1633.

3 I. e. fond or glad.

4 I. e. thy mind is working on a crown.

5 Vide St. Matthew, v. 9.

6 The 'two-hand-sword' was sometimes called the long sword, and in common use before the introduction of the rapier. Justice Shallow, in the Merry Wives of Windsor, boasts of the exploits he had performed in his youth with this instrument. In the original play the Cardinal desires Gloster to bring his sword and buckler.

7 Fence is the art of defence.

8 This scene is founded on a story which Sir Thomas More has related, and which he says was communicated to him by his father. The impostor's name is not mentioned; but he was detected by Humphrey Duke of Gloster, and in the manner here represented. See More's Works, p. 134, Ed. 1657.

Inhab. A miracle! a miracle!

Suff. Come to the king, and tell him what miracle.

Inhab. Forsooth, a blind man at Saint Alban's shrine.

Within this half hour, hath receiv'd his sight;

A man, that ne'er saw in his life before.

* K. Hen. Now, God be prais'd! that to believing souls

Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Albans, and his Brethren; and SIMPCOX, borne between two Persons in a Chair; his Wife, and a great Multitude, following.

* Car. Here come the townsmen on procession,

* To present your highness with the man.

* K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,

* Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.

* Glo. Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king,

* His highness' pleasure is to talk with him.

* K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

* That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

What, hast thou been long blind, and now restor'd?

Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace.

Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.

Suff. What woman is this?

Wife. His wife, an't like your worship.

Glo. Had'st thou been his mother, thou could'st have better told.

K. Hen. Where wert thou born?

Simp. At Berwick in the north, an't like your grace.

* K. Hen. Poor soul! God's goodness hath been great to thee:

* Let never day nor night unhallow'd pass,

* But still remember what the Lord hath done.

* Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, cam'st thou here by chance,

* Or of devotion, to this holy shrine?

* Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd

* A hundred times, and often, in my sleep

* By good Saint Alban; who said,—Simpcox, come;

* Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.

* Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft

* Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

Car. What, art thou lame?

Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!

Suff. How cam'st thou so?

Simp. A fall of a tree.

Wife. A plum-tree, master.

Glo. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O, born so, master.

Glo. What, and would'st climb a tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

* Wife. Too true; and bought his climbing very dear.

* Glo. 'Mass, thou lov'd'st plums well, that would'st venture so.

* Simp. Alas, good master, my wife desir'd some damsons.

And made me climb, with danger of my life.

* Glo. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve.—

* Let me see thine eyes:—wink now;—now open them:—

In my opinion yet thou see'st not well.

* Simp. Yes, master, clear as day; I thank God, and Saint Alban.

Glo. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this cloak of!

Simp. Red, master: red as blood.

Glo. Why, that's well said: What colour is my gown of?

Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet.

* K. Hen. Why then, thou know'st what colour jet is of!

Suff. And yet, I think, jet did be never see.

Glo. But cloaks, and gowns, before this day, a many.

* Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.

Glo. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name?

Simp. Alas, master, I know not.

Glo. What's his name?

Simp. I know not.

Glo. Nor his?

Simp. No, indeed, master.

Glo. What's thine own name?

Simp. Saunder Simpcox, an if it please you, master.

Glo. Then, Saunder, sit thou there, the lyingest knave

In Christendom. If thou hadst been born blind, Thou might'st as well have known our names, as thus

To name the several colours we do wear.

Sight may distinguish of colours; but suddenly

To nominate them all, 's impossible.—

My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle;

Add would ye not think that cunning to be great,

That could restore this cripple to his legs?

Simp. O, master, that you could!

Glo. My masters of Saint Albans, have you not beadles in your town, and things called whips?

May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.

Glo. Then send for one presently.

May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight.

[Exit an Attendant.]

Glo. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by.

[A Stool brought out.] Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool, and run away.

Simp. Alas, master, I am not able to stand alone: You go about to torture me in vain.

Re-enter Attendant, with the Beadle.

Glo. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs. Sirrah beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.

Bead. I will, my lord.—Come on, sirrah: off with your doublet quickly.

Simp. Alas, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the Stool, and runs away; and the People follow, and cry, A miracle!]

* K. Hen. O God, seest thou this, and hear'st so long?

* Q. Mar. It made me laugh, to see the villain run.

* Glo. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.

* Wife. Alas, sir, we did it for pure need.

Glo. Let them be whipped through every market town, till they come to Berwick, whence they came.

[Exeunt Mayor, Beadle, Wife, &c.]

* Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.

* Suff. True; made the lame to leap, and fly away.

* Glo. But you have done more miracles than I;

* You made, in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

* K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?

* Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.

* A sort¹ of naughty persons, lowly² bent,—

* Under the countenance and confederacy,

* Of Lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,

* The ringleader and head of all this rout,—

* Have practis'd dangerously against your state,

* Dealing with witches, and with conjurers;

* Whom we have apprehended in the fact;

* Raising up wicked spirits from under ground,

* Demanding of King Henry's life and death,

* And other of your highness' privy council,

* As more at large your grace shall understand.

* Car. And so, my lord protector, by this means

* Your lady is forthcoming³ yet at London.

* This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge:

* 'Tis like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.

[Aside to GLOSTER.]

² I. e. wickedly, knavishly.

³ I. e. your lady is in custody.

- * Glo. Ambitious churchman, leave to afflict my heart!
- * Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers:
- * And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,
- * Or to the meanest groom.
- * K. Hen. O God, what mischiefs work the wicked ones;
- * Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!
- * Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;
- * And, look thyself be faultless, thou wert best.
- * Glo. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal,
- * How I have lov'd my king, and commonweal:
- * And, for my wife, I know not how it stands;
- * Sorry I am to hear what I have heard:
- * Noble she is; but if she have forgot
- * Honour, and virtue, and convers'd with such
- * As, like to pitch, defile nobility,
- * I banish her my bed, and company;
- * And give her, as a prey, to law and shame,
- * That hath dishonour'd Gloster's honest name.
- * K. Hen. Well, for this night, we will repose us here:
- * To-morrow, toward London, back again,
- * To look into this business thoroughly,
- * And call these foul offenders to their answers;
- * And poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
- * Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. [Flourish. Exeunt.]
- SCENE II. London. The Duke of York's Garden. Enter YORK, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.
- * York. Now, my good lords of Salisbury and Warwick,
- * Our simple supper ended, give me leave
- * In this close walk, to satisfy myself,
- * In craving your opinion of my title,
- * Which is infallible to England's crown.
- * Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full.
- * War. Sweet York, begin; and if thy claim be good,
- The Nevils are thy subjects to command.
- * York. Then thus:—
- * Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons:
- * The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales;
- * The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
- * Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom,
- * Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster;
- * The fifth, was Edmund Langley, duke of York;
- * The sixth, was Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloster;
- * William of Windsor was the seventh, and last.
- * Edward, the Black Prince, died before his father;
- * And left behind him Richard, his only son,
- * Who, after Edward the Third's death, reign'd as king;
- * Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,
- * The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
- * Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth,
- * Seiz'd on the realm; and depos'd the rightful king;
- * Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came,
- * And him to Pomfret; where, as you all know,
- * Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.
- * War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;
- * Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.
- * York. Which now they hold by force, and not by right;
- * For Richard, the first son's heir being dead,
- * The issue of the next son should have reign'd.
- * Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir.
- * York. The third son, duke of Clarence (from whose line
- * I claim the crown,) had issue—Philippe, a daughter,
- * Who married Edmund Mortimer, earl of March,
- * Edmund had issue—Roger, earl of March:
- * Roger had issue—Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor.
- * Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
- * As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
- * And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king,
- * Who kept him in captivity, till he died.
- * But, to the rest.
- * York. His eldest sister, Anne,
- * My mother being heir unto the crown,
- * Married Richard, earl of Cambridge; who was son
- * To Edmund Langley, Edward the Third's fifth son.
- * By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir
- * To Roger, earl of March; who was the son
- * Of Edmund Mortimer; who married Philippe,
- * Sole daughter unto Lionel, duke of Clarence:
- * So, if the issue of the elder son
- * Succeed before the younger, I am king.
- * War. What plain proceedings are more plain than this?
- * Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
- * The fourth son; York claims it from the third.
- * Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:
- * It fails not yet; but flourishes in thee,
- * And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.—
- * Then, father Salisbury, kneel we both together;
- * And, in this private plot, be we the first,
- * That shall salute our rightful sovereign
- * With honour of his birthright to the crown.
- * Both. Long live our sovereign Richard, England's king!
- * York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your king
- * Till I be crown'd; and that my sword be stain'd
- * With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster.
- * And that's not suddenly to be perform'd;
- * But with advice and silent secrecy.
- * Do you, as I do, in these dangerous days,
- * Wink at the duke of Suffolk's insolence,
- * At Beaufort's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
- * At Buckingham, and all the crew of them,
- * Till they have snar'd the shepherd of the flock,
- * That virtuous prince, the good Duke Humphrey:

1 In the original play the words are, 'as you both know.' The phraseology of the text is peculiar to Shakspeare.

2 In Act ii. Sc. 5, of the last play, York, to whom this is spoken, is present at the death of Edmund Mortimer in prison; and the reader will recollect him to have been married to Owen Glendower's daughter in the First Part of King Henry IV.

3 Some of the mistakes of the historians and the drama concerning Edmund Mortimer, earl of March, are noticed in a note to the former play; where he is introduced an aged and gray-haired prisoner in the Tower, and represented as having been confined 'since Harry Monmouth first began to reign.' Yet here we are told he was kept in captivity by Owen Glendower till he died. The fact is, that Hafl having said Owen Glendower kept his son-in-law, Lord Grey of Ruthvin, in captivity till he died, and this Lord March having been said by some historians to have married Owen's daughter, the author of this play has confounded them with each other. This Edmund being only six years of age at the death of his father, in 1398, he was delivered by King Henry IV. in ward to his son Henry prince of Wales, and during the whole of that reign, being a minor, and related to the family on the throne, he was under the particular care of the king. At the age of ten years, in 1402, he headed a body of Herefordshire men against Owen Glendower, and was taken prisoner by him. The Percies, in the manifesto they published before the battle of Shrewsbury, speak of him as rightful heir to the crown, whom Owen had confined, and whom, finding for political reasons that the king would not ransom him, they at their own charges had ransomed. If he was at the battle of Shrewsbury, he was probably brought there against his will, to grace their cause, and was under the care of the king soon after. Great trust was reposed in this earl of March during the whole reign of King Henry V. In the sixth year of that king he was at the siege of Frenes, with the earl of Salisbury; and soon afterwards with the king himself at the siege of Melun. In the same year he was made lieutenant of Normandy; was at Melun with Henry to treat of his marriage with Catharine; and accompanied that queen when she returned from France with the corpse of her husband, in 1423, and died two years afterwards at his castle of Trim, in Ireland.

4 Sequestered spot.

- * 'Tis that they seek : and they, in seeking that,
 * Shall find their deaths, if York can prophesy.
 * Sol. My lord, break we off ; we know your mind at full.
 * War. My heart assures me, that the earl of Warwick
 * Shall one day make the duke of York a king.
 * York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself,—
 * Richard shall live to make the earl of Warwick
 * The greatest man in England, but the king.
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Hall of Justice.
Trumpets sounded. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN
MARGARET, GLOSTER, YORK, SUFFOLK, and
SALISBURY; the Duchess of Gloster, MARG-ERY JOURDAIN, SOUTHWELL, HUME, and BOLINGBROKE, under guard.

- * K. Hen. Stand forth, dame Eleanor Cobham, Gloster's wife :
 * In sight of God, and us, your guilt is great ;
 * Receive the sentence of the law, for sins
 * Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death.—
 * You four, from hence to prison back again ;

[To JOURN. &c.]

- * From thence, unto the place of execution :
 * The witch in Smithfield shall be burn'd to ashes.
 * And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.—
 * You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
 * Despoiled of your honour in your life,
 * Shall after three days' open penance done,
 * Live in your country here, in banishment,
 * With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man.
 * Duch. Welcome is banishment, welcome were my death.

- * Glo. Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath judged
 thee ;

- * I cannot justify whom the law condemns.—
 [Exeunt the Duchess, and the other prisoners guarded.]

- * Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
 * Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
 * Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground !
 * I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go ;
 * Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease.

- * K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey duke of Gloster : ere thou go,

- * Give up thy staff ; Henry will to himself
 * Protector be : and God shall be my hope,
 * My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet ;
 * And go in peace, Humphrey ; no less belov'd,
 * Than when thou wert protector to thy king.

- * Q. Mar. I see no reason, why a king of years
 * Should be to be protected like a child.—

- * God and King Henry govern England's helm :
 * Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.

- * Glo. My staff?—here, noble Henry, is my staff ;
 * As willingly do I the same resign,

- * As e'er thy father Henry made it mine ;
 * And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,
 * As others would ambitiously receive it.

- * Farewell, good king : When I am dead and gone,
 May honourable peace attend thy throne ! [Exit.]

- * Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen ;

- * And Humphrey, duke of Gloster, scarce himself,

1 I.e. sorrow requires solace, and age requires ease.
 2 The image is probably from our Liturgy :—'A lantern to my feet, and a light to my paths.'

3 Requies is the ancient prescriptive of the verb requiescere. Shakespeare uses it in Antony and Cleopatra, Act iv. Sc.
 9 :—'The hand of death has requies him.'

4 Her in this line relates to pride, and not to Eleanor.
 The pride of Eleanor dies before it has reached maturity.

5 I.e. let him pass out of your thoughts. Duke Humphrey had already left the stage.

6 In a worse plight.

7 As, according to the old law of duels, knights were to fight with the lance and the sword, so those of inferior rank fought with an ebony staff, or baton, to the further end of which was fixed a bag crammed hard with sand.

8 Charneco appears to have been a kind of sweet

- * That bears so shrewd a main ; two pulls at once,—
 * His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off.
 * This staff of honour raught, there let it stand,
 * Where it best fits to be, in Henry's hand.
 * Suff. Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays ;

- * Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days.*
 * York. Lords, let him go.—Please it your majesty,

- * This is the day appointed for the combat ;
 * And ready are the appellant and defendant,
 * The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
 * So please your highness to behold the fight.

- * Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord ; for purposely therefore

- * Left I the court, to see this quarrel tried.
 * K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all things fit ;

- * Here let them end it, and God defend the right !
 * York. I never saw a fellow worse bested,

- * Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,
 * The servant of this armourer, my lords.

Enter, on one side, HORNER, and his neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk ; and he enters bearing his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it ; a drum before him ; at the other side, PETER, with a drum and a similar staff ; accompanied by Prentices drinking to him.

- 1 Neigh. Here, neighbour Hornes, I drink to you in a cup of sack ; And fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough.

- 2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of charneco.*

- 3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour : drink, and fear not your man.

- Hor.* Let it come, i'faith, and I'll pledge you all ;
 And a fig for Peter !

- 1 Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee ; and be not afraid.

- 2 Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master : fight for credit of the prentices.

- Peter.* I thank you all : * drink, and pray for me,
 * I pray you ; for, I think, I have taken my last
 * draught in this world.*—Here, Robin, as if I die,
 I give thee my apron ; and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer :—and here, Tom, take all the money that I have.—O Lord, bless me, I pray God ! for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much fence already.

- Sol.* Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blows.
 —Sirrah, what's thy name ?

- Peter.* Peter, forsooth.

- Sol.* Peter ! what more ?

- Peter.* Thump.

- Sol.* Thump ! then see thou thump thy master
 well.

- Hor.* Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave, and myself an honest man : * touching the duke of * York,—will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen : * And, there* fore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow, as Bevis of Southampton fell upon Ascapart.¹⁰ wine. Warburton imagines that it may have had its name from charneco, the Spanish name for a species of turpentine tree ; but Severens says Charneco is the name of a village in Portugal where this wine was made. It is frequently mentioned by old writers.

9 Gay has borrowed this idea in his What d'ye call it, where Peasod says :—

'Stay, let me pledge,—'tis my last earthly liquor.'

Peasod's subsequent bequest is likewise copied from Peter's division of his moveables.

10 Warburton added this allusion to Bevis and Asca- part from the old quarto. The story of this knight and giant were familiar to our ancestors ; their offices are still preserved on the gates of Southampton.

11 This is from Holinshed, whose narrative Shakspeare has deserted in making the armourer confess treason :—'His neighbours gave him wine and strong drinks in such excessive sort, that he was therewith

* Sound trumpets, alarm to the combatants.

[Alarm. They fight, and Peter strikes down his Master.]

Her. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason. [Dies.]

* York. Take away his weapon;—Fellow,
* Thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way.

* Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemies in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevailed in right?

* K. Hen. Go, take hence that traitor from our sight;

For, by his death, we do perceive his guilt:¹
And God, in justice, hath reveal'd to us
The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,
Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.—

Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Street. Enter GLOSTER and Servants, in mourning Cloaks.

* Glo. Thus, sometimes hath the brightest day
a cloud;

* And, after summer, evermore succeeds

* Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold:

* So cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.²

Serv. What's o'clock?

Ten, my lord.

* Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me,

* To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess:

* Unearth³ may she endure the flinty streets,

* To tread them with her tender-footing feet.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook

The abject people, gazing on thy face,

With envious⁴ looks, still laughing at thy shame;

That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels,

When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.

* But, soft! I think, she comes; and I'll prepare

* My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Duchess of Gloster, in a white sheet, with papers pinned upon her back, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand: SIR JOHN STANLEY, a Sheriff, and Officers.

Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff.

* Glo. No, stir not, for your lives; let her pass by.
Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame?

Now thou dost penance too. Look, how they gaze!

* See, how the giddy multitude do point,

* And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee!

* Ah, Gloster, hide thee from their hateful looks;

* And, in thy closet pent up, rue my shame,

* And ban⁵ thine enemies, both mine and thine.

Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell; forgot this grief.

Duch. Ah, Gloster, teach me to forget myself:

For, whilst I think I am thy married wife,

* And thou a prince, protector of this land,

* Methinks, I should not thus be led along.

Mail'd up in shame,⁶ with papers on my back;

* And follow'd with a rabble, that rejoice in tempest, and reeled as he went, and so was slain without guilt. As for the false servant, he lived not long unpunished; for being convict of felonie in court of assise, he was judged to be hang'd, and so was at Tyburn.⁷ Fo. 326.

¹ The real name of the combatants were John Daves and William Catour. The names of the sheriffs were Godfrey Bologne and Robert Horne, the latter, which occurs in the page of Fabian's Chronicle, may have suggested the name of Horner. The precept to the sheriffs, commanding them to prepare the barriers in Smithfield, with the account of expenses incurred, is among the records of the exchequer, and has been printed in Mr. Nichols's Illustrations of the Manners and Expenses of Ancient Times in England, quarto, 1791. It appears that the erection of the barriers, the combat itself, and the subsequent execution of the armoured, occupied the space of six or seven days; that a large quantity of sand and gravel was consumed on the occasion, and that the place of battle was strewn with rushes. Mr. Steevens informed that the armoured was not killed by his opponent, but worsted, and immediately afterwards hang'd. This, however, is in direct

* To see my tears, and hear my deep-fet' groans.

The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;

And, when I start, the envious people laugh,

And bid me be advis'd⁸ how I tread.

* Ah, Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke?

* Trow'st thou, that e'er I'll look upon the world?

* Or count them happy, that enjoy the sun?

* No; dark shall be my light, and night my day;

* To think upon my pomp shall be my hell.

Sometimes I'll say, I am duke Humphrey's wife;

And he a prince, and ruler of the land:

Yet so he rul'd, and such a prince he was,

As he stood by, whilst I, his forlorn duchess,

Was made a wonder, and a pointing-stock,

To every idle rascal follower.

But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame;

Nor stir at nothing, till the axe of death

Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will.

For Suffolk,—he that can do all in all

With her, that hateth thee, and hates us all,—

And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,

Have all lim'd bushes to betray thy wings,

And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee:

* But fear not thou, until thy foot be snar'd,

* Nor ever seek prevention of thy foes.

* Glo. Ah, Nell, forbear; thou almost art awry;

* I must offend before I be attained:

* And had I twenty times so many foes,

* And each of them had twenty times their power,

* All these could not procure me any scathe,⁹

* So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.

* Would'st have me rescue thee from this reproach?

* Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,

* But I in danger for the breach of law.

* Thy greatest help is quiet;¹⁰ gentle Nell:

* I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;

* These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month.

Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before.

This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there.

[Exit Herald.]

My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master sheriff,

Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.

* Sher. An't please your grace, here my commission stays:

* And Sir John Stanley is appointed now

* To take her with him to the Isle of Man.

* Glo. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady here?

* Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.

Glo. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray

You use her well: the world may laugh again;¹¹

And I may live to do you kindness,¹²

You do it her. And so, Sir John, farewell.

Duch. What gone, my lord; and bid me not farewell.

* Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and Servants.]

contradiction to all the historians, who state that he was slain. Hall's words are, 'whose body was drawn to Tyburn, and there hang'd and beheaded.' The law made no distinction, the dead body of the vanquished was equally adjudged to the punishment of a convicted traitor, in order that his posterity might participate in his infamy. Indeed the record seems decisive; for it states that the dead man was watched after the battle was done, and this most probably means before it was conveyed to Tyburn for execution and decapitation. The death of the vanquished person was always regarded as certain evidence of his guilt.

² I. e. pass or fleet away. ³ Not easily.

⁴ Malicious. ⁵ Curse.

⁶ Wrapped or bundled up in disgrace; alluding to the sheet of penance. ⁷ Mailed, from a mail or male, a little budget.

⁸ Deep-fetched. ⁹ I. e. careful, circumspect.

¹⁰ Scathe is harm, mischief, used by all our ancient writers. The word is still in use in Scotland.

¹¹ The poet has not endeavoured to raise much compassion for the duchess, who indeed suffers but what she had deserved.—Johnson.

¹² I. e. the world may look again favourably on me.

* Duch. Art thou gone too? * All comfort go with thee!

* For none avides with me: my joy is—death:

* Death, at whose name I oft have been afeard,

* Because I wish'd this world's eternity.—

* Stanley, I pry thee, go, and take me hence;

* I care not whither, for I beg no favour,

* Only convey me where thou art commanded.

* Stan. Why, madam, that is to the lile of Man;

* There to be used according to your state.

* Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:

* And shall I then be us'd reproachfully?

* Stan. Like to a duchess, and Duke Humphrey's lady,

* According to that state you shall be used.

* Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare;

* Although thou hast been conduct' of my shame!

* Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.

* Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharg'd.—

* Come, Stanley, shall we go?

* Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off this sheet,

* And go we to attire you for our journey.

* Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet:

* No, it will hang upon my richest robes,

* And show itself, attire me how I can.

* Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. The Abbey at Bury. Enter to the Parliament, KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, CARDINAL BEAUFORT, SUFFOLK, YORK, BUCKINGHAM, and others.

* K. Hen. I muse,¹ my lord of Gloster is not come:

* 'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man, Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

* Q. Mar. Can you not see? or will you not observe

* The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?

* With what a majesty he bears himself?

* Now insolent of late he is become,

* How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himself?

* We know the time, since he was mild and affable;

* And, if we did but glance a far-off look,

* Immediately he was upon his knee,

* That all the court admir'd him for submission:

* But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,

* When every one will give the time of day,

* He knits his brow, and shows an angry eye,

* And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee,

* Disdaining duty that to us belongs.

* Small cure are not regarded, when they grin:

* But great men tremble, when the lion roars:

* And Humphrey is no little man in England.

* First, note, that he is near you in descent;

* And should you fall, he is the next will mount.

* Me seemeth,² then, it is no policy,—

* Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,

* And his advantage following your decease,—

* That he should come about your royal person,

* Or be admitted to your highness' council.

* By flattery hath he won the commons' hearts;

* And, when he please to make commotion,

² This impudence of a high spirit is very natural. It is not so dreadful to be imprisoned as it is desirable in a state of disgrace to be sheltered from the scorn of guests. This is one of those touches which came from the hand of Shakspeare; it is not in the old play.

³ Wonder.

⁴ I.e. it seemeth to me, a word more grammatical than methinks, which has intruded into its place.—Johnson

⁵ i.e. assemble by observation.

⁶ Foolish.

⁷ Suffolk uses highness and grace promiscuously to the queen. Camden says that majesty came into use in the reign of King Henry the Eighth, as sacred majesty

* 'Tis to be fear'd, they all will follow him.

* Now 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;

* Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the garden,

* And choke the herbs for want of husbandry.

* The reverent care, I bear unto my lord,

* Made me collect these dangers in the duke.

* If it be fond,¹ call it a woman's fear;

* Which fear if better reasons can supplant,

* I will subscribe and say—I wrong'd the duke.

* My lord of Suffolk,—Buckingham,—and York,—

* Reprove my allegation, if you can;

* Or else conclude my words effectual.

* Suff. Well hath your highness seen into this duke;

* And, had I first been put to speak my mind,

* I think I should have told your grace's tale.

* The duchess, by his subordination,

* Upon my life, began her devilish practices:

* Or if he were not privy to those faults,

* Yet, by reputing of his high descent²

* (As next the king he was successive heir),

* And such high vaunts of his nobility,

* Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess,

* By wicked means, to frame our sovereign's fall.

* Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep;

* And in his simple show he harbours treason.

* The fox barks not, when he would steal the lamb.

* No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man

* Unsounded yet, and full of deep deceit.

* Cor. Did he not, contrary to form of law,

* Devise strange deaths for small offences done

* York. And did he not, in his protectorship,

* Levy great sums of money through the realm,

* For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?

* By means whereof, the towns each day revolted.

* Buck. Tut! these are petty faults to faults unknown,

* Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humphrey.

* K. Hen. My lords, at once: The care you have of us,

* To mow down thorns that would annoy our foot,

* Is worthy praise: But shall I speak my conscience?

* Our kinsman Gloster is as innocent

* From meaning treason to our royal person,

* As is the sucking lamb, or harmless dove:

* The duke is virtuous, mild; and too well given,

* To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

* Q. Mar. Ah, what's more dangerous than this fond affiance!

* Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,

* For he's disposed as the hateful raven.

* Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,

* For he's inclin'd as are the ravenous wolves.

* Who cannot steal a shape, that means deceit?

* Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all

* Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter SOMERSET.

* Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!

* K. Hen. Welcome, Lord Somerset. What news from France?

* Som. That all your interest in those territories

* Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.

* K. Hen. Cold news, Lord Somerset: But God's will be done!

* York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France,

* As firmly as I hope for fertile England.³

* Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud, lately, in our memory. Selden says that this must be understood so far as it relates to the title being 'commonly in use, and properly to the king applied,' because he adduces an instance of the use of majesty, so early as the reign of Henry the Second. The reader will see more on the subject in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 11.

'And in my conscience do repute his grace,' &c.

² These two lines York had spoken before in the first act of this play. He is now meditating on this disappointment, and comparing his former hopes with his present loss.

- * And caterpillars eat my leaves away :
- * But I will remedy this year! ere long,
- * Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

[Aside.]

Enter GLOSTER.

* Glo. All happiness unto my lord the king!
Pardon, my liege, that I have staid so long.

Suff. Nay, Gloster, know, that thou art come too soon,

* Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art:
I do arrest thee of high treason here.

Glo. Well, Suffolk, yet¹ thou shalt not see me blush,

Nor change my countenance for this arrest;

* A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.

* The purest spring is not so free from mud,

* As I am clear from treason to my sovereign:

Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?

York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,

And, being protector, stayed the soldiers' pay;

By means whereof, his highness hath lost France.

Glo. Is it but thought so? What are they that think it?

* I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay,

* Nor ever had one penny bribe from France.

* So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,—

* Ay, night by night,—in studying good for England!

* That doth taint o'er I wrested from the king,

* Or any groat I hoarded to my use,

* Be brought against me at my trial day!

* No! many a pound of mine own proper store,

* Because I would not tax the needy commons,

* Have I dispursed to the garrisons,

* And never ask'd for restitution.

* Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.

* Glo. I say no more than truth, so help me God!

York. In your protectorship, you did devise

Strange tortures for offenders, never heard of,

That England was defam'd by tyranny.

Glo. Why, 'tis well known, that whiles I was protector,

Pity was all the fault that was in me;

* For I should melt at an offender's tears,

* And lowly words were ransom for their fault.

* Unless it were a bloody murderer,

* Or foul felonious thief that fleec'd poor passengers,

* I never gave them condign punishment:

* Murder, indeed, that bloody sin, I tortur'd

* Above the felon, or what trespass else.

* Suff. My lord, these faults are easy,² quickly answer'd:

* But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,

* Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.

* I do arrest you in his highness' name;

* And here commit you to my lord cardinal

* To keep, until your further time of trial.

* K. Hen. My lord of Gloster, 'tis my special hope,

* That you will clear yourself from all suspects;

My conscience tells me, you are innocent.

Glo. Ah, gracious lord, these days are dangerous!

* Virtue is chok'd with foul ambition,

* And charity chok'd hence by rancour's hand;

* Foul subornation is predominant,

* And equity exil'd your highness' land.

* I know, their plot is to have my life;

* And, if my death might make this island happy,

* And prove the period of their tyranny,

* I would expend it with all willingness:

* But mine is made the prologue to their play;

* For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,

* Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.

* Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,

* And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;

* Sharp Buckingham unburdens with his tongue

* The envious load that lies upon his heart:

* And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,

* Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,

* By false accuse³ doth level at my life:—

* And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,

* Causeless have laid diagraces on my head;

* And, with your best endeavour, have stirr'd up

* My liefast⁴ liege to be mine enemy:—

* Ay, all of you have laid your heads together,

* Myself had notice of your conventicles,

* I shall not want false witness to condemn me,

* Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;

* The ancient proverb will be well affected,—

A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.

* Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable:

* If those that care to keep your royal person

* From treason's secret knife, and traitors' rage,

* Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,

* And the offender granted scope of speech,

* 'Twill make them cool in zeal unto your grace.

Suff. Hath he not twix our sovereign lady here,

* With ignominious words, though clerically couch'd

* As if she had suborned some to swear

* False allegations to o'erthrow his state?

* Q. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide.

Glo. Far truer spoke than meant: I lose indeed;—

* Beeshrew the winners, for they played me false!

* And well such losers may have leave to speak.

Buck. He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all day:—

* Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner.

* Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.

Glo. Ah, thus king Henry throws away his crutch,

Before his legs be firm to bear his body:

* This is the shepherd beaten from thy side,

* And wolves are gnawing who shall gnaw thee first.

* Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were!

* For, good King Henry, thy decay I fear.

[Exeunt Attendants, with GLOSTER.]

K. Hen. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best,

Do, or undo, as if ourself were here.

Q. Mar. What, will your highness leave the parliament?

K. Hen. Ay, Margaret; my heart is drown'd with grief.

* Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes;

* My body round engirt with misery;

* For what's more miserable than discontent?—

* Ah, uncle Humphrey! in thy face I see

* The map of honour, truth, and loyalty!

* And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come,

* That o'er I prov'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.

* What low'ring star now envies thy estate,

* That these great lords, and Margaret our queen,

* Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?

* Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man wrong;

* And as the butcher takes away the calf,

* And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strays,

* Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house;

* Even so, remorseless, have they borne him hence.

* And as the dam runs lewling up and down,

* Looking the way her harmless young one went,

* And can do nought but wail her darling's loss;

* Even so, myself bewails good Gloster's case,

* With sad unhelpful tears; and with dimm'd eyes

* Look after him, and cannot do him good;

* So mighty are his vowed enemies.

* His fortunes I will weep; and, 'twixt each groan,

* Say—Who's a traitor, Gloster he is none. [Exit.]

* Q. Mar. Free lords;⁵ cold snow melts with the sun's hot beams.

¹ Gear was a general word for matter, subject, or business in general.

² This is the reading of the second folio. The first folio reads, 'Well, Suffolk, thou,' &c. Mr. Malone reads, 'Well, Suffolk's duke,' &c. from the old play.

³ I. e. slight.

⁴ For accusation.

⁵ Liefest is dearest.

⁶ Warburton thinks that by 'free lords' Margaret means 'you who are not bound up to such precise regards of religion as is the king; but are men of the world, and know how to live.' I have shown in a note on Twelfth Night, Act II. Sc. 4, that free meant pure, chaste, and consequently virtuous. This may be the meaning here; unless the reader would rather believe that it means free-born, noble, which was the sense of its Saxon original.

* Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,
 * Too full of foolish pity; and Gloster's show
 * Beguiles him, as the mournful crocodile
 * With sorrow snares relenting passengers:
 * Or as the snake, roll'd in a flowering bank,
 * With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
 * That, for the beauty, thinks it excellent.
 * Believe me, lords, were none more wise than I
 * (And yet, herein, I judge mine own wit good,)
 * This Gloster should be quickly rid the world,
 * To rid us from the fear we have of him.
 * * Car. That he should die, is worthy policy:
 * But yet we want a colour for his death:
 * * 'Tis meet, he be condemn'd by course of law.
 * * Suff. But, in my mind, that were no policy;
 * The king will labour still to save his life;
 * The commons haply rise to save his life;
 * And yet we have but trivial argument,
 * More than mistrust, that shows him worthy death.
 * * York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.
 * * Suff. Ah, York, no man alive so fain as I.
 * * York. 'Tis York that hath more reason for his death.—
 * But, my lord cardinal, and you, my lord of Suffolk,—
 * Say as you think, and speak it from your souls,—
 * Wer't not all one, an empty eagle were set
 * To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
 * As place Duke Humphrey for the king's protector?
 * Q. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.
 * * Suff. Madam, 'tis true: And wer't not madness, then,
 * To make the fox surveyor of the fold?
 * Who being accus'd a crafty murderer,
 * His guilt should be but idly posted over,
 * Because his purpose is not executed.
 * No; let him die, in that he is a fox,
 * By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock,
 * Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood;
 * As Humphrey, prov'd by reasons, to my liege.
 * And do not stand on quilllets, how to slay him:
 * Be it by gins, by snares, by subtlety,
 * Sleeping or waking, 'tis no matter how,
 * So he be dead; for that is good deceit.
 * Which mates¹ him first, that first intends deceit.
 * * Q. Mar. Thrice-noble Suffolk, 'tis resolutely spoke.
 * * Suff. Not resolute, except so much were done;
 * For things are often spoke, and seldom meant:
 * But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
 * Seeing the deed is meritorious,
 * And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,—
 * Say but the word, and I will be his priest.
 * * Car. But I would have him dead, my lord of Suffolk,
 * Ere you can take due orders for a priest:
 * Say, you consent, and censure² well the deed,
 * And I'll provide his executioner,
 * I tender so the safety of my liege.
 * * Suff. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.
 * * Q. Mar. And so say I.
 * * York. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
 * It skills not greatly³ who impugns our doom.

Enter a Messenger.

* Mess. Great lords, from Ireland am I come again.
 * To signify—that rebels there are up,
 * And put the Englishmen unto the sword;
 * Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime,
 * Before the wound do grow incurable;
 * For, being green, there is great hope of help.

1 i. e. in the flowers growing on a bank.
 2 York had more reason for desiring Humphrey's death, because he stood between him and the crown, which he had proposed to himself in his ambitious views.
 3 The meaning of this obscurely constructed passage appears to be, 'The fox may be lawfully killed, as being known to be an enemy to sheep, even before he has actually killed them; so Humphrey may be properly de-

* Car. A breach, that craves a quick expedient⁴ stop!
 * What counsel give you in this weighty cause?
 * York. That Somerset be sent as regent thither:
 * 'Tis meet, that lucky ruler be employ'd;
 * Witness the fortune he hath had in France.
 * Som. If York, with all his far-fet⁵ policy,
 * Had been the regent there instead of me,
 * He never would have staid in France so long.
 * York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done:
 * I rather would have lost my life betimes,
 * Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
 * By staying there so long, till all were lost.
 * Show me one scar character'd on thy skin:
 * Men's flesh preserv'd so whole, do seldom win.
 * Q. Mar. Nay then, this spark will prove a raging fire,
 * If wind and fuel, be brought to feed it with:—
 * No more, good York:—sweet Somerset, be still:—
 * Thy fortune, York, hadst thou been regent there,
 * Might happily have prov'd far worse than his.
 * York. What, worse than naught? nay, then a shame take all!
 * Som. And in the number, thee, that wishest shame!
 * Car. My lord of York, try what your fortune is.
 * The uncivil Kernes of Ireland are in arms,
 * And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
 * To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
 * Collected choicely, from each county some,
 * And try your hap against the Irishmen?
 * York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.
 * Suff. Why, our authority is his consent;
 * And, what we do establish, he confirms:
 * Then, noble York, take thou this task in hand.
 * York. I am content: Provide me soldiers, lords,
 * Whiles I take order for mine own affairs.
 * Suff. A charge, Lord York, that I will see perform'd.
 * But now return we to the false Duke Humphrey.
 * Car. No more of him; for I will deal with him,
 * That, henceforth, he shall trouble us no more.
 * And so break off: the day is almost spent:
 * Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.
 * York. My lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days,
 * At Bristol I expect my soldiers;
 * For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.
 * Suff. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.
 * [Exeunt all but YORK.]
 * York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful thoughts,
 * And change misdoubt to resolution:
 * Be that thou hop'
 * Resign to death, it is not worth the enjoying:
 * Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
 * And find no harbour in a royal heart.
 * Faster than spring-time showers, comes thought on thought;
 * And not a thought, but thinks on dignity.
 * My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
 * Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
 * Well, nobles, well, 'tis politicly done,
 * To send me packing with an host of men:
 * I fear me, you but warm the starved snake,
 * Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
 * 'Twas men I lack'd, and you will give them me:
 * I take it kindly: yet, be well assur'd
 * You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands.
 * While I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
 * I will stir up in England some black storm,
 * Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven, or hell:
 * And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
 * Destroyed, as being proved by reasons or arguments to be the king's enemy, before he has committed any actual crime.
 4 i. e. confounds, overcomes.
 5 That is, 'I will be the attendant on his last scene; I will be the last man whom he shall see.'
 6 i. e. judge or think well of it.
 7 'It matters not greatly.' Shakespeare has the phrase in Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1.
 8 Expeditious. 9 Far-fetched.

* Until the golden circuit on my head,
 * Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,
 * Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.²
 * And, for a minister of my intent,
 * I have seduc'd a head-strong Kentishman,
 * John Cade of Ashford,
 * To make commotion, as full well he can,
 * Under the title of John Mortimer.
 * In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
 * Oppose himself against a troop of Kernes;³
 * And fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
 * Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine:
 * And, in the end being rescu'd, I have seen him
 * Caper upright like a wild Morisco.⁴
 * Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bells.
 * Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty Kerne,
 * Hath he conversed with the enemy;
 * And undiscover'd come to me again,
 * And given me notice of their villanies.
 * This devil here shall be my substitute;
 * For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
 * In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble:
 * By this I shall perceive the commons' mind,
 * How they affect the house and claim of York.
 * Say, he be taken, rack'd, and tortured:
 * I know, no pain, that can inflict upon him,
 * Will make him say—I mov'd him to those arms.
 * Say, that he thrive (as 'tis great like he will),
 * Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength,
 * And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd:
 * For, Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
 * And Henry put apart, the next for me. [Exit.]

SCENE II.¹ Bury. A Room in the Palace.
 Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

1 Mur. Run to my lord of Suffolk; let him know,
 * We have despatch'd the duke, as he commanded.
 * 2 Mur. O, that it were to do!—What have we done?

* Didst ever hear a man so penitent?

Enter SUFFOLK.

1 Mur. Here comes my lord.
 * Suff. Now, sirs, have you Despatch'd this thing?

1 Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead.
 * Suff. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house;

* I will reward you for this venturous deed.
 * The king and all the peers are here at hand:—
 * Have you laid fair the bed? are all things well,
 * According as I gave directions?
 1 Mur. Yea, my good lord.
 * Suff. Away, be gone! [Exeunt Murderers.]

Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, CARDINAL BEAUFORT, SOMERSET, Lords, and others.

* K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight:

* Say, we intend to try his grace to-day,
 * If he be guilty, as 'tis published.

* Suff. I'll call him presently, my noble lord.

* K. Hen. Lords, take your places;—And, I pray you all,

1 Thus in Macbeth:—
 'All that impedes thee from the golden round,
 Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
 To have thee crown'd withal.'

In King Henry IV. Part II. the crown is called 'this golden rigot.'

2 A flaw is a violent gust of wind.

3 Kernes were Irish peasantry, who served as light-armed foot soldiers. In King Richard II. they are called 'rough rug-headed Kernes.'

4 A dancer in a morris-dance; originally, perhaps, meant to imitate a Moorish dance, and thence named. The bells sufficiently indicate that the English morris-dance is intended. It appears from Blount's Glossography, and some of our old writers, that the dance itself was called a morisco. Florio, in the first edition of his Italian Dictionary, defines 'Moreasca, a kind of morrice or antique dance, after the Moorish or Ethiopian fashion.' The reader who would know more on this curious subject will do well to consult Mr. Douce's very

* Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloucester,
 * Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
 * He be approv'd in practice culpable.
 * Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail,
 * That faultless may condemn a nobleman!
 * Pray God, he may acquit him of suspicion!
 * K. Hen. I thank thee, Margaret; these words content me much.—

Re-enter SUFFOLK.

* How now? why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
 * Where is our uncle? what is the matter, Suffolk?
 Suff. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloucester is dead.
 * Q. Mar. Marry, God forefend!
 * Car. God's secret judgment:—I did dream to-night,

* The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.

[The King swoons.]

* Q. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords! the king is dead.

* Sem. Rear up his body; wring him by the nose.*

* Q. Mar. Run, go, help, help!—O Henry, open thine eyes!

* Suff. He doth revive again;—Madam, be patient.

* K. Hen. O heavenly God!

* Q. Mar. How fares my gracious lord?

Suff. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort!

K. Hen. What, doth my lord of Suffolk comfort me?

Came he right now' to sing a raven's note,
 * Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers;
 And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren,

* By crying comfort from a hollow breast,

* Can chase away the first-conceived sound?

* Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd words,

* Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say;

* Their touch affrights me, as a serpent's sting.

Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!

* Upon thy eyeballs murderous tyranny

* Sits in grim majesty, to fright the world.

* Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding:—

* Yet do not go away;—Come, basilisk,

* And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight:*

* For in the shade of death I shall find joy:

* In life, but double death, now Gloucester's dead!

Q. Mar. Why do you rate my lord of Suffolk thus?

* Although the duke was enemy to him,

* Yet he, most christianlike, laments his death.

* And for myself,—foe as he was to me,

* Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,

* Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,

* I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,

* Look pale as primrose, with blood-drinking sighs,*

* And all to have the noble duke alive.

* What know I how the world may deem of me?

* For it is known we were but hollow friends;

* It may be judg'd, I made the duke away:

* So shall my name with slander's tongue be wounded,

* And princes' courts be fill'd with my reproach.

interesting dissertation, printed in the second volume of his Illustrations of Shakespeare.

5 The directions concerning this scene stand thus in the quarto copy:—'Then the curtains being drawn, Duke Humphrey is discovered in his bed, and two men lying on his breast, and smothering him in his bed. And then enter the Duke of Suffolk to them.'

6 As nothing further is spoken either by Somerset or the cardinal, or by any one else, to show that they continue in the presence, it is to be presumed that they take advantage of the confusion occasioned by the king's swooning, and slip out unobserved. The next news we hear of the cardinal, he is at the point of death.

7 Just now.

 That did with easy sight enforce a basilisk to flee,
 Albeit naturally that beast doth murder with the eye,'
 Allion's England, b. i. c. iii.

9 'And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs.'

King Henry VI. Part III. Act IV. Sc. 4

* This get I by his death : Ah me, unhappy !

* To be a queen, and crown'd with infamy !

K. Hen. Ah, woe is me for Gloster, wretched man !

Q. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than he is.

What, dost thou turn away, and hide thy face ?
I am no loathsome leper, look on me.

* What, art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf ?

* Be poisonous too, and kill thy forlorn queen.

* Is all thy comfort shut in Gloster's tomb ?

* Why, then dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy :

* Erect his statue then, and worship it,

* And make my image but an alehouse sign.

Was I, for this, nigh wreck'd upon the sea ;

* And twice by awkward wind from England's bank

* Drove back again unto my native clime ?

What boded this, but well forewarning wind

Did seem to say,—Seek not a scorpion's nest,

* Nor set no footing on this unkind shore ?

* What did it then, but curs'd the gentle gusts,

* And he that loos'd them from their brazen caves ;

* And bid them blow towards England's blessed shore,

* Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock ?

* Yet Æolus would not be a murderer,

* But left that hateful office unto thee :

* The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me ;

* Knowing, that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore,

* With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness :

* The splitting rocks cover'd in the sinking sands,

* And would not dash me with their ragged sides ;

* Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,

* Might in thy palace perish¹ Margaret.

* As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,

* When from the shore the tempest beat us back,

* I stood upon the hatches in the storm :

* And when the dusky sky began to rob

* My earnest-gaping sight of thy land's view,

* I took a costly jewel from my neck,—

* A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,—

* And threw it towards thy land ;—the sea re-ceiv'd it ;

* And so, I wish'd, thy body might my heart :

* And even with this, I lost fair England's view,

* And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart ;

* And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles,

* For losing ken of Albion's wished coast.

* How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue

* (The agent of thy foul inconstancy)

* To sit and witch² me, as Ascanius did,

* When he to madding Dido would unfold

* His father's acts, commenc'd in burning Troy ?

* Am I not witch'd like her ? or thou not false like him ?³

1 I. e. let not woe be to thee for Gloster, but for me.

2 This allusion, which has been borrowed from the Proverbs of Solomon, and Psalm lvi. by many writers, is oddly illustrated in a passage of Gower's Confessio Amantis, b. l. fo. x. ed. 1532.

3 The same uncommon epithet is applied to the wind by Marlowe in his Edward II. :—

'With awkward winds, and with sore tempest driven
To fall on shore.'

And by Drayton, Epistle from Richard II. to Queen Isabella :—

'And undertook to travail dangerous wales,
Driven by awkward winds and boisterous seas.'

4 The verb perish is here used actively. Thus in Beaumont and Fletcher's Maid's Tragedy :—

'—let not my sins
Perish your noble youth.'

5 The old copy reads 'watch me' : the emendation is Theobald's, who observes that 'it was Cupid in the semblance of Ascanius who bewitched Dido.' She, taking him for Ascanius, would naturally speak to him about his father, and would be witched by what she learned from him, as well as by the more regular narrative she had heard from Æneas himself.

6 Stevens thinks the word or should be omitted in this line, which would improve both the sense and metre. Mason proposes to read and instead of or.

7 Stevens proposed to read pale instead of drain.

* Ah me, I can no more ! Die, Margaret !

* For Henry weeps, that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY.
The Commons press to the door.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
That good Duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd

By Suffolk and the Cardinal Beaufort's means.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees,

That want their leader, scatter up and down,

And care not who they sting in his revenge.

Myself have calm'd their spleenful mutiny,

Until they hear the order of his death.

K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too true ;

But how he died, God knows, not Henry :

Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,

And comment then upon his sudden death.

War. That I shall do, my liege :—Stay, Salisbury,

With the rude multitude, till I return.

[WARWICK goes into an inner Room, and SALISBURY retires.]

* K. Hen. O thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts :

* My thoughts, that labour to persuade my soul,

* Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life¹

* If my suspect be false, forgive me, God ;

* For judgment only doth belong to thee !

* Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips

* With twenty thousand kisses, and to drain²

* Upon his face an ocean of salt tears ;

* To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,

* And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling :

* But all in vain his these mean obsequies ;

* And, to survey his dead and earthly image,

* What were it but to make my sorrow greater ?

The folding Doors of an inner Chamber are thrown open, and GLOSTER is discovered dead in his Bed : WARWICK and others standing by it.³

War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body.

* K. Hen. That is to see how deep my grave is made :

* For, with his soul, fled all my worldly solace ;

* For seeing him, I see my life in death.⁴

War. As surely as my soul intends to live

With that dread King that took our state upon him

To free us from his Father's wrathful curse,

I do believe that violent hands were laid

Upon the life of this thrice-famed duke.

Suff. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tongue !

* What instance gives Lord Warwick for his vow ?

War. See, how the blood is settled in his face !

Off have I seen a timely parted ghost,⁵

* Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,

8 This stage direction was inserted by Malone as best suited to the exhibition. The stage direction in the quarto is, 'Warwick draws the curtains, and shows Duke Humphrey in his bed.' In the folio, 'A bed with Gloster's body put forth.' By these and other circumstances it seems that the theatres were then unfurnished with scenes. In those days, it appears that curtains were occasionally hung across the middle of the stage on an iron rod, which being drawn open formed a second apartment, when a change of scene was required. See Malone's Account of the ancient Theatres, prefixed to the various editions of Shakespeare.

9 How much discussion there has been about this simple passage, which evidently means :—'I see my own life threatened with extermination, or surrounded by death.' Thus in a passage of the Burial Service, to which I am surprised none of the commentators have adverted, 'In the midst of life we are in death.'

10 Shakespeare has confounded the terms which signify body and soul together. So in A Midsummer Night's Dream :—

—damoed spirits all,
That in cross-ways and floods have burial.'

The word is frequently thus licentiously used by ancient writers ; instances are to be found in Spenser and others. 'A timely parted ghost,' says Malone, 'means a body that has become inanimate in the common course

' Being all descended to the labouring heart ;
' Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
' Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy :
' Which with the heart there cools and ne'er returneth
' To blush and beautify the cheek again.
' But, see, his face is black, and full of blood ;
' His eyeballs further out than when he liv'd,
' Staring full ghastly like a strangled man :
' His hair uprear'd, his nostrils stretched with struggling ;
' His hands abroad display'd, ' as one that grasp'd
' And tugg'd for life, and was by strength subdu'd.
' Look on the sheets, his hair, you see, is sticking ;
' His well proportion'd beard made ruff and rugged,

' Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd.
' It cannot be, but he was murder'd here ;
' The least of all these signs were probable.

' Suff. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death ?

' Myself, and Beaufort, had him in protection ;
' And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.

' War. But both of you were vow'd Duke Humphrey's foes ;

' And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep :
' 'Tis like, you would not feast him like a friend ;
' And 'tis well seen he found an enemy.

' Q. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noble-
men

' As guilty of Duke Humphrey's timeless death.

' War. Who finds the heifer dead, and bleeding fresh,

And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter ?
Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak ?
Even so suspicious is this tragedy.

' Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk ; where's your knife ?

Is Beaufort term'd a kite ? where are his talons ?

' Suff. I wear no knife, to slaughter sleeping men ;
But here's a vengeful sword, rusted with ease,
' That shall be scoured in his rancorous heart,
' That slanders me with murder's crimson badge :—
Say, if thou dar'st, proud lord of Warwickshire,
That I am faulty in Duke Humphrey's death.

[Exeunt Cardinal, Som. and others.]

' War. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him ?

' Q. Mar. He dares not calm his contumelious spirit,

Nor cease to be an arrogant controller,
Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

' War. Madam, be still ; with reverence may I
say ;

For every word, you speak in his behalf,
Is slander to your royal dignity.

' Suff. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour !
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blamofal bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip ; whose fruit thou art,
And never of the Nevils' noble race.

' War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers thee,
And I should rob the deathsman of his fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,
I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,
And say—it was thy mother that thou meant'st,
That thou thyself wast born in bastardy :
And after all this fearful homage done,
Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell,
Pernicious bloodsucker of sleeping men !

' Suff. Thou shalt be waking, while I shed thy blood,

If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.

' War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence ;

' Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,

' And do some service to Duke Humphrey's ghost.

[Exeunt SUFFOLK AND WARWICK.]

' K. Hen. What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted ?

' Thrice is he armed, that hath his quarrel just ;

' And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,

' Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.
[A Noise within.]

' Q. Mar. What noise is this ?

Re-enter SUFFOLK AND WARWICK, with their Weapons drawn.

' K. Hen. Why, how now, lords ? your wrathful weapons drawn

' Here in our presence ? dare you be so bold ?—

' Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here ?

' Suff. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Bury,

Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Noise of a Crowd within. Re-enter SALISBURY.

' Sal. Sirs, stand apart ; the king shall know your mind.— [Speaking to those within.]

Dread lord, the commons send you word by me,
Unless false Suffolk straight be done to death,

Or banished fair England's territories,

' They will by violence tear him from your palace,

' And torture him with grievous ling'ring death.

They say, by him the good Duke Humphrey died ;

' They say, in him they fear your highness' death ;

' And mere instinct of love and loyalty,—

' Free from a stubborn opposite intent,

' As being thought to contradict your liking,—

' Makes them thus forward in his banishment.

' They say, in care of your most royal person,

' That, if your highness should intend to sleep,

' And charge—that no man should disturb your rest,

' In pain of your dislike, or pain of death ;

' Yet notwithstanding such a strict edict,

' Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,

' That slyly glided towards your majesty,

' It were but necessary you were wak'd ;

' Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,

' The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal,

' And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,

' That they will guard you, whet you will, or no,

' From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is ;

' With whose envenomed and fatal sting

' Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,

' They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king,

my lord of Salisbury.

' Suff. 'Tis like the commons, rude unpolish'd hinds,

Could send such message to their sovereign :

But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,

To show how quaint an orator you are :

But all the honour Salisbury hath won,

Is—that he was the lord ambassador,

Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king,

or we'll all break in.

' K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,

' I thank them for their tender loving care ;

' And had I not been 'cited so by them,

' Yet do I purpose as they do entreat ;

' For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy

' Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means.

' And therefore—by His majesty I swear,

' Whose far unworthy deputy I am,— of nature ; to which violence has not brought a timeless end.' But Mr. Douce has justly observed, that timely may mean early, recently, newly.

1. e. the fingers being widely distended. ' Herein was the Emperor Domitian so cunning, that let a boy a good distance off hold up his hand, and stretch his fingers abroad, he would shoot through the spaces without touching the boy's hand, or any finger.—

Peachment's Complete Gentleman, 1622, p. 181.

2 Thus in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion :—

' Come, Moor ; I'm arm'd with more than complete steel

' The justice of my quarrel.'

3 Deadly serpent. 4 i. e. dexterous. 5 A company

' He shall not breathe infection in this air!
' But three days longer, on the pain of death.

[Exit SALISBURY.]

' Q. Mar. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk!

' K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk.

' No more, I say; if thou dost plead for him,
' Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.

' Had I but said, I would have kept my word:

' But, when I swear, it is irrevocable:—

' If, after three days' space, thou here be'st found,

' On any ground that I am ruler of,

' The world shall not be ransom for thy life,—

' Come, Warwick, come, good Warwick, go with me;

' I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Exit K. HENRY, WARWICK, Lords, &c.]

' Q. Mar. Mischance, and sorrow, go along with you!

' Heart's discontent, and sour affliction,

' Be playfellows to keep you company!

' There's two of you, the devil make a third!

' And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

' Suff. Cease, gentle queen, these execrations,

' And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.

' Q. Mar. Fye, coward woman, and soft-hearted wretch!

' Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemies?

' Suff. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,¹

' I would invent as bitter-searching terms,

' As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear,

' Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,

' With full as many signs of deadly hate,

' As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave:

My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words:

Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;

My hair be fix'd on end, as one distract;

Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:

And even now my burden'd heart would break,

Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!

Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!

Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees!²

Their chiefest prospect, murdering basilisks!

Their softest touch, as smart as lizards' stings!³

Their music, frightful as the serpent's hiss:

And boding screechows make the concert full!

All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself;

' And these dread curses—like the sun's gainst glass,

' Or like an overcharged gun—recoil,

' And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suff. You bade me ban,⁴ and will you bid me leave?

Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,

Well could I curse away a winter's night,

Though standing naked on a mountain top,

Where biting cold would never let grass grow,

And think it but a minute spent in sport.

' Q. Mar. O, let me entreat thee, cease! Give me thy hand,

' That I may dew it with my mournful tears;

' Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,

' To wash away my woeful monuments.

' O, could this kiss be printed in thy hand;

[Kisses his hand.]

' That thou might'st think upon these by the seal,

' Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee!⁵

' So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;

' 'Tis but surmise'd whilst thou art standing by,

' As one that surfeits thinking on a want.

' I will repeat thee, or, be well assur'd,

' Adventure to be banished myself:

' And banish'd I am, if but from thee.

' Go, speak not to me; even now be gone.—

' O, go not yet!—Even thus two friends condemn'd

' Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves,

' Leather a hundred times to part than die.

' Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee!

Suff. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banish'd,

Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.

' 'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou hence;

' A wilderness is populous enough,

' So Suffolk had thy heavenly company:

' For where thou art, there is the world itself,

' With every several pleasure in the world;

' And where thou art not, desolation.

' I can no more:—Live thou to joy thy life;

' Myself no joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.

Enter VAUX.

' Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I pray thee?

' Vaux. To signify unto his majesty,

That cardinal Beaufort is at point of death:

' For suddenly a grievous sickness took him,

' That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the air

' Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.

' Sometime, he talks as if Duke Humphrey's ghost

' Were by his side; sometime, he calls the king,

And whispers to his pillow, as to him,

' The secrets of his overcharged soul:⁶

' And I am sent to tell his majesty,

' That even now he cries aloud for him.

' Q. Mar. Go, tell this heavy message to the king.

[Exit VAUX.]

' Ah me! what is this world? what news are these?

' But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss,⁷

' Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?

' Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,

' And with the southern clouds, contend in tears;

' Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrow's?

' Now, get thee hence: The king, thou know'st, is coming:

' If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

' Suff. If I depart from thee, I cannot live:

' And in thy sight to die, what were it else,

' But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?

' Here could I breathe my soul into the air,

' As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,

Dying with mother's dug between its lips.

begin to rave, they immediately see in them what they could not find in themselves, the deformity and folly of useless rage.

6 That by the impression of my kiss for ever remaining on thy hand, thou mightest think on those lips through which a thousand sighs will be breathed for thee.

7 'Nec sine te pulchrum diis in luminis auras Exoritur, neque sit letum nec amabile quicquam.'

Lucretius.

And, still more elegantly, Milton, in a passage of his Comus (afterwards omitted,) ver. 214, &c.:

'—while I see you,

This dusky hollow is a paradise,

And heaven gates o'er my head.'

8 '—Infected minds

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets

Macbeth.

9 'Why do I lament a circumstance of which the impression will pass away in an hour; while I neglect to think on the loss of Suffolk, my affection for whom no time will efface?'

1 I. e. he shall not contaminate this air with his infected breath.

2 The fabulous accounts of the plant called a mandrake give it an inferior degree of animal life, and relate, that when it is torn from the ground it groans, and that this groan being certainly fatal to him that is offering such unwelcome violence, the practice of those who gathered mandrakes was to tie one end of a string to the plant, and the other to a dog, upon whom the fatal groan discharged its malignity. See Bulcine's Bulwarke of Defence against Sicknesse, &c. fol. 1579, p. 41.

3 Cypress was employed in the funeral rites of the Romans, and hence is always mentioned as an ill-boding plant.

4 This is one of the vulgar errors in the natural history of our ancestors. The lizard has no sting, and is quite harmless.

5 This inconsistency is very common in real life. Those who are vexed to impatience, are angry to see others less disturbed than themselves; but when others

Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
 And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
 To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth;
 So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,
 Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
 And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.
 To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
 From thee to die, were torture more than death;
 O, let me stay, befall what may befall.
Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful cor'sive.
 'It is applied to a deathful wound.
 'To France, sweet Suffolk: Let me hear from thee;
 'For wheresoe'er thou art in this world's globe,
 I'll have an Iris¹ that shall find thee out.
Suff. I go.
Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.
Suff. A jewel, lock'd into the woeful'st cask
 That ever did contain a thing of worth.
 Even as a splitted bark, so sunder we;
 This way fall I to death.
Q. Mar. This way for me.
 [Exeunt, severally.]

SCENE III. London. Cardinal Beaufort's Bedchamber. Enter KING HENRY,² SALISBURY,
 WARWICK, and others. The Cardinal in Bed;
 Attendants with him.

* K. Hen. How fares my lord? speak, Beaufort, to thy sovereign.
 'Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's treasure.
 'Enough to purchase such another island,
 'So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.
 * K. Hen. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life!
 'When death's approach is seen so terrible!
 * War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to
 thee.
 * Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.
 'Died he not in his bed? where should he die?
 Can I make men live whe'r they will or no?—
 'O! torture me no more, I will confess.—
 'Alive again? then show me where he is;
 'I'll give a thousand pounds to look upon him.—
 * He hath no eyes,³ the dust hath blinded them.—
 Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright,
 'Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul!—
 'Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary
 'Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.
 * K. Hen. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens,
 'Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!

1 Where for whereas; as in other places.

2 Pope was indebted to this passage in his Eloise to Abelaar, where he makes that votarist of exquisite sensibility say:—

'See my lips tremble, and my eyeballs roll,
 Suck my last breath, and catch my flying soul.'

3 Corrosive was generally pronounced and most frequently written corse in Shakespeare's time. See Mr. Nares's Glossary in voce. The accent, as Mr. Todd observes, being then on the first syllable, the word was easily thus abbreviated.

4 Iris was the messenger of Juno.

5 The quarto offers this stage-direction:—'Enter the King and Salisbury, and then the curtains be drawn, and the Cardinal is discovered in his bed, raving and staring as if he were mad.' This description did not escape Shakespeare, for he has availed himself of it in a preceding speech by Vaux.

6 A passage in Hall's Chronicle, Henry VI. fol. 70. b. suggested the corresponding lines in the old play.

7 Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?
 Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
 Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

King John.

8 'Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
 Which thou dost glare with.' Macbeth.

9 Thus in the old play of King John, 1591, Pandolph sees the king dying, and says:—

'Then, good my lord, if you forgive them all,
 Lift up your hand, in token you forgive.'

10 'Peccantes culpare cave, nam labimur omnes Aut sumus, aut fulmus, vel possumus esse, quod alci est.'

* O, beat away the busy meddling fiend,
 * That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
 * And from his bosom purge this black despair!
 'War. See, how the pangs of death do make him grin.
 * Sal. Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably.
 * K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!
 'Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,
 'Hold up thy hand,⁹ make signal of thy hope—
 'He dies, and makes no sign; O God, forgive him!
 'War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.
 * K. Hen. Forbear to judge,¹⁰ for we are sinners all.—
 'Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close;
 'And let us all to meditation. [Exeunt]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Kent. The Seashore near Dover.¹¹
 Firing heard at Sea. Then enter, from a Boat, a Captain, a Master, a Master's Mate, WALTER
 WHITMORE, and others; with them SUFFOLK, and other Gentlemen, prisoners.

* Cap. The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful¹² day
 * Is crept into the bosom of the sea;
 * And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades
 * That drag the tragic melancholy night;
 * Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings¹³
 * Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws
 * Breathe the foul contagious darkness in the air.
 * Therefore, bring forth the soldiers of our prize;
 * For, whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downs,
 * Here shall they make their ransom on the sand,
 * Or with their blood stain this discolour'd shore.—
 * Master, this prisoner freely give I thee:—
 'And thou that art his mate, make boot of this;—
 'The other, [pointing to SURFOLX,] Walter Whitmore, is thy share.
 'I Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me know.
 'Mas. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.
 'Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes yours.
 * Cap. What, think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
 * And bear the name and port of gentlemen?—
 * Cut both the villains' throats;—for die you shall;
 * The lives of those which we have lost in fight
 * Cannot¹⁴ be counterpois'd with such a petty sum.

'This is one of the scenes which have been applauded by the critics, and which will continue to be admired when prejudices shall cease, and bigotry give way to impartial examination. These are beauties that rise out of nature and of truth; the superficial reader cannot miss them, the profound can image nothing beyond them.'—Johnson.

11 There is a curious circumstantial account of the event on which this scene is founded in the Paston Letters, published by Sir John Fenn, vol. i. p. 33, Letter x. The scene is founded on the narration of Hall, which is copied by Holinshed.

12 The epithet blabbing, applied to the day by a man about to commit murder, is exquisitely beautiful. Guilt, if afraid of light, considers darkness as a natural shelter, and makes night the confidant of those actions which cannot be trusted to the tell-tale day.—Johnson.
 Spenser and Milton make use of the epithet:—
 'For Venus hated his all-blabbing light.'

Britain's Ida, c. ii.
 'Ere the blabbing eastern scout.'—Comus, v. 138.

Remorseful is plentiful.

13 The chariot of the night is supposed by Shakespeare to be drawn by dragons. Vide Cymbeline, Act ii. Sc. 2.

14 The word cannot, which is necessary to complete the sense of the passage, is not in the old copy: it was supplied by Malone. The difference between the captain's present and succeeding sentiments may be thus accounted for. Here he is only striving to intimidate his prisoners into a ready payment of their ransom. Afterwards his natural disposition inclines him to mercy, till he is provoked by the upbraids of Suffolk.

* 1 Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life.

* 2 Gent. And so will I, and write home for it straight.

' Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,

' And therefore, to revenge it, shalt thou die;

' And so should these, if I might have my will. [To Suff.

* Cap. Be not so rash; take ransom, let him live.

* Suff. Look on my George, I am a gentleman;

' Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.

* Whit. And so am I, my name is Walter Whitmore.

' How now? why start'st thou? what, doth death affright?

' Suff. Thy name affrights me,¹ in whose sound is death.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,

' And told me—that by Water I should die:²

' Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded:

' Thy name is—Gaultier, being rightly sounded.

' Whit. Gaultier, or Walter, which it is, I care not;

' Ne'er yet did base dishonour blur our name,

' But with our sword we wip'd away the blot;

' Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge,

' Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defac'd,³

' And I proclaim'd a coward through the world!

[Lays hold on Suffolk.

' Suff. Stay, Whitmore; for thy prisoner is a prince,

The duke of Suffolk, William de la Poole.

' Whit. The duke of Suffolk, muffled up in rags!

' Suff. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke;

' Jove sometime went disguis'd, and why not I?

' Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt be.

' Suff. Obscure and lowly swain, King Henry's blood,

The honourable blood of Lancaster,

' Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.⁴

' Hast thou not kiss'd thy hand, and held my stirrup?

' Bare-headed plodded by my footcloth mule,

' And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

' How often hast thou waited at my cup,

' Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,

' When I have feasted with Queen Margaret?

' Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;

' Ay, and allay this thy abhorive pride:⁵

' How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,

' And duly waited for my coming forth?

' This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf,

' And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue.⁶

' Whit. Speak, captain, shall I stab the forlorn swain?

* Cap. First let my words stab him, as he hath me!

I Suffolk had heard his name before without being startled by it. In the old play, as soon as ever the captain has consigned him to 'Walter Whickmore,' he immediately exclaims, 'Walter!' Whickmore asks him why he fears him; and Suffolk replies, 'It is thy name affrights me.' The poet here, as in other instances, has fallen into an impropriety by sometimes following and sometimes deserting his original.

3 Thus Drayton, in Queen Margaret's Epistle to this duke of Suffolk:—

' I pray thee, Poole, have care how thou dost pass;

' Never the sea yet half so dangerous was;

' And one foretold by water thou should'st die.'

A note on these lines says, 'The witch of Eye received answer from the spirit, that the duke of Suffolk should take heed of water.' See the fourth Scene of the first Act of this play. The prophecy is differently stated by a contemporary in the Paston Letters, vol. i. p. 40:—

'Also he asked the name of the ship; and when he knew it, he remembered Stacy that said, if he might escape the dangers of the Twever he should be safe, and then his heart failed him.'

3 The new image which Shakespeare has introduced into this speech—'my arms torn and defac'd'—is also found in King Richard III. Act iii. Sc. 2. See note on that passage.

4 A jaded groom is a low fellow. Suffolk's boast of his own blood was hardly warranted by his origin. His great grandfather had been a merchant at Hull. If Shakespeare had known his pedigree he would not have failed to make some of his adversaries reproach him with it.

5 Pride that has had birth too soon.

6 By this expression, 'charm thy riotous tongue,' the poet meant Suffolk to say that it should be as potent as a charm in stopping his licentious talk. The same expression occurs in Othello, Act iv. Sc. 1.

7 To betroth in marriage. This enumeration of Suffolk's crimes seems to have been suggested by the Mirror for Magistrates. See the Legend of William de la Poole. The rest of this speech is entirely Shakespeare's; there is no trace of it in the original play.

8 Edward III. bore for his device the rays of the sun dispersing themselves out of a cloud.—Camden's Rerum.

9 A pinna then signified a ship of small burthen, built for speed. Vldre note on The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. Sc. 3.

10 'Bargulus, Ilyrius Latro, de quo est apud Theopompum, magnas opes habuit.'—Cicero de Officiis, lib. i. c. 11. Shakespeare, as Dr. Farmer has shown, might have met with this pirate in some of the translations of his time: he points out two in which he is mentioned. In the old play it is, 'Abradas the great Macedonian pirate.'

11 This line in the original play is properly given to the captain. What remorse (i. e. pity) could Suffolk be called upon to show to his assailant? Whereas the captain might with propriety say to his captive, 'Thy haughty language exasperates me, instead of exciting my compassion.' Mr. Boswell is, I believe, mistaken in asserting that remorse was used in the modern sense. At least I find no instance where it is so used by Shakespeare.

* Suff. Base slave! thy words are blunt, and so art thou.

' Cap. Convey him hence, and on our longboat's side

' Strike off his head.

' Suff. Thou dar'st not for thy own.

' Cap. Yes, Poole.

' Suff. Poole?

' Cap. Poole? Sir Poole? lord!

' Ay, kennel, puddle, sink; whose filth and dirt

' Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.

' Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,

' For swallowing the treasure of the realm:

' Thy lips, that kiss'd the queen, shall sweep the ground;

' And thou, that smil'dst at good Duke Humphrey's death,

' Against the senseless winds shalt grin in vain,

' Who, in contempt, shall hiss at thee again:

' And wedded be thou to the hags of hell,

' For daring to affy⁷ a mighty lord

' Unto the daughter of a worthless king,

' Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem.

' By devilish policy art thou grown great,

' And, like ambitious Sylla, overgor'd⁸

' With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.

' By thee, Anjou and Maine were sold to France:

' The false revolting Normans, thorough thee,

' Disdain to call us lord; and Picardy

' Hath slain their governors, surpris'd our forts,

' And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home.

' The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all,—

' Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,

' As hating thee, are rising up in arms:

' And now the house of York—thrust from the crown,

' By shameful murder of a guiltless king,

' And lofty proud encroaching tyranny,—

' Burns with revenging fire: whose hopeful colours

' Advance our half-fac'd sun,⁹ striving to shine,

' Under the which is writ—Inevitibus nubibus.

' The commons here in Kent are up in arms:

' And, to conclude, reproach, and beggary,

' Is crept into the palace of our king,

' And all by thee!—Away! convey him hence.

* Suff. O that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder

' Upon these paltry, servile, abject drudges!

' Small things make base men proud: 'this villain here,

' Being captain of a pinnace,⁹ threatens more

' Than Bargasus the strong Ilyrian pirate.¹⁰

' Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob bee-hives.

' It is impossible, that I should die

' By such a lowly vassal as thyself.

' Thy words move rage, and not remorse, in me:¹¹

* I go of message from the queen to France;
 * I charge thee, wait me safely cross the channel.

* Cap. Walter,——

* Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must wait thee to thy death.

* Suff. Golides timor occupat artus; '—'tis thee I fear.

* Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear, before I leave thee.

* What are ye daunted now? now will ye stoop?

* I Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him, speak him fair.

* Suff. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,

* Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour.

* Far be it, we should honour such as these

* With humble suit; no, rather let my head

* Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,

* Save to the God of heaven, and to my king;

* And sooner dance upon a bloody pole,

* Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom.

* True nobility is exempt from fear:—

* More can I bear, than you dare execute.*

* Cap. Hail him away, and let him talk no more.

* Suff. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can;

* That this my death may never be forgot!—

* Great men oft die by vile bezonians:

* A Roman sworder and bandito slave,

* Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutus' bastard hand

* Stabb'd Julius Cæsar; savage islanders,

* Pompey the Great: and Suffolk dies by pirates.

[Exit SUFF. with WHIT. and others.]

Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,

It is our pleasure, one of them depart:—

Therefore come you with us, and let him go.

[Exeunt all but the first Gentleman.]

Re-enter WHITMORE, with SUFFOLK's Body.

* Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,*

* Until the queen his mistress bury it. [Exit.]

* I Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle!

* His body will I bear unto the king:

* If he revenge it not, yet will his friends:

* So will the queen, that living held him dear.

[Exit, with the Body.]

SCENE II. Blackheath. Enter GEORGE BEVIS and JOHN HOLLAND.

* Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made * of a lath; they have been up these two days.

* John. They have the more need to sleep now

* then.

* Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means * to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set

* a new nap upon it.

* John. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well,

* I say, it was never merry world in England, since

* gentlemen came up.*

1 The source from whence this line has been extracted has not yet been discovered. The following lines are the nearest which have been found in the Classic Poets:—

* Subitus tremor occupat artus. Virg. Æn. v. 446.

* Ille quidem gelidæ radorum viribus artus. Ovid. Metam. iv. 947.

* Nervus, confusus gelido pallore timorem. De Tristib. El. iii. 113.

2 "— I am able now, methinks

(Out of a fortitude of soul I feel.)

To endure more miseries, and greater far,

Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer."

King Henry VIII.

Again in Othello:—

"Thou hast not half the power to do me harm,

As I have to be hurt."

3 According to the Letter in the Paston Collection, already cited, the cutting off of Suffolk's head was very barbarously performed. "One of the lowest of the ship bede him lay down his head, and he should be fairly ferd [dead] with, and dye on a sword; and took a rusty sword and smote off his head within half a dozen strokes."

4 A bezonian is a mean low person.

5 Pompey was killed by Achilles and Septimius at the moment that the Egyptian fishing boat in which they

* Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded
 * in handicrafts-men.

* John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather
 * aprons.

* Geo. Nay more, the king's council are no good
 * workmen.

* John. True; And yet it is said,—Labour in thy
 * vocation; which is as much to say, as,—let the * magistrates be labouring men; and therefore * should we be magistrates.

* Geo. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better
 * sign of a brave mind, than a hard hand.

* John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's

* son, the tanner of Wingham;—

* Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies,

* to make dog's leather of.

* John. And Dick the butcher,——

* Geo. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and

* iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

* John. And Smith the weaver:—

* Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

* John. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drum. Enter CADE, DICK the Butcher, SMITH the Weaver, and others in great number.

* Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our sup* posed father,——

* Dick. Or rather, of stealing a cade of herring.*

[Aside.]

* Cade.—for our enemies shall fall before us,

* inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and

* princes.—Command silence.

* Dick. Silence!

* Cade. My father was a Mortimer.—

* Dick. He was an honest man, and a good brick-

* layer. [Aside.]

* Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,—

* Dick. I knew her well, she was a midwife.

[Aside.]

* Cade. My wife descended of the Lacios,—

* Dick. She was, indeed, a pedler's daughter, and

* sold many laces. [Aside.]

* Smith. But, now of late, not able to travel with

* her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home.

[Aside.]

* Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

* Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable;

* and there was he born, under a hedge; for his father

* had never a house, but the cage.* [Aside.]

* Cade. Valiant I am.

* Smith. 'A must needs; for beggary is valiant.

[Aside.]

* Cade. I am able to endure much.

* Dick. No question of that; for I have seen him

* whipped three market days together. [Aside.]

were, reached the coast, his head being thrown into the sea, a circumstance sufficiently resembling Suffolk's death to bring it to the poet's memory; though his mention of it is not quite accurate. In the old play Pompey is not named.

6 They "laid his body on the sands of Dover, and some say that his head was set on a pole by K.—Paston's Letters, vol. i. p. 41.

7 The same phrase was used by the duke of Suffolk to Wolsey and Campeggio in the reign of Henry VIII. "With that stepped forth the duke of Suffolk from the king, and by his commandment spake these words, with a stout and hault countenance—"It was never merry England (quoth he) whilst we had cardinals among us."—Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, p. 167, ed. 1835.

8 Tom Nashe speaks of having weighed one of Gabriel Harvey's books against a cade of herrings, and ludicrously says, "That the rebel Jack Cade was the first that devised to put red herrings in cades, and from him they have their name."—Lenten Stuffe, 1590.—Cade, however, is derived from cadus, Lat. a cask. We may add, from the accounts of the Celestine of the Abbey of Barking, in the Monasticon Anglicanum, "a barrel of herring should contain a thousand herrings, and a cade of herring six hundred, six score to the hundred." Cade, with more learning than should naturally fall to his character, alludes to his name from cado, to fall.

9 "Little places of prison, set commonly in the market place for harlots and vagabonds, we call cages."—Baret.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of proof.¹ [Aside.]

Dick. But, methinks, he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt by the hand for stealing of sheep.

Cade. Be brave then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be, in England, seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops;² and I will make it felony, to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my palfrey go to grass. And, when I am king (as king I will be)——

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I thank you, good people:—there shall be no money;³ all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord.

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I mean to do.⁴ Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say, the bee stings; but I say, 'tis the bee's wax; for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now; who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read, and cast account.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. He's a book in his pocket, with red letters in't.

Cade. Nay, then he is a conjurer.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations,⁵ and write court-hand.

Cade. I am sorry for't: the man is a proper man, on mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die.—Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: Whm is thy name?

Clerk. Emmaruel.

Dick. They use to write on the top of letters;⁶—'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone:—Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him; he's a villain, and a traitor.

Cade. Away with him, I say: hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.

[Exeunt some with the Clerk.]

Enter MICHAEL.

Mich. Where's our general?

Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

1 A quibble is most probably intended between two senses of the word: one as being able to resist, the other as being well tried, that is, long worn.

2 These drinking vessels of our ancestors were of wood. Nash, in his Pierce Penniless, 1593, says, 'I believe hoopes in quart pots were invented to that end, that every man should take his hoope, and no more.'

3 'To mend the world by banishing money is an old contrivance of those who did not consider that the quarrels and mischiefs which arise from money, as the signs or tokens of riches, must, if riches were to cease, arise from riches themselves, and could never be at an end till every man was contented with his own share of the goods of life.'—Johnson.

4 This speech was transposed by Shakespeare from a subsequent scene in the old play.

5 i. e. bonds.

6 That is on the top of Letters Mixte and such like public acts. See Mabilion's Diplomata.

7 After this speech, in the old play, are the following words:

'—Is there any more of them that be knights?

Mich. Fly, fly! Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down: He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: He is but a knight, is 'a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently: Rise up Sir John Mortimer. Now have at him.

Enter SIR HUMPHREY STAFFORD, and WILLIAM his Brother, with Drum and Forces.

 Staf.* Rebellious hinds, and filth and scum of Kent,

 Mark'd for the gallows,—lay your weapons down,*

 Home to your cottages, forsake this gown;—*

 The king is merciful, if you revolt.*

 W. Staf.* But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to blood,

 If you go forward: therefore yield, or die.*

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not;⁸

It is to you, good people, that I speak,

 O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign;*

 For I am rightful heir unto the crown.*

 Staf.* Villain, thy father was a plasterer;

 And thou thyself, a shearmen, Art thou not?*

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

 W. Staf.* And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this:—Edmund Mortimer, earl of March,

Married the duke of Clarence's daughter; Did he not?

 Staf.* Ay, sir.

Cade. By her, he had two children at one birth

W. Staf. That's false.

 Cade.* Ay, there's the question; but, I say, 'tis true:

 The elder of them, being put to nurse,*

 Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away;*

 And, ignorant of his birth and parentage,*

 Became a bricklayer, when he came to age:*

 His son am I; deny it, if you can.*

Dick. Nay, 'tis too true; therefore he shall be king.

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore, deny it not.

 Staf.* And will you credit this base drudge's words,

 That speaks he knows not what?*

 All.* Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye gone.

W. Staf. Jack Cade, the duke of York hath taught you this.

 Cade.* He lies, for I invented it myself. [Aside.]

—Go to, sirrah. Tell the king from me, that—for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time boys went to span counter for French crowns,—I am content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.

 Dick.* And, furthermore, we'll have the Lord Say's head, for selling the dukedom of Maine.

 Cade.* And good reason; for thereby is England maimed,⁹ and fain to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Follow kings, I tell you, that that Lord Say hath gelded¹⁰ the common-

Tom. Yea, his brother.

Cade. Then kneel down, Dick Butcher; rise up Sir Dick Butcher. Sound up the drum.

 I care not, I pay them no regard.*

 Transform me to what shape you can,*

 I pass not what it be.' Drayton's Quest of Cynthia.*

 The same play upon words is in Daniel's Civil Wars, 1596:—*

 Anjou and Maine, the main that foul appears.'*

 Steevens* observes that 'Shakespeare has here transgressed a rule laid down by Tully, De Oratore:

'Nolo morte dici Africanum casatram esse rempublicam.'

The character of the speaker may countenance such indelicacy here, but in other places our author talks of 'gilding purses, patrimonies, and continents.' I must again remark that in the former instances the phrase was only metaphorically used for diminishing or cur-

* wealth, and made it an omen: and move than
* that, he can speak French, and therefore he is a
* traitor.

* Staff. O gross and miserable ignorance!

* Cade. Nay, answer, if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go to, then, I ask but this;
* Can he, that speaks with the tongue of an enemy,
* be a good counsellor, or no?

* All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

* W. Staff. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevail,

* Assail them with the army of the king.

* Staff. Herald, away: and, throughout every town,

* Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade;

* That those, which fly before the battle ends,

* May, even in their wives' and children's sight,

* Be hang'd up for example at their doors:—

* And you, that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Exeunt the Two STAFFORDS, and Forces.]

* Cade. And you, that love the commons, follow
me.—

* Now show yourselves men, 'tis for liberty.

* We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:

* Spare none, but such as go in clouted shoes;

* For they are thrifty honest men, and such

* As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

* Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.

* Cade. But then are we in order, when we are

* most out of order. Come, march forward.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Another part of Blackheath. Alarums.
The two Parties enter and fight, and both the STAFFORDS are slain.

* Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

* Dick. Here, sir.

* Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behavedst thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house: therefore thus will

* I reward thee.—The Lent shall be as long again

* as it is; and thou shalt have a licence to kill for a * hundred lacking one, a week.³

* Dick. I desire no more.

* Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deservest no

* less. This monument of the victory will I bear;³

* and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's

* heels, till I do come to London, where we will * have the mayor's sword borne before us.

* Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break

* open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.

* Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come,

* let's march towards London.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Palace.
Enter KING HENRY, reading a Supplication; the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM, and LORD SAY with him; at a distance, QUEEN MARGARET, mourning over SUFFOLK's Head.

* Q. Mar. Oft have I heard—that grief softens the mind,

* And makes it fearful and degenerate;

* Think therefore on revenge, and cease to weep.

* But who can cease to weep, and look on this?

tail, and is not peculiar to Shakespeare, but a common form of expression in his time.

1 Shoes.

3 The last two words, a week, were added by Malone from the old play. It is necessary to render the passage intelligible. In the reign of Elizabeth, butchers were strictly enjoined not to sell flesh meat in Lent, not with a religious view, but for the double purpose of diminishing the consumption of flesh meat during that period, and so making it more plentiful during the rest of the year, and of encouraging the fisheries and augmenting the number of seamen. Butchers, who had interest at court, frequently obtained a dispensation to kill a certain number of beasts a week during Lent; of which indulgence, the wants of invalids who could not subsist without animal food, was made the pretence. There are several proclamations on the subject in the library of the Society of Antiquaries.

3 Here Cade must be supposed to take off Stafford's armour. So Holinshed:—'Jack Cade, upon his victory against the Staffords, apparelled himself in Sir Hum-

* Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast:

* But where's the body that I should embrace?

* Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?

* K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop⁴ to entreat:

* For God forbid, so many simple souls

* Should perish by the sword! And I myself,

* Rather than bloody war shall cut them short,

* Will parley with Jack Cade their general.—

* But stay, I'll read it over once again.

* Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely face

* Rul'd, like a wandering planet,⁵ over me;

* And could it not enforce them to relent,

* That were unworthy to behold the same?

* K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to * have thy head.

* Say. Ay, but I hope, your highness shall have his.

* K. Hen. How now, madam? Still

* Lamenting, and mourning for Suffolk's death?

* I fear, my love, if that I had been dead,

* Thou wouldest not have mourn'd so much for me.

* Q. Mar. No, my love, I should not mourn, but die for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

* K. Hen. How now! what news? why com'st thou in such haste?

* Mes. The rebels are in Southwark; Fly, my
lord!

* Jack Cade proclaims himself Lord Mortimer,

* Descended from the duke of Clarence's house:

* And calls your grace usurper, openly,

* And vows to crown himself in Westminster.

* His army is a ragged multitude

* Of hinds and peasants, rude and merciless;

* Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death

* Hath given them heart and courage to proceed:

* All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,

* They call—false caterpillars, and intend their death.

* K. Hen. O graceless men! they know not what they do.⁶

* Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Kenelworth,

* Until a power be rais'd to put them down.

* Q. Mar. Ah! were the duke of Suffolk now alive,

* These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.

* K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee,

* Therefore away with us to Kenelworth.

* Say. So might your grace's person be in danger;

* The sight of me is odious in their eyes:

* And therefore in this city will I stay,

* And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

* 2 Mes. Jack Cade hath gotten London Bridge;
the citizens

* Fly and forsake their houses:

* The rascal people, thirsting after prey,

* Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear,

* To spoil the city, and your royal court.

* Buck. Then linger not, my lord; away, take horse.

phrey's brigandine, set full of gilt nails, and so in glory returned again toward London.' Sir Humphrey Stafford was, in fact, killed at Sevenoaks, and is buried at Bromsgrove, in Staffordshire.

4 Shakespeare has here fallen into another inconsistency, by sometimes following Holinshed instead of the old play. He afterwards forgets this holy bishop: and in scene the eighth we find only Buckingham and Clifford were sent, conformably to the old play. Holinshed mentions that the archbishop of Canterbury and the duke of Buckingham were sent.

5 Predominated irresistibly over my passions, as the planets over those born under their influence. The old play led Shakespeare into this strange exhibition; a queen with the head of her murdered paramour on her bosom, in presence of her husband!

6 Instead of this line the old copy has:—

'Go bid Buckingham and Clifford gather
An army up, and meet with the rebels.'

* K. Hen. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will succour us.

Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is decas'd.
* K. Hen. Farewell, my lord; [To Lord Say.]
trust not the Kentish rebels.

* Buck. Trust nobody, for fear you be betray'd.

* Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
'And therefore am I bold and resolute. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The same. The Tower. Enter Lord Scales, and others on the Walls. Then enter certain Citizens, below.

Scales. How now? is Jack Cade slain?

1 Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: The lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such aid as I can spare, you shall command;

But I am troubled here with these myself,
The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither will I send you Matthew Gough:
Fight for your king, your country, and your lives;
And so farewell, for I must hence again. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. The same. Cannon Street. Enter Jack Cade, and his Followers. He strikes his Staff on London-stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London-stone, I charge and command, that, of the city's cost, the passing-conduit! run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me other than—Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!

Cade. Knock him down there. [They kill him.]

* Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call
* you Jack Cade more; I think he hath a very fair
* warning.

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come then, let's go fight with them: But, first, go and set London Bridge on fire;¹ and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. The same. Smithfield. Alarm.

Enter on one side, CADE and his Company; on the other, Citizens, and the King's Forces, headed by MATTHEW GOUGH. They fight; the Citizens are routed, and MATTHEW GOUGH is slain.

Cade. So, sirs!—Now go some and pull down the Savoy;² others to the inns of court; down with them all.

Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.

1 Whatever offence to modern delicacy may be given by this imagery, such ornaments to fountains appear to have been no uncommon device in ancient times. The curious reader may see a design, probably from the pencil of Benedetto di Montagna, for a very singular fountain of this kind, in that elegant book the Hyperbotomachia, printed by Aldus in 1489. Le Grand, in his Vie Privée des Français, mentions that at a feast made by Philippe-le-Bon, there was 'une statue d'enfant nu, posé sur une roche, et qui de sa broquette pissait eau de rose.' This conduit may, however, have been one set up at the standards in Cheape, according to Stowe, by John Wels, grocer, mayor, in 1480, with a small cistern for fresh water, having one cock continually running.

2 He also got to execution in Southwark diverse persons, some for breaking his ordinance, and other being his old acquaintance, lest they should bewray his base lineage, disparaging him for his usurped name of Mortimer. —Holmehead, p. 634.

3 At that time London Bridge was of wood: the houses upon it were actually burnt in this rebellion. Hall says 'he entered London, and cut the ropes of the drawbridge.'

4 Holmehead calls Matthew Gough 'a man of great wit and much experience in feats of chivalrie, the which in continuall warres had spent his time in serving of the Cade. Be it a lordship thou shalt have it for that word.

* Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.⁵

* John. Mass, 'twill be sore law then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 'tis not whole yet. [Aside.]

* Smith. Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese. [Aside.]

* Cade. I have thought upon it, it shall be so.

* Away, burn all the records of the realm; my mouth shall be the parliament of England.

* John. Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out. [Aside.]

* Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.

* Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here's the Lord Say, which sold the towns in France; * he that made us pay one and twenty fifteens, and * one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter GEORGE BEVIS, with the Lord Say.

* Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times.—Ay, thou say'st thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou withim point-blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty, for giving up of Normandy unto Monsieur Basinecu, the dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee, by these presence, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm, in erecting a grammar-school: and whereas, before, our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; * and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun, and a verb; and such abominable words, as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them;⁶ when, indeed, only for that cause, they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride on a foot-cloth,⁷ dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

king his father.' See also W. of Wyrcestre, p. 337; and the Paston Letters, vol. i. p. 43.

5 'This trouble had been saved Cade's reformers by his predecessor Wat Tyler. It was never so-edified till Henry VI. founded the hospital.'

6 'It was reported, indeed, that he should ease with great pride that within four daies all the laws of England should come forth of his mouth.'—Holmehead, p. 483.

7 A fifteen was the fifteenth part of all the moveables, or personal property of each subject.

8 Say is a kind of thin woollen stuff or serge.

9 Shakespeare is a little too early with this accusation. Yet Meerman, in his Origines Typographicae, has availed himself of this passage to support his hypothesis that printing was introduced into England by Frederic Corvelli, one of Coster's workmen, from Haarlem in the time of Henry VI. Shakespeare's anachronisms are not more extraordinary than those of his contemporaries. Spenser mentions cloth made at Lincoln in the ideal reign of King Arthur, and has adorned a castle at the same period with cloth of Arras and of Tourn.

10 I. e. they were hanged because they could not claim the benefit of clergy.

11 A foot-cloth was a kind of housing which covered the body of the horse: it was sometimes made of velvet and bordered with gold lace. This is a reproach truly characteristic: nothing gives so much offence to the lower orders as the sight of superfluities merely ostentatious.

* Dick. And work in their shirt too ; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You mean of Kent.—

Dick. What say you of Kent ?

Say. Nothing but this : 'Tis bons terre, maie gros !

Cade. Away with him, away with him ! he speaks Latin.

Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you will.

* Kent, in the commentaries Cæsar writ,
Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle ;²
Sweet is the country, because full of riches ;
The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy ;
Which makes me hope you are not void of pity.
I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy :
Yet, to recover them, would lose my life.
Justice with favour have I always done ;
Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never.

* When have I aught exacted at your hands,
Kent, to maintain the king, the realm, and you ?
Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks,
Because my book prefer'd me to the king :
And—seeing ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven,—
Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits,
You cannot but forbear to murder me.
This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings
For your behoof,—

* Cade. Tut ! when struck'st thou one blow in the field ?

Say. Great men have reaching hands ; off have
I struck

* Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.
* Geo. O monstrous coward ! what, to come behind folks ?

* Say. These cheeks are pale for watching for your good.

* Cade. Give him a box o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again.

* Say. Long sitting to determine poor men's causes

Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

* Cade. Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the pap of a hatchet.³

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man ?

Say. The palsy, and not fear, provoketh me.

Cade. Nay, he nods at us ; as who should say, I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will stand steadier on a pole, or no : Take him away, and behead him.

Say. Tell me, wherein I have offended most ?

Have I affected wealth, or honour ; speak ?

Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold ?

1 After this line the old play proceeds thus :—

Cade. Bonus terrenus, What's that ?

Dick. He speaks French.

Will. No, 'tis Dutch.

Nick. No, 'tis Italian : I know it well enough.

2 'Ex his omnibus sunt humanissimi, qui Cantium incolunt.' Cæsar. Thus translated by Ar. Golding, 1590 :—'Of all the inhabitants of the isle, the civilest are the Kentish-folke.' It is said also in the same words in Lyly's Euphues and his England, 1590.

3 This passage has been supposed corrupt merely because it was erroneously pointed. I have now placed a comma at Kent, to show that it is parenthetically spoken ; and then I see not the slightest difficulty in the meaning of the passage. It was thus absurdly pointed in the folio :—

'When have I aught exacted at your hands ?

Kent to maintain, the king, the realm, and you ?

Large gifts, have I bestow'd on learned clerks,' &c.

4 I. e. in consequence of.

5 The old copy reads 'the help of a hatchet.' There can be little doubt but that Dr. Farmer's emendation, 'gasp of a hatchet,' is the true reading : it is a proper accompaniment to the 'hempen caudle.' Lyly wrote a pamphlet with the title of 'Pap with a Hatchet,' and the phrase occurs in his play of Mother Bombie : 'They give us pap with a spoon, and when we speak for what we love, pap with a hatchet.'

6 I. e. these hands are free from shedding guiltless or innocent blood.

* Is my apparel sumptuous to behold ?

* Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death ?

* These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding.

* This breast from harbouring foul deceitful thoughts.

* O, let me live !

* Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words :

but I'll bride it ; he shall die, as it be but for

* pleading so well for his life. Away with him !

* he has a familiar⁷ under his tongue ; he speaks

* not o' God's name. 'Go, take him away, I say,

* and strike off his head presently ; and then break

* into his son-in-law's house, Sir James Cromer,⁸

* and strike off his head, and bring them both upon

* two poles hither.

* All. It shall be done.

* Say. Ah, countrymen ! if when you make your

* prayers,

* God should be so obdurate as yourselves,

* How would it fare with your departed souls ?

* And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

* Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye.

(Escort some, with LORD SAY.)

* The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a * head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute :

* there shall not a maid be married, but she shall

* pay to see her maidenhead ere they have it :⁹

* Men shall hold of me in capite ; and we charge

* and command, that their wives be as free as heart

* can wish, or tongue can tell.

* Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheap-

* side, and take up commodities upon our bills ?¹⁰

* Cade. Marry, presently.

* All. O brave !

Re-enter Rebels, with the Heads of LORD SAY, and his Son-in-law.

* Cade. But is not this braver ?—Let them kiss

* one another,¹¹ for they loved well, when they were

* alive. Now part them again, lest they consurt

* about the giving up of some more towns in France.

* Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night :

* for with these horns before us, instead of maces,

* will we ride through the streets ; and, at every

* corner, have them kiss.—Away ! (Escort.)

SCENE VIII. Southwark. *Alarum. Enter
CADE, and all his Rabblement.*

* Cade. Up Fish Street ! down Saint Magnus'

* Corner ! kill and knock down ! throw them out

* Thames !—[A Parley soundeth, then a Retreat.]

* What noise is this I hear ? Dare any be so bold

* to sound retreat or parley, when I command them

* kill ?

7 A demon who was supposed to attend at call.

8 It was William Crommer, sheriff of Kent, whom Cade put to death. Lord Say and he had been previously sent to the Tower, and both, or at least the former, convicted of treason at Cade's mock commission of Oyer and Terminer at Guildhall. See W. of Wyrcaster,
p. 476.

9 Alluding to an ancient usage, on which Beaumont and Fletcher have founded their play called the Custom of the Country. See Cowell's Law Dictionary, or Blount's Glossographia, 1681, in voce Marcheta. Blackstone is of opinion that it never prevailed in England, though he supposes it certainly did in Scotland. Boetius and Skene both mention this custom as existing in the time of Malcolm III. A. D. 1057. Sir D. Dalrymple controversies the fact, and denies the actual existence of the custom ; as does Whitaker in his History of Manchester. There are several ancient grants from our early kings to their subjects, written in rude verse, and empowering them to enjoy their lands as 'free as heart can wish or tongue can tell.' The authenticity of them, however, is doubtful. See Blount's Jocular Tenures.

10 An equivocal alluding to the halberds or bills borne by the rabble. Shakespeare has the same quibble in Much Ado about Nothing, Act II. Sc. 2.

11 This may be taken from the Legend of Jack Cade in the Mirror for Magistrates, as Dr. Farmer observes but both Hall and Holshed mention the circumstance.

Enter BUCKINGHAM, and Old CLIFFORD, with Forces.

'Buck. Ay, here they be that dare and will disturb thee :

'Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king
'Unto the commons whom thou hast misled ;
'And here pronounce free pardon to them all,
'That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

'Cliff. What say ye, countrymen ? will ye relent,
'And yield to mercy, whilst 'tis offer'd you ;
'Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths ?
'Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon,
'Fling up his cap, and say—God save his majesty !
'Who hateth him, and honours not his father,
'Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake,
'Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by.

'All. God save the king ! God save the king !

'Cade. What, Buckingham, and Clifford, are ye so brave ?—And you, base peasants, do ye believe him ? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks ? Hath my sword therefore broke through London Gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark ? I thought, ye would never have given out these arms, till you had recovered your ancient freedom : but you are all recreants, and dastards ; and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your backs with burdens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces ; For me,—I will make shift for one ; and so—God's curse light upon you all !

'All. We'll follow Cade, we'll follow Cade.

'Cliff. Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth,
'That thus you do exclaim—'you'll go with him ?
'Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
'And make the meanest of you earls and dukes ?
'Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to ;
'Nor knows he how to live, but by the spoil,
'Unless by robbing of your friends, and us.
'Wer't not a shame, that whilst you live at jar,
'The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
'Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you ?
'Methinks, already, in this civil broil,
'I see them lording it in London streets,
'Crying—Villagers ! unto all they meet.
'Better, ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry,
'Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy.
'To France, to France, and get what you have lost ;
'Spare England, for it is your native coast :
'Henry hath money, you are strong and manly ;
'God on our side, doubt not of victory.

'All. A Clifford ! a Clifford ! we'll follow the king, and Clifford.

'Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro, as this multitude ? the name of Henry the Fifth hales them to a hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together, to surprise me : my sword make way for me, for here is no staying.—In despite of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you ! and heavens and honour be witness, that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels. [Exit.]

'Buck. What, is he fled ? go some, and follow him ;

'And he, that brings his head unto the king,
'Shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.—

[Exeunt some of them.]

'Follow me, soldiers ; we'll devise a mean
'To reconcile you all unto the king. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX. Kenilworth Castle. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, and SOMERSET, on the Terrace of the Castle.

* K. Hen. Was ever king that joy'd an earthly throne,

* And could command no more content than I ?

* No sooner was I crept out of my cradle,

* But I was made a king, at nine months old—

* Was never subject long'd to be a king,

* As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and CLIFFORD.

* Buck. Health, and glad tidings, to your majesty !

* K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor, Cade, surpris'd ?

* Or is he but retir'd to make him strong ?

Enter, below, a great number of CADE'S Followers, with Halters about their Necks.

'Cliff. He's fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield ;

'And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,

'Expect your highness' doom, of life, or death.

* K. Hen. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gates,

'To entertain my vows of thanks and praise !—

'Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,

'And shoud' how well you love your prince and country :

'Continue still in this so good a mind,

'And Henry, though he be unfortunate,

'Assure yourselves, will never be unkind :

'And so, with thanks, and pardon to you all,

'I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All. God save the king ! God save the king !

Enter a Messenger.

* Mess. Please it your grace to be advertised,

* The duke of York is newly come from Ireland ;

* And with a puissant and a mighty power,

* Of Gallowglasses, and stout Kernes,³

* Is marching hitherward in proud array ;

* And still proclaimeth, as he comes along,

* His arms are only to remove from thee

* The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

* K. Hen. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and York distress'd ;

* Like to a ship, that, having scap'd a tempest,

* Is straightway calm'd⁴ and boarded with a pirate ;

* But now⁵ is Cade driven back, his men dispers'd ;

* And now is York in arms to second him.—

* I pray thee, Buckingham, go forth and meet him ;

* And ask him, what's the reason of these arms,

* Tell him, I'll send Duke Edmund to the Tower ;—

* And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither,

* Until his army be dismiss'd from him.

* Som. My lord,

* I'll yield myself to prison willingly,

* Or unto death, to do my country good.

* K. Hen. In any case, be not too rough in terms ;

* For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language.

* Buck. I will, my lord ; and doubt not so to deal,

* As all things shall redound unto your good.

* K. Hen. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better :

* For yet may England curse my wretched reign. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X. Kent. Iden's Garden.⁶ Enter CADE.

* Cade. Fye on ambition ! fye on myself ; that

1 So all the historians agree ; and yet in Part I. Act III. Sc. 4, King Henry is made to say :—

'I do remember how my father said'—

a plain proof that the whole of that play was not written by the same hand as this.

2 'The Gallowglasses' useth a kind of pollax for his weapon. These men are grim of countenance, tall of stature, big of limbe, lusty of body, wel and strongly timbered. The kernes is an ordinary foot-soldier, using for weapon his sword and target, and sometimes his pike, being commonly good marksmen.—Blanchard's Description, of Ireland, c. vill. f. 21.

3 The first folio reads calme ; which may be right. The second folio printed by mistake claimed ; and the third folio calm'd. This reading has been adopted as most perspicuous, and because in Othello we have :—
'— must be be-lee'd and calm'd.

4 But is here not adverbative. 'It was only just now (says Henry,) that Cade and his followers were routed.'

5 'A gentleman of Kent, named Alexander Eden, awaited so his time, that he took the said Cade in a garden in Sussex, so that there he was slain at Hothfield,' &c.—Holinshead, p. 635. 'This Eden was, in fact, the new sheriff of Kent, who had followed Cade from Rochester.'—William of Wyke, p. 472.

* have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These * five days have I hid me in these woods; and
 * durst not peep out, for all the country is lay'd for * me: but now am I so hungry, that if I might have
 * a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could * stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick-wall have
 * I climbed into this garden; to see if I can eat
 * grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not
 * amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather.
 * And, I think, this word sallet was born to do me
 * good: for, many a time, but for a sallet,¹ my * brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill; and,
 * many a time when I have been dry, and bravely
 * marching, it hath served me instead of a quart-
 * pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must
 * serve me to feed on.

Enter IDEN, with Servants.

* Iden. Lord, who would live turmoiled in the court,
 * And may enjoy such quiet walks as these?
 * This small inheritance, my father left me,
 * Contenteth me, and is worth a monarchy.
 * I seek not to wax great by others' waning;
 * Or gather wealth, I care not with what envy;
 * Sufficeth, that I have maintain my state,
 * And send the poor well pleased from my gate.

* Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize
 * me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without * leave. Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get
 * a thousand crews of the king for carrying my * head to him; but I'll make thee eat iron like an
 * ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin,
 * ere thou and I part.

* Iden. Why, rude companion, whatso'er thou be,
 * I know thee not; Why then should I betray thee?
 * Is't not enough, to break into my garden,
 * And, like a thief, to come and rob my grounds,
 * Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
 * But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms?

* Cade. Brave thee? ay, by the best blood that * ever was broached, and beard thee too. Look on * me well: I have eat no meat these five days; yet,
 * come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave
 * you all as dead as a door nail,² I pray God, I may
 * never eat grass more.

* Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England
 * stands,

That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent,
 Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.
 * Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes to mine,
 * See if thou canst outface me with thy looks.
 * Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
 * Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
 * Thy leg a stick, compared with this truncheon;
 * My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
 * And if mine arm be heaved in the air,
 * Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.
 * As for words, whose greatness answers words,³
 * Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

* Cade. By my valour, the most complete cham* pion that ever I heard.—'Steel, if thou turn the * edge, or cut not out the burly-boned clown in
 * chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I be* seech God⁴ on my knees, thou mayest be turned * to hobsnails. [They fight; CADE falls.] O, I am
 * slain! famine, and no other, hath slain me: let
 * ten thousand devils come against me, and give me
 * but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them
 * all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a bury-

1 A sallet is a helmet.

2 See note on the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act v. Sc. 2.

3 Johnson explains this, 'As for words, whose pomp and rumour may answer words, and only words, I shall forbear them, and refer the rest to my sword.'

4 In the folio 'I beseech Jove' was substituted to avoid the penalty of the statute, 3 Jac. I. c. 2, against profane swearing. Cade was very unlikely to swear by Jove.

5 This sentiment is much more correctly expressed in the quarto:—

'O sword, I'll honour thee for this, and in my chamber shall thou hang, as a monument to after age,
 For this great service thou hast done to me.'

ing-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled.

* Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous
 traitor?

* Sword. I will hallow thee for this thy deed,

* And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead:

* Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point;

* But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,

* To emblaze the honour that thy master got.

* Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory: Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best * man, and exhort all the world to be cowards; for

* I, that never feared any, am vanquished by famine,

* not by valour. [Disc.]

* Iden. How much thou wrong'st me,⁶ heaven be my judge.

* Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare
 thee!

* And as I thrust thy body in with my sword,

* So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell.

* Hence wilt I drag thee headlong by the heels

* Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave,

* And there cut off thy most ungracious head;

* Which I will bear in triumph to the king,

* Leaving thy trunk for crows to feed upon.

[Exit, dragging out the Body.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. *The same. Fields between Dartford and Blackheath. The King's Camp on one side.
 On the other, enter YORK attended with Drum and Colours: his Forces at some distance.*

* York. From Ireland thus comes York, to claim his right,

* And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:

* Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, fear and bright,

* To entertain great England's lawful king.

Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee dear?

* Let them obey that know not how to rule;

* This hand was made to handle nought but gold:

* I cannot give due action to my words,

* Except a sword, or sceptre, balance it.⁸

* A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul;⁹

* On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

* Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb
 me?

* The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.

* Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee
 well.

* York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.

* Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

* Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,

* To know the reason of these arms in peace;

* Or why, thou—being a subject as I am,—

* Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn,

* Should'st raise so great a power without his leave,

* Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

* York. Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great.

* O, I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint,

* I am so angry at these abject terms;

* And now, like Ajax Telamonius,

* On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury!

Aside.

6 Johnson erroneously interprets this, 'In supposing that I am proud of my victory.' Iden evidently means that Cade wrongs him by undervaluing his prowess.

7 Not to dwell upon the wickedness of this horrid wish, with which Iden debases his character, the whole of this speech is wild and confused. The quarto is more favourable both to Iden's morality and language. This faulty amplification was owing to the desire of expanding a scanty thought in the old play. It can hardly be treated as an interpolation, however we may desire to think it such.

8 i. e. balance my hand.

9 York means to say, 'If I have a soul, my end shall not be without a sceptre'

'I am far better born than is the king:
'More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts:
'But I must make fair weather yet awhile,
'Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.—
'O Buckingham, I prythee, pardon me,
'That I have given no answer all this while;
'My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.
'The cause why I have brought this army hither,
'Is—to remove proud Somerset from the king,
'Seditious to his grace and to the state.
'Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part:
'But if thy arms be to no other end,
'The king hath yielded unto thy demand;
'The duke of Somerset is in the Tower.
York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner?
Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.
'York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers.—
'Soldiers, I thank you all: disperse yourselves;
'Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,
'You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.
'And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
'Command my eldest son,—nay, all my sons,
'As pledges of my fealty and love,
'I'll send them all as willing as I live;
'Lands, goods, horse, armour, any thing I have
'Is his to use, so Somerset may die.
'Buck. York. I commend this kind submission:
'We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter KING HENRY, attended.

'K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend go harm to us,
'That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm?
'York. In all submission and humility,
'York doth present himself unto your highness.
'K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring?
'York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence;
'And fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
'Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter IDEN, with CADE's Head.

'Iden. If one so rude, and of so mean condition,
'May pass into the presence of a king,
'Lo, I present your grace a traitor's head,
'The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.
'K. Hen. The head of Cade?—Great God, how just art thou!—
'O, let me view his visage being dead,
'That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.
'Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him?
'Iden. I was, an't like your majesty.
'K. Hen. How art thou call'd? and what is thy degree?
'Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name;
'A poor squire of Kent, that loves his king.
'Buck. So please it you, my lord, 'twere not amiss
'He were created knight for his good service.
'K. Hen. Iden, kneel down; [He kneels.] Rise up a knight.
'We give thee for reward a thousand marks;
'And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.
'Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty,
'And never live but true unto his liege!
'K. Hen. See, Buckingham! Somerset comes with the queen;
'Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

1 Iden has before said:—

'Lord, who would live turmold in a court,
'And may enjoy such quiet walks as these,' &c.
This is strictly a picture of poor human nature. He rails at enjoyments which he supposes out of his reach; but no sooner are they offered to him, but he embraces them eagerly. Shakspeare has in this instance followed the old play.

2 'Mysus et Zemonis juvenis qua cupido vulnus
Senserat, hac ipse cupido sensit opem.'

Propert' lib. ii. El. 1.

3 Custody, confinement.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET and SOMERSET.

'Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,
'But boldly stand, and front him to his face.
'York. How now! Is Somerset at liberty?
'Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd thoughts,
'And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
'Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?—
'False king! why hast thou broken faith with me,
'Knowing how hardly I can break abuse?
'King did I call thee? no, thou art not king;
'Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
'Which dar'st not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.
'That head of thine doth not become a crown;
'Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,
'And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.
'That gold must rouse enrigt these brows of mine;
'Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear,
'Is able with the change to kill and cure.
'Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,
'And with the same to act controlling laws.
'Give place; by heaven, thou shalt rule no more
'O'er him, whom heaven created for thy ruler.
'Som. O monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee, York,
'Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown:
'Obey, audacious traitor; kneel for grace.
'York. Would'st have me kneel? first let me ask of thee,

'If they can brook I bow a knee to man.—

'Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail;

[Exit an Attendant.]

'I know, ere they will have me go to ward,
'They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement.

'Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come again,

'To say, if that the bastard boys of York
'Shall be the surety for their traitor father.
'York. O blood-spotted Neapolitan,
'Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge!
'The sons of York, thy betters in their birth,
'Shall be their father's bail: and bane to those
'That for my surety will refuse the boys.

Enter EDWARD and RICHARD PLANTAGENET with Forces, at one side; at the other, with Forces also, Old CLIFFORD and his Son.

'See, where they come; I'll warrant they'll make it good.

'Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bail.

'Clif. Health and all happiness to my lord the king! [Kneels.]

'York. I thank thee, Clifford: Say, what news with thee?

'Nay, do not fright us with an angry look:

'We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again;

'For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.

'Clif. This is my king, York, I do not mistake;

'But thou mistak'st me much, to think I do:

'To Bedlam⁴ with him? is the man grown weak?

'K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour

'Makes him oppose himself against his king.

'Clif. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,

'And chop away that factious pate of his.

'Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey;

'His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.

'York. Will you not, sons?

'Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.

'Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall.

⁴ This has been thought an anachronism; but Stowe shows that it is not: 'Next unto the parish of St. Bussolp is a faire inn for receipt of travellers; then an hospital of St. Mary of Bethlem, founded by Blanche Fitz-Mary, one of the Shereifes of London, in the year 1266. He founded it to have bene a priory of canons with brethren and sisters, and King Edward the Third granted a procecion, which I have seen, for the brethren Militia beata Maria de Bethlem, within the citie of London, the 14th years of his reigne. It was an hospital for distracted people.'—Survey of London, p. 127, 1603.

- * Clif. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here!
 * York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;
 * I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor.—
 * Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,¹
 * That, with the very shaking of their chains,
 * They may astonish these fell lurking curs;
 * Bid Salisbury, and Warwick, come to me.

Drums. Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY, with Forces.

- * Clif. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
 * And manacle the bearward in their chains,
 * If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place.
 * Rick. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur
 * Run back and bite, because he was withheld;
 * Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,²
 * Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs, and cried:
 * And such a piece of service wilt you do,
 * If you oppose yourselves to match Lord Warwick.
 * Clif. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump,
 * As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!
 * York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anon.
 * Rick. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn yourselves.

- * K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot to bow?
 * Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair,
 * Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son!—
 * What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,
 * And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?
 * O, where is faith? O, where is loyalty?
 * If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
 * Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?—
 * Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,
 * And shame thine honourable age with blood?
 * Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
 * Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
 * For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,
 * That bows unto the grave with mickle age.
 * Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself
 * The title of this most renowned duke;
 * And in my conscience do repute his grace
 * The rightful heir to England's royal seat.
 * K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?
 * Sal. I have.
 * K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such an oath?
 * Sal. It is great sin, to swear unto a sin;
 * But greater sin, to keep a sinful oath.
 * Who can be bound by any solemn vow
 * To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
 * To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
 * To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
 * To wring the widow from her custom'd right;
 * And have no other reason for this wrong,
 * But that he was bound by a solemn oath?
 * Q. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.
 * K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself.
 * York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast,
 * I am resolv'd for death or dignity.

- * Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove true.
 * War. You were best to go to bed, and dream again,
 * To keep thee from the tempest of the field.
 * Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm,
 * Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;
 * And that I'll write upon thy burgoonet,
 * Might I but know thee by thy household badge.
 * War. Now, by my father's badge, old Nevil's crest,
 * The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,
 * This day I'll wear aloft my burgoonet,³
 * (As on a mountain top the cedar shows,
 * That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,
 * Even to affright thee with the view thereof.)
 * Clif. And from thy burgoonet I'll rend thy bear,
 * And tread it under foot with all contempt,
 * Despight the bearward that protects the bear.
 * Y. Clif. And so to arms, victorious father,
 * To quell the rebels, and their complices.
 * Rick. Fye! charity, for shame! speak not in spite,
 * For you shall sup with Jesus Christ to-night.
 * Y. Clif. Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell.
 * Rick. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell.
 * [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II. Saint Albans. Alarums: Excursions. Enter WARWICK.

- * War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls!
 * And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
 * Now,—when the angry trumpet sounds alarm,
 * And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,—
 * Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!
 * Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
 * Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.
 * Enter YORK.
 * How now, my noble lord? what, all a-foot?
 * York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;
 * But match to match I have encounter'd him,
 * And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
 * Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well.⁴

- Enter CLIFFORD.
 * War. Of one or both of us the time is come.
 * York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase,
 * For I myself must hunt this deer to death.⁵
 * War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou fight'st—
 * As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
 * It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd.
 * [Exit WARWICK.]
 * Clif. What secret thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?
 * York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
 * But that thou art so fast mine enemy.
 * Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem,
 * But that 'tis shown ignobly, and in treason.
 * York. So let it help me now against thy sword,
 * As I in justice and true right express it!
 * Clif. My soul and body on the action both!—
 * York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly.
 * [They fight, and CLIFFORD falls.]
 * Clif. La fin couronne les courtes. [Dies.]

1 The Nevils, earls of Warwick, had a bear and ragged staff for their crest.
 2 Bear-baiting was not only a popular but a royal entertainment in the poet's time. See Stowe's account of Queen Elizabeth's amusements of this kind, or Laneham's Letter concerning the entertainments at Kenilworth Castle. 'Being suffer'd to approach the bear's fell paw' may be the meaning; but it is probable that suffer'd is used for made to suffer.
 3 A burgoonet is a helmet; a Burgundian's steel cap or casque.
 4 One on whom nature has set a mark of deformity, a stigma. It was originally and properly 'a person who had been branded with a hot iron for some crime. One notably defamed for naughtiness.' See Bullokar's Expositor, 1616; or Blount's Glossography, 1674.
 H

5 In the old play—
 'The bonniest gray, that e'er was bred in north.'
 6 This passage will remind the classical reader of Achilles' conduct in the twenty-second Iliad, v. 306, where he expresses his determination that Hector should fall by no other hand than his own.
 7 A dreadful wager; a tremendous stake.
 8 The author, in making Clifford fall by the hand of York, has departed from the truth of history, a practice not uncommon with him when he does his utmost to make his characters considerable. This circumstance, however, serves to prepare the reader or spectator for the vengeance afterwards taken by Clifford's son on York and Rutland. At the beginning of the third part of this drama the poet has forgot this circumstance, and 'York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.

Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will!

[Exit.]

Enter Young CLIFFORD.

* Y. Cliff. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout:

* Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
* Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell,
* Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
* Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
* Hot coals of vengeance! Let no soldier fly:
* He that is truly dedicate to war,
* Hath no self-love; nor he, that loves himself,
* Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
* The name of valour.—O, let the vile world end,
[Seeing his dead Father.]

* And the promised flames of the last day
* Knit earth and heaven together!
* Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
* Particularities and petty sounds
* To cease!—Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,
* To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve?
* The silver livery of advis'd age;
* And, in thy reverence, and thy chair-days, thus
* To die in ruffian battle?—Even at this sight,
* My heart is turn'd to stone: and, while 'tis mine,
* It shall be stony. York not our old men spares;
* No more will I their babes: tears virginal
* Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
* And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
* Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.
* Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:
* Meet I an infant of the house of York,
* Into as many gobbets will I cut it,
* As wild Medea young Absyrtus did:
* In cruelty will I seek out my fame.
* Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house:

[Taking up the body.]

* As did Æneas old Anchisee bear,
* So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders:
* But then Æneas bare a living load,
* Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine. [Exit.]

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET and SOMERSET, fighting, and SOMERSET is killed.

Rich. So, lie thou there;—

* For underneath an alchouse's paltry sign,
* The Castle in Saint Albans, Somerset
* Hath made the wizard famous in his death.—
* Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still:
* Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.]

Alarums: Excursions. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, and others, retreating.

* Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow; for shame, away!

there represents Clifford's death as it really happened:—

* Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all abreast,
* Charg'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in,
* Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.
These lines were adopted by Shakspeare from The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York, upon which the Third Part of King Henry VI. is founded.

1 Premised is sent before their time. The sense is

* let the flames reserved for the last day be sent now.

2 To cease is to stop, a verb active.

3 To achieve is to arrive at, or accomplish.

4 i. e. circumspect, cautious.

5 In that period of life which is entitl'd to command reverence. Reverend canities. Shakspeare has used the word in the same manner in As You Like It, where Orlando says to his brother (speaking of their father) 'thou art indeed nearer to his reverence.'

6 When Medea fled with Jason from Colchos, she murder'd her brother Absyrtus, and cut his body into several pieces, that her father might be prevented for some time from pursuing her.

7 The death of Somerset here accomplishes that equivocal prediction of Joudain the witch in the first act:—

* Let him shun castles:

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains

Than where castles mounted stand.

Such equivocal predictions were much in vogue in early times and the fall of many eminent persons is by the

* K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay.

* Q. Mar. What are you made of? you'll not fight, nor fly:

* Nor is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,

* To give the enemy way: and to secure us

* By what we can, which can no more but fly.

[Alarm afar off.]

* If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom

* Of all our fortunes: but if we haply scape

* (As well we may, if not through your neglect,)

* We shall to London get; where you are lov'd;

* And where this breach, now in our fortunes made,

* May readily be stopp'd.

Enter Young CLIFFORD.

* Y. Cliff. But that my heart's on future mischief set,

* I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly;

* But fly you must; uncurable discomfit

* Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.¹⁰

* York. Of Salisbury, who can report of him;

* That winter lion, who, in rage forgets

* Aged contusions and all brush of time;¹¹

* And, like a gallant in the brow of youth,¹²

* Repairs him with occasion? this happy day

* Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,

* If Salisbury be lost.

* Rich. My noble father

* Three times to-day I help him to his horse,

* Three times bestrid him,¹³ thrice I led him off,

* Persuaded him from any further act:

* But still, where danger was, still there I met him;

* And like rich hangings in a homely house,

* So was his will in his old feeble body.

* But, noble as he is, look where he comes.

Enter SALISBURY.

* Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day;

* By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you, Richard:

* God knows, how long it is I have to live;

* And it hath pleas'd him, that three times to-day

* You have defended me from imminent death.—

* Well, lords, we have not got that which we have;¹⁴

* 'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,

* Being opposites of such repairing nature.¹⁵

* York. I know, our safety is to follow them;

* For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,

Chronicles represented as accomplishing them: being delivered in obscure terms, any fortuitous event was the more readily supposed to verify them.

8 This line, Stevens observes, may serve to counterbalance his emendation of a passage at the commencement of the third scene, Act iv. of Macbeth, where he proposed to read 'and wisdom is it to offer,' &c. See note on that passage.

9 This expression, the bottom of all our fortunes, is peculiarly Shakspeare's; he has it in King Henry IV. Part i.:

* The very bottom and the soul of hope,

The very list, the very utmost bound

Of all our fortunes.

10 Parts may stand for parties; but I cannot help thinking that it is an error for party; by which, as Mr. Tyrwhitt and Stevens observe, the jingle of hearts and parts would be avoided.

11 Warburton would substitute 'all brisae of time.' But, as Stevens observes, 'the brush of time' is the gradual destruction of time.

12 i. e. the height of youth: the brow of a hill is its summit.

13 That is 'three times I saw him fallen, and striding over him defended him till he recovered.'

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY THE SIXTH:

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE action of this play opens just after the first battle of St. Albans [May 23, 1455,] wherein the York faction carried the day; and closes with the murder of King Henry VI. and the birth of Prince Edward, afterwards King Edward V. [November 4, 1471.] So that this history takes in the space of full sixteen years.

The title of the old play, which Shakespeare altered and improved, is 'The True Tragedie of Richard Duke of Yorke, and the Death of good King Henry the Sixth: with the whole Contention between the Two Houses of Lancaster and Yorke: as it was sundrie times acted by the Right Honourable the Earle of Pembroke his Servants. Printed at London by P. S. for Thomas Millington, and are to be sold at his Shoppe under St. Peter's Church in Cornwal, 1594.' There was another edition in 1609 by the same publisher: and it was reprinted in 1632 by the same publisher.

duced with the name of Shakspeare on the title page, printed by T. P. no date, but ascertained to have been printed in 1619.

The present historical drama was altered by Crown, and brought on the stage in 1680, under the title of The Miseries of Civil War. Surely the works of Shakespeare could have been little read at that period; for Crown, in his prologue, declares the play to be entirely his own composition:—

'For by his feeble skill 'tis built alone,
The divine Shakspeare did not lay one stone.'

Whereas the very first scene is that of Jack Cade, copied almost verbatim from the Second Part of King Henry VI. and several others from this Third Part, with a little variation.

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. The Parliament House.
Drums. Some Soldiers of York's party break in.
Then, enter the DUKE OF YORK, EDWARD,
RICHARD, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, WARWICK, and others, with white Roses, in their Hats.

Warwick.

I wonder, how the king escap'd our hands.
York. While we pursu'd the horsemen of the north.

He stily stole away, and left his men :
Whereat the great lord of Northumberland,

Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat,
' Cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself,
' Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all abreast,
' Charg'd our main battle's front; and, breaking in,
' Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.³

Edw. Lord Stafford's father, duke of Buckingham.

‘ Is either slain, or wounded dangerous :
I cleft his beaver with a downright blow ;
‘ That this is true, father, behold his blood.

[Showing his bloody Sword.
Mont. And, brother, here's the earl of Wiltshire's blood, [To York, showing his.
Whom I encounter'd as the battles join'd.

1 This play is only divided from the former for the convenience of exhibition; for the series of action is continued without interruption, nor are any two scenes of any play more closely connected than the first scene of this play with the last of the former.—Johnson.

2 See the former play, p. 266. Shakspeare has fallen into this inconsistency by following the old plays in the construction of these dramas.

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.

[Throwing down the DUKES of SOMERSET'S Head.]

* York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons.—

What, is your grace dead, my lord of Somerset?

Norw. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt!

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henry's head.

War. And so do I.—Victorious prince of York, Before I see thee seated in that throne

Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,

I vow by heaven, these eyes shall never close.

This is the palace of the fearful king,

* And this the regal seat: possess it, York:

For this is thine, and not King Henry's heirs'.

York. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I will;

* For hither we have broken in by force.

Norw. We'll all assist you; he, that flies, shall die.

York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk.—Stay by me, my lords:—

* And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night.

War. And, when the king comes, offer him no violence,

* Unless he seek to thrust you out by force.

[They retire.]

* York. The queen, this day, here holds her parliament,

* But little thinks we shall be of her council:

* By words, or blows, here let us win our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.

War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd,

Unless Plantagenet, duke of York, be king;

And bashful Henry depos'd, whose cowardice

Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

* York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute; I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,

* The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,

Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shake his bells.*

* I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares:—

Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown,

[Warwick leads YORK to the Throne, who seats himself.]

Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERLAND, WESTMORELAND, EXETER, and others, with red Roses in their Hats.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits, Even in the chair of state! belike, he means

(Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer,) To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king:—

Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father;—

And thine, Lord Clifford; and you both have vow'd

revenge

On him, his sons, his favourites, and his friends.

Norw. If I be not, heavens, be reveng'd on me!

Clif. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.

West. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him down:

* My heart for anger burns, I cannot brook it.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland.

Clif. Patience is for poltroons, and such as he;

He durst not sit there had your father liv'd.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament

Let us assail the family of York.

Norw. Well hast thou spoken, cousin; be it so.

K. Hen. Ah, know you not, the city favours them,

And they have troops of soldiers at their back?

Exe. But when the duke is slain, they'll quickly

fly.

K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's

heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament-house!

Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,

Shall be the war that Henry means to use.—

[They advance to the Duke.]

Thou factious duke of York, descend my throne,

And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet:

I am thy sovereign.

York. Thou art deceiv'd, I am thine.

Exe. For shame, come down; he made thee duke of York.

York. 'Twas my inheritance, as the earldom was.*

Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown,

War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown,

In following this usurping Henry.

Clif. Whom should he follow, but his natural king?

War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard, duke of York.

* K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?

* York. Must and shall be so. Content thyself.

War. Be duke of Lancaster, let him be king.

West. He is both king and duke of Lancaster:

And that the lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.

War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget,

That we are those, which chas'd you from the field,

And slew your fathers, and with colours spread

March'd through the city to the palace gates.

* Norw. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;

And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.

* West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons,

Thy kinsmen, and thy friends, I'll have more lives,

Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.

* Clif. Urge it no more; lest that, instead of words,

I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger,

As shall revenge his death, before I stir.

* War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats!

York. Will you, we show our title to the crown?

* If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.

K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?

Thy father was, as thou art, duke of York;*

Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, earl of March:

I am the son of Henry the Fifth,

Who made the Dauphin and the French to stoop,

And seiz'd upon their towns and provinces.

War. Talk not of France, sith' thou hast lost it all.

K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I;

When I was crown'd, I was but nine months old.

Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks

you lose:—

Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head.

Edw. Sweet father, do so; set it on your head.

Mont. Good brother [To YORK,] as thou lov'st and honour'st arms,

Let's fight it out, and not stand caving thus.

Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king will fly.

1 Shakespeare was also led into this anachronism by the old plays. At the time of the first battle of St. Albans, where Richard is represented to have fought in the last scene of the preceding play, he was not one year old; having been born at Potheringay Castle, October 21, 1444. At the time to which the third scene of the present act refers, he was but six years old; and in the fifth act, in which Henry is represented as having been killed by him in the Tower, not more than sixteen and eight months.

2 The allusion is to falconry. Hawks had sometimes male bells hung on them, perhaps to scare the birds; that is, to fright them from rising.

3 The old play reads 'as the kingdom is.' Why Shakespeare altered it, it is not easy to say, for the new line only exhibits the same meaning more obscurely. York means that the dukedom was his inheritance from his father, as the earldom of March was his inheritance from his mother. His title to the crown was not as duke of York, but as earl of March, and by naming that he covertly asserts his right to the crown.

4 Another mistake of the author of the old play. York's father was earl of Cambridge, and was beheaded in the lifetime of his elder brother, Edward duke of York.

5 The military reputation of King Henry V. is the sole support of his son. The name of King Henry the Fifth dispersed the followers of Cade.

6 Since. A contraction of sithence

York. Sons, peace!

K. Hen. Peace thou! and give King Henry leave to speak.

War. Plantagenet shall speak first:—hear him, lords;

And be you silent and attentive too,
For he, that interrupts him, shall not live.

K. Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire, and my father, sat?
No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;
Ay, and their colours—often borne in France;
And now in England, to our heart's great sorrow,—
Shall be my winding-sheet.¹—Why faint you, lords?
My title's good, and better far than his.

War. But prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.

K. Hen. Henry the Fourth by conquest got the crown.

York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.

K. Hen. I know not what to say; my title's weak.
Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?

York. What then?

K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king:

For Richard in the view of many lords,
Resign'd the crown to Henry the Fourth;
Whose heir my father was, and I am his.

York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,
And made him to resign his crown perforce.

War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstrain'd,
Think you, 'twere prejudicial to his crown?²

Ese. No; for he could not so resign his crown,

But that the next heir should succeed and reign.

K. Hen. Art thou against us, duke of Exeter?

Ese. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.

York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?

Ese. My conscience tells me he is lawful king.

K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him.

North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,
Think not, that Henry shall be so depos'd.

War. Depos'd he shall be, in despite of all.

North. Thou art deceiv'd: 'tis not thy southern power,—

Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,—
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,—
Can set the duke up, in despite of me.

Chif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,

Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!

K. Hen. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart!

York. Henry of Lancaster, resign thy crown:—
What mutter you, or what conspire you, lords?

War. Do right unto this princely duke of York;
Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And, o'er the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.

[He stamps, and the Soldiers show themselves.]

K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, hear me but one word:—

Let me, for this my life time, reign as king.
York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet whilst thou liv'st.

K. Hen. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.

Chif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?

War. What good is this to England, and himself?

West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry!

Chif. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us?

West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.

North. Nor I.

Chif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.

* West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,

* In whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.
North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in hands for this unmanly deed!

Chif. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome!
Or live in peace, abandon'd, and despis'd!

[Exeunt NORTHUMBERLAND, CLIFFORD, and WESTMORELAND.]

* War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.

Ese. They seek revenge,³ and therefore will not yield.

K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!

War. Why should you sigh, my lord?

K. Hen. Not for myself, Lord Warwick, but my son,

Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.

But, be it as it may:—I here entail

'The crown to thee, and to thine heirs forever;

Conditionally, that here thou take an oath,

To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,

To honour me as thy king and sovereign;

* And neither⁴ by treason, nor hostility,

* To seek to put me down, and reign thyself.

York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform.

[Coming from the Throne.]

War. Long live King Henry!—Plantagenet, embrace him.

K. Hen. And long live thou, and these thy forward sons!

York. Now York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Ese. Accurs'd be he, that seeks to make them foes! [Sings. The Lords come forward.]

York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle.

War. And I'll keep London, with my soldiers.

Norfolk. And I to Norfolk, with my followers.

Mont. And I unto the sea, from whence I came.

[Exeunt YORK, and his Sons, WARWICK, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, Soldiers, and Attendants.]

* K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET and the Prince of Wales.

Ese. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray⁵ her anger:

I'll steal away.

K. Hen. Exeter, so will I. [Going.]

* Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me, I will follow thee.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.

* Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremes?

* Ah, wretched man! 'would, I had died a maid,

* And never seen thee, never borne thee son,

* Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnatural a father!

* Hath he deserv'd to lose his birthright thus?

* Hadst thou but lov'd him half so well as I;

* Or felt that pain which I did for him once;

* Or nourish'd him, as I did with my blood;

* Thou would'st have left thy dearest heart-blood

there,

* Rather than have made that savage duke thine

heir,

* And disinherited thine only son.

* Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me:

* If you be king, why should not I succeed?

* K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet son;—

* The earl of Warwick, and the duke, enforc'd me.

* Q. Mar. Enforc'd thee! art thou king, and wilt be forc'd?

I shame to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch!

K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me?

Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.

Princa. When I return with victory from the field, I'll see your grace: till then, I'll follow her.

SCENE II. A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield in Yorkshire. Enter EDWARD, RICHARD, and MONTAGUE.

Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.

Edw. No, I can better play the orator.

Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

1 The queen's reproach is founded on a position long received among politicians, that the loss of kingly power is soon followed by loss of life.

2 The person here meant was Thomas Nevil, bastard son to the Lord Faulconbridge, 'a man (says Hall) of no less courage than audacity, who for his cruel conditions was such an apt person, that a more meter could not be chosen to set all the world in a broyle, and to put the estate of the realm on an ill hazard.' He had been appointed by Warwick, vice-admiral of the sea, and had in charge so to keep the passage between Dover and Calais, that none which either favoured King Henry or his friends, should escape untaken or undrowned: such, at least, were his instructions with respect to the friends and favourers of King Edward after the rupture between him and Warwick. On Warwick's death, he fell into poverty, and robbed, both by sea and land as well friends as enemies. He once brought his ships up the Thames, and with a considerable body of the men of Kent and Essex, made a spirited assault on the city, with a view to plunder and pillage, which was not repelled but after a sharp conflict, and the loss of many lives; and, had it happened at a more critical period, might have been attended with fatal consequences to Edward. After roving on the sea some little time longer, he ventured to land at Southampton, where he was taken and beheaded. See Hall and Holinshed.—Ritson.

3 To coast is, apparently, to pursue, to hover about

Enter YORK.

York. Why, how now, sons and brother,⁶ at a strife?

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

Edw. No quarrel, but a slight contention.

York. About what?

Rich. About that which concerns your grace, and us;

The crown of England, father, which is yours.

York. Mine, boy? not till King Henry be dead.

Rich. Your right depends not on his life, or death.

Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now:

By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,

It will outrun you, father, in the end.

York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.

Edw. But, for a kingdom, any oath may be broken:

I'd break a thousand oaths, to reign one year.

Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be forsworn.

York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.

Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak.

York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible.

Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took

Before a true and lawful magistrate,

That hath authority over him that swears;

Henry had none, but did usurp the place;

Then, seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,

Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.

*Therefore, to arms. * And, father, do but think,*

How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown;

 Within whose circuit is Elysium,*

 And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.*

 Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest,*

 Until the white rose, that I wear, be dyed*

 Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart*

 York. Richard, enough; I will be king or die.—*

Brother, thou shalt to London presently,

And whet on Warwick to this enterprise.—

Thou, Richard, shalt unto the duke of Norfolk,

And tell him privily of our intent.—

You, Edward, shall unto my Lord Cobham,

With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise:

In them I trust; for they are soldiers,

 Witty⁷ and courteous, liberal, full of spirit.—*

 While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more,*

 But that I seek occasion how to rise;*

 And yet the king not privy to my drift,*

 Nor any of the house of Lancaster?*

Enter a Messenger.

But, stay; What news? Why com'st thou in such post?

Mass. The queen, with all the northern earls and lords,¹⁰ any thing. The old form of the word appears to have been costoye, or costoie, from the French costoyer, to pursue a course alongside an object, to watch it.

4 To tire is to tear; to feed like a bird of prey.

5 I. e. of Northumberland, Westmoreland, and Clifford, who had left him in disgust.

6 Shakespeare seems to have thought York and Montague brothers-in-law. But Montague was brother to Warwick; Warwick's daughter was married to a son of York, but not during the life of York. Steevens thought that as Shakespeare uses the expression brothers of the war in King Lear, something of the kind might be meant here.

7 The obligation of an oath is here eluded by a very despicable sophistry. A lawful magistrate alone has the power to exact an oath, but the oath derives no part of its force from the magistrate. The plea against the obligation of an oath obliging to maintain a usurper, taken from the unlawfulness of the oath itself, in the foregoing play, was rational and just.—Johnson.

8 Of sound judgment.

9 The folio reads 'Enter Gabriel.' It was the name of the actor, probably Gabriel Sizer, who played this insignificant part. The emendation is from the old play, and was made by Theobald.

10 I know not (says Johnson) whether the author intended any moral instruction, but he that reads this has

' Intend here to besiege you in your castle :
' She is hard by with twenty thousand men ;
' And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.
' York. Ay, with my sword. What ! think'st thou, that we fear them ?—

' Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me ;
' My brother Montague shall post to London !
' Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
' Whom we have left protectors of the king,
' With powerful policy strengthen themselves,
' And trust not simple Henry, nor his oaths.
' Mont. Brother, I go ; I'll win them, fear it not !
' And thus meet humbly I do take my leave. [Exit.]

Enter Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer.

York. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles !

' You are come to Sandal in a happy hour ;
The army of the queen mean to besiege us.
Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the field.

' York. What, with five thousand men ?

' Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.

A woman's general ; What should we fear ?
[A March afar off.]

Edw. I hear their drums ; let's set our men in order ;

' And issue forth, and bid them battle straight.

' York. Five men to twenty !—though the odds be great,

' I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.

' Many a battle have I won in France,

' When as the enemy hath been ten to one ;

' Why should I not now have the like success ?
[Alarum. Escant.]

SCENE III. *Plains near Sandal Castle. Alarums : Excursions. Enter RUTLAND, and his Tutor.*¹

' Rut. Ah, whither shall I fly to 'scape their hands ?
Ah, tutor ! look, where bloody Clifford comes !

Enter CLIFFORD, and Soldiers.

Clif. Chaplain, away ! thy priesthood saves thy life.

As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father,²—he shall die.

Tut. And I, my lord, will bear him company.

Clif. Soldiers, away with him.

Tut. Ah, Clifford ! murder not this innocent child,

' Least thou be hated both of God and man.
[Exit, forced off by Soldiers.]

Clif. How now ! is he dead already ? Or, is it fear,

That makes him close his eyes ?—I'll open them.

' Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch

' That trembles under his devouring paws :³

And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey ;

' And so he comes to rend his limbs asunder.—

' Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword,

And not with such a cruel threatening look.

Sweet Clifford, hear me speak before I die ;—

I am too mean a subject for thy wrath,

Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.

Clif. In vain thou speak'st, poor boy ; my father's blood

Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should enter.

Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again ;
He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.

Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives, and thine,

Were not revenge sufficient for me ;
No, if I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

The sight of any of the house of York

Is as a fury to torment my soul ;

' And till I root out their accursed line,

' And leave not one alive, I live in hell.

Therefore— [Lifting his hand.]

Rut. O, let me pray before I take my death :—

To thee I pray ; sweet Clifford, pity me !

Clif. Such pity as my rapier's point affords.

' Rut. I never did thee harm : Why wilt thou slay me ?

Clif. Thy father hath.

Rut. But 'twas ere I was born.⁴

Thou hast one son, for his sake pity me ;

Least, in revenge thereof,—with God is just,—

He be as miserably slain as I.

Ah, let me live in prison all my days ;

And when I give occasion of offence,

Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.

Clif. No cause ?

Thy father slew my father ; therefore, die.

[CLIFFORD slabs him.]

Rut. *Dii faciant, laudis summa sit ista tui !*⁵

[Dies.]

Clif. Plantagenet ! I come, Plantagenet !

And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade,

Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood,

Congel'd with this, do make me wipe off both.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV. The same. Alarum. Enter YORK.

' York. The army of the queen hath got the field.

' My uncles both are slain in rescuing me ;

' And all my followers to the eager foe

' Turn back, and fly, like ships before the wind,

' Or lambs pursu'd by hunger-starved wolves.

' My sons—God knows, what hath bechanced them :

But this I know,—they have demean'd themselves

Like men born to renown, by life, or death.

' Three times did Richard make a lane to me ;

' And thrice cried,—Courage, father ! fight it out !

' And full as oft came Edward to my side,

With purple falchion painted to the hilt

' In blood of those that had encounter'd him

' And when the hardest warriors did retire,

' Richard cried,—Charge ! and give no foot of ground !

' And cried,—A crown, or else a glorious tomb !

' A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre !

With this we charg'd again : but, out, alas !

' We bodg'd⁶ again ; as I have seen a swan

' With bootless labour swim against the tide,

' And spend her strength with overmatching waves.
[A short Alarum within.]

' Ah, hark ! the fatal followers do pursue ;

' And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury ;

' And, were I strong, I would not shun their fury :

' The sands are number'd, that make up my life ;

' Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

a striking admonition against precipitancy, by which we often use unlawful means to do that which a little delay would put honestly in our power. Had York stayed but a few moments, he had saved his cause from the stain of perjury.

² I.e. the father of which brat, namely the duke of York.

³ Steevens remarks that the epithet devouring, which might well have characterized the whole animal, is oddly enough bestowed on his paws.

⁴ Rutland was born in 1443 ; or at latest, according to Hall, in 1449 and Clifford's father was slain at the battle of St. Albans, in 1455. Consequently Rutland was then at least seven years old, more probably twelve.

⁵ Since.

⁶ This line is in Ovid's Epistle from Phillis to Demophoon. The same quotation is in Nash's Have with you to Safton Walden, 1596.

⁷ These were two bastard uncles by the mother's side, Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer. See Grafton's Chronicle, p. 649.

⁸ Bodged is probably the same as budged, from bouger, French. Steevens thought that it was the same as bogged, i.e. made bad, or bungling work of the attempt to rally. But the following passage, in which Coriolanus speaks of his army who had fled from their adversaries, seems decisive :—

'The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge From rascals worse than they.'

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERLAND, and Soldiers.

'Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,—

'I dare your quenchless fury to more rage;

'I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clif. Ay, to such mercy, as his ruthless arm,

With downright payment, show'd unto my father.

Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,

And made an evening at the noontide prick.¹

York. My ashes, as the Phoenix, may bring forth
A bird that will revenge upon you all:

And, in that hope, I throw mine eyes to heaven,

Scorning whate'er you can afflict me with.

'Why come you not? what! multitudes, and fear?

Clif. So cowards fight, when they can fly no further;

'So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons;

So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,

Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers.

York. O, Clifford, but bethink thee once again,

'And, in thy thought o'erturn my former time:

*And, if thou canst for blushing, view this face;

And bite thy tongue that slanders him with cowardice,

'Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere this.

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word;

But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one.

[Drums.]

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes,

I would prolong awhile the traitor's life:

Wrath makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland.

North. Hold, Clifford; do not honour him so much,

To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart:

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,

For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,

When he might spurn him with his foot away?

It is war's prize² to take all vantages;

'And ten to one is no impeachment of valour.

[They lay hands on York, who struggles.]

Clif. Ay, ay, so strives the woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the coney struggle in the net.

[York is taken prisoner.]

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty;

So true men³ yield, with robbers so o'ermatch'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,

Come make him stand upon this molehill here;

'That taught⁴ at mountains with outstretched arms,

Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.—

*What! was it you that would be England's king?

Was't you that revel'd in our parliament,

And made a preachment of your high descent?

Where are your mees of sons to back you now?

The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?

'And where's that valiant crookback prodigy,

Dicky, your boy, that, with his grumbling voice,

Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?

Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?

Look, York; I stain'd this napkin⁵ with the blood

That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point,

Made issue from the bosom of the boy:

And, if thine eyes can water for his death,

I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.

'Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,

I should lament thy miserable state.

I pray thee, grieve, to make me merry, York;

Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,

That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?

*Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad;

*And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.

Thou would'st be free⁶ I see, to make me sport;

York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.—

A crown for York;—and, lords, bow low to him.—

Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.—

[Putting a paper crown on his head.]

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!

Ay, this is he that took King Henry's chair:

And this is he was his adopted heir.—

But how is it that great Plantagenet

Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?

As I bethink me, you should not be king,

Till our King Henry had shook hands with death.

And will you pale⁷ your head in Henry's glory

And rob his temples of the diadem,

Now in his life, against your holy oath?

O, 'tis a fault too too unpardonable!—

Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head;

And, whilst we breathe, take time to do him dead.⁸

Clif. That is my office, for my father's sake.

Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he makes.

York. She wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France,

'Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth!

How ill beseming is in Amazonian trull,

To triumph like an Amazonian trull,

'Upon their woes, whom fortune captivates?

But that thy face is, visorlike, unchanging,

Made impudent with use of evil deeds,

I would assay, proud queen, to make thee blush:

To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,

Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type⁹ of king of Naples,

Of both the Sicils, and Jerusalem;

Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.

Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?

It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen;

Unless the adage must be verified,—

That beggars, mounted, run their horse to death.

'Tis beauty, that doth oft make women proud;

But, God he knows, thy share thereof is small:

'Tis virtue, that doth make them most admir'd;

The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at:

'Tis government,¹⁰ that makes them seem divine;

The want thereof makes thee abominable:

Thou art as opposite to every good,

As the Antipodes are unto us,

Or as the south to the septentrion.¹¹

O, tyger's heart, wrapp'd in a woman's hide!

How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child,

To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,

And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;

'Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.

upon a molehill, on whose head they put a garland in stead of a crown, which they had fashioned and made of segges or bulrushes, and having so crowned him with that garlande, they kneeled down afore him, as the Jews did to Christe, in scorn, saying to him, Haile king without rule, haile, king without heritage, haile, duke and prince without people or possessions. And,

at length, having thus scorned hym with these and diverse other like despitfull wordes, they strooke off his heade, which (as ye have heard) they presented to the queen.

⁷ Impale, encircle with a crown. ⁸ Kill him.

⁹ I. e. the crown, the emblem or symbol of royalty.

¹⁰ Government, in the language of the time signified

evenness of temper, and decency of manners.

¹¹ The north.

² Prize here must have the same meaning as prize in French, or prezzo in Italian, i. e. a hold or advantage that may be taken. Unless we can imagine that it signifies licitum est, 'it is prized or esteemed lawful in war,' &c. Price, prize, and prise were used indiscriminately by our ancestors.

³ Honest men.

⁴ Reached. Vide note on Part II. of this play, Act II. sc. 2.

⁵ Handkerchief.

⁶ According to Hall the paper crown was not placed on York's head till after he was dead: but Hollinshed, after having copied Hall, says:—'Some write that the duke was taken alive and in derision caused to stand

* Bidd'st thou me rage, why, now thou hast thy wish;
 * Would'st have me weep? why, now thou hast thy will:
 * For raging wind blows up incessant showers.
 And, when the rage allays, the rain begins.¹
 These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies;
 * And every drop cries vengeance for his death,—
 * 'Gainst thee, fell Clifford,—and thee, false French-woman.

North. Beahrew me, but his passions² move me so,
 That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.
 York. That face of his the hungry cannibals
 Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood:
 But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,—
 O, ten times more,—than tigers of Hyrcania.
 See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
 This cloth thou dipp'st in blood of my sweet boy,
 And I with tears do wash the blood away.
 Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this:

[He gives back the Handkerchief.]
 And, if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
 Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;³
 Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
 And say,—Alas, it was a piteous deed!—
 There, take the crown, and, with the crown, my curse;

And, in thy need, such comfort come to thee,
 As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!
 Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world;
 My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!
 North. Had he been slaughterman to all my kin,
 * I should not for my life but weep for him,
 To see how inly sorrow gripes his soul.

Q. Mar. What, weeping-ripe, my Lord Northumberland?

Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
 And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.

Clif. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's death. [Stabbing him.]

Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king. [Stabbing him.]

York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!
 * My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee. [Dies.]

Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gate;
 So York may overlook the town of York.⁴

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Plain near Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire. Drums. Enter EDWARD and RICHARD, with their Forces, marching.

* Edw. I wonder, how our princely father 'scap'd;
 * Or whether he be 'scap'd away, or no,
 * From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit;
 * Had he been ta'en, we should have heard the news;
 Had he been slain, we should have heard the news;

¹ We meet with the same thought in Shakspeare's
 Rape of Lucrece:—

'This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
 Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more:
 At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er,
 Then son and father weep with equal strife,
 Who should weep most for daughter or for wife.'

² Passions for griefs.
 * Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,
 And send the hearers weeping to their beds.'

⁴ This gallant prince fell by his own imprudence, in consequence of leading an army of only five thousand men to engage with twenty thousand, and not waiting for the arrival of his son the earl of March, with a large body of Welshmen. He and Cecily his wife, with his son Edmund, earl of Rutland, were originally buried in the chancel of Fotheringay church. Peacham, in his Complete Gentleman, 1637, p. 153, gives an account of the destruction of their monuments, of the disinterment, &c.; and of their reinterment in the church, by command of Queen Elizabeth, under a mean monument of plaster.
 Deceased himself.

* Or, had he 'scap'd, methinks, we should have heard

* The happy tidings of his good escape.
 * How fares my brother? why is he so sad?

Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
 Where our right valiant father is become.

* I saw him in the battle range about;
 * And watch'd him how he singled Clifford forth.

* Methought, he bore him in the thickest troop,
 As doth a lion in a herd of neat:⁵

* Or as a bear, encompass'd round with dogs;
 * Who having pinch'd a few, and made them cry,

* The rest stand all aloof, and bark at him.
 * So far'd our father with his enemies:

* So fled his enemies my warlike father;
 * Methinks, 'tis prize' enough to be his son.

See, how the morning opens her golden gates,
 And takes her farewell of the glorious sun!⁶

* How well resembles it the prime of youth,
 * Trimm'd like a younker, prancing to his love!

Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?
 Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun.⁷

Not separated with the racking clouds,⁸
 But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.

See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
 As if they vow'd some league inviolable:

Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun.
 In this the heaven figures some event.

* Edw. 'Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never heard of.

I think, it cites us, brother, to the field;
 That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,

* Each one already blazing by our meeds,¹¹
 Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together,

* And overshadow the earth, as this the world.
 * Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear

Upon my target three fair shining suns.
 * Rich. Nay, bear three daughters;—by your leave I speak it,

* You love the breeder better than the male.
 Enter a Messenger.

* But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
 * Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Mess. Ah, one that was a woful looker on,
 When as the noble duke of York was slain,

* Your princely father, and my loving lord.
 * Edw. O, speak no more! for I have heard too much.¹²

* Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it all.
 * Mess. Environed he was with many foes;

* And stood against them as the hope of Troy!¹³
 * Against the Greeks, that would have enter'd Troy.

* But Hercules himself must yield to odds;
 * And many strokes, though with a little axe,

* Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.
 * By many hands your father was subdu'd;

* But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
 * Of unrelenting Clifford, and the queen:

* Who crown'd the gracious duke in high despite;
 * Laugh'd in his face; and, when with grief he wept,

* The ruthless queen gave him, to dry his cheeks,
 6 Neat cattle, cows, oxen, &c.

7 Prize is here again used for estimation.

8 Aurora takes for a time her farewell of the sun,
 when she dismisses him to his diurnal course.

9 This circumstance is mentioned both by Hall and Holinshed. 'At which tyme the sun (as some write) appeared to the earl of March like three sunnes, and sodainely joynd altogether in one; upon which sight hee tooke such courage, that hee fiercely setting on his enemies put them to flight; and for this cause menne ymagined that he gave the sun in his full bryghtnesse for his badge or cognizance.'—Holinshed.

10 I. e. the clouds floating before the wind like a reek or vapour. This verb, though now obsolete, was for merly in common use; and it is now provincially common to speak of the rack of the weather.

11 Meed anciently signified merit as well as reward, and is so explained by Cotgrave, Phillips, and others.

12 The generous tenderness of Edward, and savage fortitude of Richard, are well distinguished by their different reception of their father's death.

13 Hector

* A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
 * Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slain :
 * And, after many scorn, many foul taunts,
 * They took his head, and on the gates of York
 * They set the same ; and there it doth remain,
 * The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.
Edw. Sweet duke of York, our prop to lean upon ;
 * Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay !—
 * O Clifford, boast'rous Clifford, thou hast slain
 * The flower of Europe for his chivalry ;
 * And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,
 * * For, rather to hand, he would have vanquish'd thee !—

Now my soul's palace is become a prison :
 Ah, would she break from hence ! that this my body
 * Might in the ground be closed up in rest :
 * For never henceforth shall I joy again,
 * Never, O never, shall I see more joy.

* Rich. I cannot weep ; for all my body's moisture
 Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heart :
 * Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burden ;

* For selfsame wind, that I should speak withal,
 * Is kindling coals, that fire all my breast,
 * And burn me up with flames that tears would quench.

* To weep, is to make less the depth of grief :
 * Tears, then, for babes ; blows, and revenge, for
 me !—

* Richard, I bear thy name, I'll venge thy death,
 * Or die renowned by attempting it.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with
 thee ;

* His dukedom and his chair with me is left.
Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,
 Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun :
 * For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say ;
 * Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter WARWICK and MONTAGUE, with Forces.*

War. How now, fair lords ? What fare ? what news abroad ?

* Rich. Great lord of Warwick, if we should recount

Our baleful news, and, at each word's deliverance,
 Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,
 The words would add more anguish than the wounds.
 O valiant lord, the duke of York is slain.

Edw. O Warwick ! Warwick ! that Plantagenet,
 Which held thee dearly, as his soul's redemption,
 Is by the stern Lord Clifford done to death.*

War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news in
 tears :

And now to add more measure to your woes,
 I come to tell you things since then befall'n.
 After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,
 Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,
 Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run,
 Were brought me of your loss, and his depart.
 I then in London, keeper of the king,
 Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends,
 And very well appointed, as I thought,
 March'd towards Saint Albans to intercept the queen,
 Bearing the king in my behalf along :
 For by my scouts I was advertised,
 That she was coming with a full intent
 To dash our late decree in parliament.

* Touching King Henry's oath, and your succession.
 Short tale to make, — we at Saint Albans met,
 Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought :
 But, whether 'twas the coldness of the king,
 Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen,

That rob'd my soldiers of their hated spleen ;
 Or whether 'twas report of her success ;
 Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigour,
 * Who thunders to his captives—blood and death,
 I cannot judge : but, to conclude with truth,
 Their weapons like to lightning came and went,
 Our soldiers'—like the night-owl's lazy flight,
 * Or like a lazy thrasher with a fall,—

Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.
 I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause,
 With promise of high pay, and great rewards :
 But all in vain ; they had no heart to fight,
 And we, in them, no hope to win the day,
 So that we fled ; the king, unto the queen ;
 Lord George your brother, Norfolk, and myself,
 In haste, posthaste, are come to join with you ;
 For in the marches here, we heard you were,
 Making another head to fight again.

* Edw. Where is the duke of Norfolk, gentle
 Warwick ?

And when came George from Burgundy to England ?
 * War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers :

And for your brother,—he was lately sent
 From your kind aunt, duchess of Burgundy,
 * With aid of soldiers to this needful war.

Rich. 'Twas odds, belike, when valiant Warwick fled :

Oh have I heard his praises in pursuit,
 But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire.

War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou hear :

For thou shalt know this strong right hand of mine
 Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,
 And wring the awful sceptre from his fist ;
 Were he as famous and as bold in war,
 As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.

Rich. I know it well, Lord Warwick : blame me
 not ;

'Tis love, I bear thy glories, makes me speak.
 But, in this troublous time, what's to be done ?
 Shall we go throw away our coats of steel,
 And wrap our bodies in black mourning gowns,
 Numb'ring our Ave-Maries with our beads ?
 Or shall we on the helmets of our foes
 Tell our devotion with revengeful arms ?
 If for the last, say—Ay, and to it, lords.

War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you
 out ;

And therefore comes my brother Montague.
 Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,
 With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland,
 And of their feather, many more proud birds,
 Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.
 He swore consent to your succession,
 His oath enrolled in the parliament ;
 And now to London all the crew are gone,
 To frustrate both his oath, and what beside
 May make against the house of Lancaster.

* Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong
 Now, if the help of Norfolk, and myself,
 With all the friends that thou, brave earl of March,
 Amongst the loving Welshmen canst procure,
 * Will but amount to five and twenty thousand,
 Why, Via ! to London will we march again ;
 And once again bestride our foaming steeds,
 * And once again cry—Charge upon our foes !
 But never once again turn back, and fly.

Rich. Ay, now, methinks, I hear great Warwick
 speak :

Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day,
 * That cries—Retire, if Warwick bid him stay.

Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean ;

1 Thus in Spenser's Hymn of Heavenly Beauty —

— like the native bird of eagle's kind,
 On that bright sun of glory fix thine eyes.

2 This meeting was at Chipping Norton, according to
 W. Wyrcester, p. 498.

3 A common ancient expression for killed ; from the French faire mourir.

4 The ages of the duke of York's children will show how far historic truth is departed from in the present play. The battle of Wakefield was fought on the 29th of December, 1460, when Edward was in his nineteenth year, Rutland in his eighteenth, George of York, afterwards duke of Clarence, in his twelfth, and Richard only in his ninth year.

5 This circumstance is not warranted by history. Clarence and Gloster (as they were afterwards created) were sent into Flanders immediately after the battle of Wakefield, and did not return until their brother Edward had got possession of the crown. The duchess of Burgundy was not their aunt, but a third cousin

'And when thou fallest, (as God forbid the hour!)
Must Edward fall, which peril heaven foretold!
War. No longer earl of March, but duke of York;
'The next degree is, England's royal throne:
For king of England shalt thou be proclaimed
In every borough as we pass along;
And he that throws not up his cap for joy,
'Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—
Stay we no longer dreaming of renown,
'But sound the trumpets, and about our task.

* Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel,

*(As thou hast shown it flinty by thy deeds,)

* I come to pierce it,—or to give thee mine.

* Edw. Then strike up, drums;—God, and Saint George, for us!

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now? what news?

Mess. The duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,

The queen is coming with a puissant host;
And craves your company for speedy counsel.

War. Why then it sorts, brave warriors: Let's away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Before York. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, the PRINCE OF WALES, CLIFFORD and NORTHUMBERLAND, with Forces.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Your's the head of that arch enemy,
That sought to be encompass'd with your crown:
'Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord?

* K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their wreck;—

To see this sight, it irks my very soul.—
Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault,
Not wittingly have I infring'd my vow.

Chf. My gracious liege, this too much lenity
And harmful pity, must be laid aside.
To whom do lions cast their gentle looks?
Not to the beast that would usurp their den.
Whose hand is that the forest bear doth lick?
Not his, that spoils her young before her face.
Who 'scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting?
Not he, that sets his foot upon her back.
The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on;
'And doves will peck, in safeguard of their brood.
Ambitious York did level at thy crown,
Thou smiling, while he knit his angry brows:
He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue, like a loving sire;
Thou, being a king, blest'd with a goodly son,
Didst yield consent to disinherit him,
'Which argued thee a most unloving father.
Unreasonable creatures feed their young;
And though man's face be fearful to their eyes,
Yet, in protection of their tender ones,
Who hath not seen them (even with those wings
'Which sometime they have used with fearful flight,)
Make war with him that climb'd unto their nest,
Offering their own lives in their young's defence?
For shame, my liege, make them your precedent!
Were it not pity that this goodly boy
Should lose his birthright by his father's fault;
And long hereafter say unto his child,—
What my great grandfather and grandsire got,

My careless father fondly gave away?

Ah, what a shame were this! Look on the boy;
And let his manly face, which promiseth
Successful fortune, steal thy melting heart,
To hold thine own, and leave thine own with him.

* K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator, Infering arguments of mighty force.

'But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear,—

That things ill got had ever bad success?

And happy always was it for that son,

Whose father for his hoarding went to hell?

I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind;

And 'would, my father had left me no more!

For all the rest is held at such a rate,

'As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep,

'Than in possession any jot of pleasure.

Ah, cousin York! 'would thy best friends did know,

'How it doth grieve me that thy head is here!

* Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits; our foes are nigh,

'And this soft courage makes your followers faint.

'You promis'd knighthood to our forward son;

'Unsheath your sword, and dub him presently,—

Edward, kneel down.

* K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;
And learn this lesson,—Draw thy sword in right.

Prince. My gracious father, by your kingly leave,

I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,

And in that quarrel use it to the death.

Chf. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness:

'For, with a band of thirty thousand men,

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York;

And, in the towns as they do march along,

Proclaims him king, and many fly to him:

'Darraign your battle, for they are at hand.

Chf. I would, your highness would depart this field:

The queen hath best success when you are absent.*

* Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortunes.

* K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore

I'll stay.

North. Be it with resolution then to fight.

Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords,

And hearten those that fight in your defence:

Unsheath your sword, good father; cry, Saint

George!

March. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD,

WARWICK, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, and Soldiers.

* Edw. Now, perjur'd Henry! wilt thou kneel for grace,

'And set thy diadem upon my head;

* Or bide the mortal fortune of the field?

* Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy!

'Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms,

'Before thy sovereign, and thy lawful king?

Edw. I am his king, and he should bow his knee;

I was adopted heir by his consent;

Since when, his oath is broke; for, as I hear,

You—that are king, though he do wear the crown,—

Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,

'To blot out me, and put his own son in.

1 Why, then, things are as they should be; it falls out right.

2 Foolishly.

3 The king quotes two proverbs; the one—'Ill gotten goods never prosper'; the other—'Happy the child whose father went to the devil.' This last he must be supposed to use interrogatively, as disputing the truth of it: 'Was it always happy for that son?' &c. This interpretation sets the king's reasoning right.

4 I.e. arrange your host, put your host in order. Darstign is used by Chaucer, Skelton, and Spenser.

5 'Happy was the queen in her two battays, but unfortunate was the king in all his enterprises; for where his person was present the victorie fledde ever from him to the other parte.'—Hall's Chronicle. Henry VI. fol. c. Darstign has enlarged upon this superstitious belief in the Migrations of Queen Margaret.

6 Edward's argument is founded on an article said to have been in the compact between Henry and the duke of York: 'That if the king did closely or apertly studye or go about to compass or imagine the death or destruction of the sayde duke or his blood, then he to forfeit the crowne, and the duke of York to take it.'—Hall. If this had been one of the articles of the compact, the duke having been killed at Wakefield, his eldest son would now have a title to the crown; but Malone doubts whether it ever made part of that agreement. The poet followed Hall.

'Clif. And reason too;
Who should succeed the father, bea the son?
'Rich. Are you there, butcher?—O, I cannot speak!

'Clif. Ay, crookback; here I stand to answer thee,
Or any be the proudest of thy sort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd young Rutland, was it not?

Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.

Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight.

War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield the crown?

Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongued Warwick? dare you speak?

When you and I met at St. Albans last,
Your legs did better service than your hands.

War. Then 'twas my turn to fly, and now 'tis thine.

Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.

War. 'Twas not your valour, Clifford, drove me thence.

'North. No, nor your manhood, that durst make you stay.

Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently;—
Break off the parle; for scarce I can refrain
The execution of my big-sworn heart
Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.

Clif. I slew thy father: Call'st thou him a child?

Rich. Ay, like a dastard, and a treacherous coward,

As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland;
But, ere sunset, I'll make thee curse the deed.

K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak.

Q. Mar. Defy them then, or else hold close thy lips.

K. Hen. I pr'ythee, give no limits to my tongue;
I am a king, and privileg'd to speak.

Clif. My liege, the wound, that bred this meeting here,

Cannot be cur'd by words; therefore be still.

Rich. Then, executioner, unsheath thy sword:
By him that made us all, I am resolv'd.¹

'That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.

'Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have my right or no?
A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,

That ne'er shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.

War. If thou deny, thy blood upon thy head;
For York in justice puts his armour on.

'Prince. If that be right, which Warwick says is right,

There is no wrong, but every thing is right.

Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother stands;
For, well I wot, thou hast thy mother's tongue.

Q. Mar. But thou art neither like thy sire, nor dam;

But like a foul mishapen stigmatic,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided.²

'As venom toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.

Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English gilt,³
Whose father bears the title of a king,

(As if a channel⁴ should be call'd the sea),
'Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art ex-traught,

To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?⁵

1 It is my firm persuasion.

2 See the Second Part of King Henry VI. Act v. Sc. i.

3 Gilt is a superficial covering of gold.

4 A channel in the poet's time signified what we now call a kennel; which word is still pronounced channel in the north.

5 To show thy meanness of birth by thy indecent railing.

6 A wisp of straw was often applied as a mark of opprobrium to an immodest woman, a scold, or similar offenders; even showing it to a woman was, therefore, considered as a grievous affront. A cullet was a lewd woman; but a term often given to a scold.

7 i. e. a cuckold. In Troilus and Cressida, Therites, speaking of Menelaus, calls him 'The goodly transformation of Jupiter there,—the primitive statue and oblique memorial of cuckolds.'

Edw. A wisp of straw⁶ were worth a thousand crowns,

To make this shameless callet know herself.—

* Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,

* Although thy husband may be Menelaus;⁷

* And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd

* By that false woman, as this king by thee.

* His father revell'd in the heart of France,

And tam'd the king, and made the Dauphin stoop;

And, had he match'd according to his state,

He might have kept that glory to this day:

But, when he took a beggar to his bed,

And grac'd thy poor sire with his bridal day,

* Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for him,

* That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,

And heap'd sedition on his crown at home.

* For what hath broach'd this tumult, but thy pride?

Hadst thou been meek, our title still had slept;

And we, in pity of the gentle king,

Had slipp'd our claim until another age.

* Geo. But, when we saw our sunshine made thy spring,

* And that thy summer bred us no increase,

We set the axe to thy usurping root:

And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,

* Yet, know thou, since we have begun to strike,

* We'll never leave, till we have hewn thee down,

Or bath'd thy growing with our heated bloods.

Edw. And, in this resolution, I defy thee;

Not willing any longer conference,

Since thou deny'st the gentle king to speak.—

Sound trumpets!—let our bloody colours wave!—

And either victory, or else a grave.

Q. Mar. Stay, Edward.

Edw. No, wrangling woman; we'll no longer stay:

These words will cost ten thousand lives to-day.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Field of Battle between Towton and Sarton, in Yorkshire. Alarms: Exeunt. Enter WARWICK.

'War. Forspent with toil, as runners with a race,
I lay me down a little while to breathe:

For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repaid,

Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,

* And spite of spite, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter EDWARD, running.

Edw. Smile, gentle heaven! or strike, ungentle death!

* For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.

War. How now, my lord? what hap? what hope of good?

Enter GEORGE.

* Geo. Our hap is loss, our hope but sad despair;

* Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us:

* What counsel give you, whither shall we fly?

* Edw. Bootless is flight, they follow us with wings;

* And weak we are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter RICHARD.

* Rich. Ah, Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn

thyself?

* Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk.¹⁰

* Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance:

* And, in the very pangs of death, he cried,—

8 Shakspeare has here, perhaps, intentionally thrown three different actions into one. The principal action took place on the eve of Palm Sunday, 1461. 'This battle (says Carte) decided the fate of the house of Lancaster, overturning in one day an usurpation strengthened by sixty-two years' continuance, and established Edward on the throne of England.'

9 'Thus repulsed, our final hope

In flat despair.' Milton.

10 The brother here mentioned is no person in the drama, but a natural son of Salisbury. Holinshed, relating the death of Lord Clifford in this action at Ferrybridge, on the 28th of March, 1461, says, 'He was slain, and with him the bastard of Salisbury, brother to the earl of Warwick, a valiant young gentleman, and of great audacity.'

Like to a dismal clangor heard from far,—
 * Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!
 * So underneath the belly of their steeds,
 * That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
 * The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.
 * War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:

I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
 * Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
 * Wailing our losses, whilst the foe doth rage;
 * And look upon,¹ as if the tragedy
 * Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors?
 * Here on my knee I vow to God above,
 * I'll never pause again, never stand still,
 * Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
 * Or fortune given me measure of revenge.
Edw. O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thee;
 * And, in this vow, do chain my soul to thine.—
 * And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face,
 * I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
 * Thou setter up and plucker down of kings!
 * Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands,
 * That to my fees this body must be prey,—
 * Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
 * And give sweet passage to my sinful soul!—
 * Now, lords, take leave until we meet again,
 * Where'er it be, in heaven, or on earth.

* Rich. Brother, give me thy hand; and, gentle Warwick,
 * Let me embrace thee in my weary arms:—
 * I, that did never weep, now melt with woe,
 * That winter should cut off our spring-time so.
 * War. Away, away! Once more sweet lords, farewell.

* Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops,
 * And give them leave to fly that will not stay;
 * And call them pillars, that will stand to us;
 * And, if they thrive, promise them such rewards
 * As victors wear at the Olympian games:
 * This may plant courage in their quaking² breasts;
 * For yet is hope of life, and victory.—
 * Fore-slow³ no longer, make we hence amain.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. Another Part of the Field. Excursions. Enter RICHARD and CLIFFORD.

* Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone:
 * Suppose, this arm is for the duke of York,
 * And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,
 * Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.
 * Clif. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:
 * This is the hand, that stabb'd thy father York;
 * And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;
 * And here's the heart that triumphs in their death,
 * And cheers these hands, that slew thy sire and brother,
 * To execute the like upon thyself;
 * And so, have at thee.

[They fight. WARWICK enters; CLIFFORD flies.]

* Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase;
 * For I myself will hunt this wolf to death.

[Exeunt.]

1 Look upon for look on, i. e. are mere spectators.

2 Quaking is sinking into dejection.

3 To fore-slow is to delay, to loiter.

* Fore-slow no time; sweet Lancaster, let's march.

Marlowe's Edward III.

4 — non sit te ferreus agger

Ambist. Statius, Theb. ii. v. 463.

5 Two very similar lines in the preceding play are spoken of Richard's father by Clifford's father:—

* Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase;

* For I myself must hunt this deer to death.

6 The leading thought in both these soliloquies is borrowed from Edmond, p. 604. 'This deadly conflict continued ten hours in doubtful state of viciorie, uncertain like heaving and setting on both sides,' &c. Steevens points out a similar comparison in Virgil, Æn. lib. x. ver. 854, which originates with Homer, Iliad xiv.

7 This speech is mournful and soft, exquisitely suited to the character of the king, and makes a pleasing inter-

SCENE V. Another Part of the Field. Alarum. Enter KING HENRY.

* K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning¹ war.

* When dying clouds contend with growing light;
 * What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
 * Can neither call it perfect day, nor night.
 * Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea,
 * Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind;
 * Now sways it that way, like the selfsame sea
 * Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind;
 * Sometime, the flood prevails; and then the wind;
 * Now, one the better; then, another beat;
 * Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
 * Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered:
 * So is the equal poise of this fell war.
 * Here on this molehill will I sit me down,
 * To whom God will, there be the victory!
 * For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
 * Have chid me from the battle; swearing both,
 * They prosper best of all when I am thence.
 * 'Would, I were dead! if God's good will were so:
 * For what is in this world, but grief and woe?
 * O God! methinks, it were a happy life,
 * To be no better than a homely swain;
 * To sit upon a hill, as I do now,
 * To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,
 * Thereby to see the minutes how they run:
 * How many make the hour full complete,
 * How many hours bring about the day,
 * How many days will finish up the year,
 * How many years a mortal man may live.
 * When this is known, then to divide the times:
 * So many hours must I tend my flock;
 * So many hours must I take my rest;
 * So many hours must I contemplate;
 * So many hours must I sport myself;
 * So many days my ewes have been with young;
 * So many weeks ere the poor fools will yean;
 * So many years ere I shall shear the fleece:
 * So minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, and years,
 * Pass'd over to the end they were created,
 * Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.
 * Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely.
 * Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade
 * To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep,
 * Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy
 * To kings, that fear their subjects' treachery?
 * O, yes it doth; a thousand fold it doth.
 * And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds,
 * His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
 * His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade
 * All which accure and sweetly he enjoys,
 * Is far beyond a prince's delicacies,
 * His viands sparkling in a golden cup,
 * His body couched in a curious bed,
 * When care, mistrust, and treason wait on him.

Alarum. Enter a Son that has killed his Father, dragging in the dead Body.*

Son. Ill blows the wind, that profits nobody.—

* This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight, change, by affording, amidst the tumult and horror of the battle, an unexpected glimpse of rural innocence and pastoral tranquillity.—Johnson. There are some verses preserved of Henry VI. which are in a strain of the same pensive moralizing character. The reader may not be displeased to have them here subjoined, that he may compare them with the congenial thoughts the poet has ascribed to him:—

* Kingdoms are but cares;

* State is devoid of stay;

* Riches are ready snare,

* And hasten to decay.

* Pleasure is a privy [game],

* Which vice doth still provoke;

* Pomp unprompt; and fame a flame;

* Power a smouldering smoke.

* Who meaneth to remove the rock

* Out of his slimy mud,

* Shall mire himself, and hardly escape

* The swelling of the flood.

8 These two horrible instances are selected to show

* May be possessed with some store of crowns :
 * And I, that haply take them from him now,
 * May yet ere night yield both my life and them
 * To some man else, as this dead man doth me.—
 * Who's this?—O God! it is my father's face,
 * Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd.
 * O heavy time, begetting such events!
 * From London by the king was I press'd forth;
 * My father, being the earl of Warwick's man,
 * Came on the part of York, press'd by his master;
 * And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life,
 * Have by my hands of life bereaved him.—
 * Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did!—
 * And pardon, father, for I knew not thee!—
 * My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks;
 * And no more words, till they have flow'd their fill.
 * K. Hen. O piteous spectacle! O bloody times!
 * Whilst lions war, and battle for their dens,
 * Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity.—
 * Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee tear for tear;
 * And let our hearts, and eyes, like civil war,
 * Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grief!

Enter a Father, who has killed his Son, with the Body in his arms.

* Fath. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me,
 * Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
 * For I have bought it with a hundred blows.—
 * But let me see:—is this our foe's face?
 * Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son!—
 * Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee,
 * Throw up thine eye; see, see, what showers arise,
 * Blown with the windy tempest of my heart,
 * Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!—
 * O, pity, God, this miserable age!—
 * What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,
 * Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural,
 * This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!—
 * O boy, thy father gave thee life too soon,
 * And hath bereft thee of thy life too late!
 * K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than common grief!

* O, that my death would stay these ruthless deeds!
 * O pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!—
 * The red rose and the white are on his face,
 * The fatal colours of our striving houses:
 * The one, his purple blood right well resembles;
 * The other, his pale cheeks, methinks, present!
 * Withier one rose, and let the other flourish!
 * If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.

Son. How will my mother, for a father's death,
 * Take on' with me, and ne'er be satisfied!

Fath. How will my wife, for slaughter of my son,
 * Shed seas of tears, and ne'er be satisfied!

* K. Hen. How will the country, for these woful chances,
 * Misthink the king, and not be satisfied!

* Son. Was ever son, so rued a father's death?

* Fath. Was ever father, so bemoan'd a son?

* K. Hen. Was ever king, so griev'd for subjects' woe?

* Much is your sorrow; mine, ten times so much.
 * Son. I'll hear thee hence, where I may weep my fill. [Exit with the Body.]

* Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet;

the innumerable calamities of civil war. Raphael has introduced the second of these incidents in his picture of the battle of Constantine and Maxentius.

1 The king intends to say that the state of their hearts and eyes shall be like that of the kingdom in a civil war; all shall be destroyed by power formed within themselves.

2 Stratagems here means direful events.

3 Of these obscure lines the following explanation by Henley is the most probable which has been offered:—Had the son been younger he would have been precluded from the levy which brought him to the field; and had the father recognized him before their mortal encounter, it would not have been too late to have saved him from death.

4 To take on is a phrase still in use in common parlance, and signifies to persist in clamorous lamentation.

* My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;
 * For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.
 * My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
 * And so obsequious will thy father be,
 * Sad for the loss of thee, having no more,
 * As Priam was for all his valiant sons.
 * I'll bear thee hence; and let them fight that will,
 * For I have murder'd where I should not kill.

[Exit, with the Body.]

* K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overgone with care,

* Here sits a king more woful than you are.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE OF WALES, and EXETER.

* Princes. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,

* And Warwick rages like a chafed bull:
 * Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.

* Q. Mar. Mount you, my lord, towards Berwick post again,

* Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds
 * Having the fearful flying hare in sight,

* With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,
 * And bloody steel grasp'd in their awful hands,

* Are at our backs; and therefore, hence again.

* Esc. Away! for vengeance comes along with them;

* Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed;
 * Or else come after, I'll away before.

* K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exeter;

* Not that I fear to stay, but love to go
 * Whither the queen intends. Forward; away!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. The same. A loud Alarum. Enter CLIFFORD, wounded.

* Clif. Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
 * Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.
 * O, Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow,
 * More than my body's parting with my soul.

* My love, and fear, glew'd many friends to thee;
 * And, now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt.

* Impairing Henry, strength'ning mis-proud York,
 * The common people swarm like summer flies:

* And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun?
 * And who shines now but Henry's enemies?

* O Phoebus! hadst thou never given consent
 * That Phaeton should check thy fiery steeds,

* Thy burning ear never had scorched the earth:
 * And Henry, hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,

* Or as thy father, and his father did,
 * Giving no ground unto the house of York,

* They never then had sprung like summer flies:
 * I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,

* Had left no mourning widows for our death,
 * And thou this day hadst kept thy chair in peace.

* For what doth cherish weeds but gentle air?

* And what makes robbers bold, but too much lenity?

* Bootless are plaints, and cureless are my wounds;
 * No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:

* The foe is merciless, and will not pity;
 * For at their hands I have deserv'd no pity.

* The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
 * And much effuse of blood doth make me faint:—

5 Much unfavourably of.
 6 Obsequious is here careful of obsequies or funeral rites. See Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 1.

7 In the old play the stage direction adds, with an arrow in his neck. It is thought that Beaumont and Fletcher ridiculed this, by introducing Ralph, the grocer's apprentice, in the Knight of the Burning Pestle, with a forked arrow through his head. The circumstance is related by Holinshed, p. 684.—The Lord Clifford, either for heat or pain, putting off his gorges suddenly, with an arrow (as some said) without a head, was scricken into the throat, and immediately rendered his spirit.

8 Hence perhaps originated the following passage in The Bard of Gray:—

'The swarm that in thy noontide beam were born
 * Gone to salute the rising morn.'

Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest;
 'I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast.

(He faints.)

Alarm and Retreat. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD, MONTAGUE, WARWICK, and Soldiers.

'Edw. Now breathe we, lords; good fortune bids us pause,
 'And smoothe the frowns of war with peaceful looks.'—

* Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen;—
 'That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
 'As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
 'Command an argosy to stem the waves.
 'But thank you, lords, that Clifford fled with them?

War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape:
 For, though before his face I speak the words,
 Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave:
 'And, wheresoe'er he is, he's surely dead.

(Clifford groans, and dies.)

Edw. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave?

Rich. A deadly groan, like life and death's departing.

Edw. See who it is: and now the battle's ended,
 If friend, or foe, let him be gently us'd.

Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford;

'Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch
 'In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,
 'But set his murdering knife unto the root
 'From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,

'I mean our princely father, duke of York.
 War. From off the gates of York fetch down the head.

Your father's head, which Clifford placed there:
 'Instead whereof, let this supply the room;
 Measure for measure must be answered.

Edw. Bring forth that fatal screechowl to our house,

'That nothing sung but death¹ to us and ours:
 'Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,

'And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.
 (Attendants bring the Body forward.)

War. I think his understanding is bereft:—
 Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?—

Dark cloudy death o'ershades his beams of life,
 And he nor sees, nor hears us what we say.

Rich. O, 'would he did! and so, perhaps, he doth;
 'Tis but his policy to counterfeit,
 'Because he would avoid such bitter taunts,
 'Which in the time of death he gave our father.

Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.⁴

Rich. Clifford, ask mercy, and obtain no grace.

Edw. Clifford, repent in bootless penitence.

War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.

Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.

Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.

Edw. Thou pitied'st Rutland, I will pity thee.
 Geo. Where's Captain Margaret, to fence you now?

War. They mock thee, Clifford! swear as thou wast wont.

Rich. What, not an oath? nay, then the world goes hard,

'When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath: I know by that, he's dead; And, by my soul,

'If this right hand would buy two hours' life,
 'That I in all despite might rail at him,

'This hand should chop it off; and with the issuing blood

Stife the villain, whose unstanched thirst
 York and young Rutland could not satisfy.

War. Ay, but he's dead: Off with the traitor's head,

And rear it in the place your father's stands.—
 And now to London with triumphant march,

There to be crowned England's royal king.
 'From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to France,

And ask the Lady Bona for thy queen:
 So shalt thou sinew both these lands together;

'And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread

The scater'd foe, that hopes to rise again:
 For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,

Yet look to have them buzz, to offend thine ears.
 First, will I see the coronation;

'And then to Britany I'll cross the sea,
 To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.

Edw. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be:

* For on thy shoulder do I build my seat;
 * And never will I undertake the thing,

* Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.—
 'Richard, I will create thee duke of Gloucester;

'And George, of Clarence;—Warwick, as yourself,
 'Shall do, and undo, as him pleaseth best.

Rich. Let me be duke of Clarence; George, of Gloucester;

For Gloucester's dukedom is too ominous.⁵

War. Tut, that's a foolish observation;

Richard, be duke of Gloucester: Now to London,
 To see these honours in possession. (Exeunt.)

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Chase in the North of England.

Enter Two Keepers,⁶ with Crossbows in their Hands.

1 Keep. Under this thick-grown brake⁷ we'll shroud ourselves;

'For through this laund⁸ anon the deer will come;

'And in this covert will we make our stand,
 'Culling the principal of all the deer.

* 2 Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.

* 1 Keep. That cannot be; the noise of thy crossbow

* Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.

* Here stand we both, and aim we at the best:

* And, for the time shall not seem tedious, presented these characters, Sinckle and Humphrey. Humphrey was probably Humphrey Jeffries, mentioned in Mr. Hennebow's manuscript; Sinckle we have before mentioned, his name being prefixed to some speeches in the Induction to The Taming of the Shrew. Hall and Holinshed tell us that Henry VI. was no sooner entered into England but he was known and taken of one Cantlow, and brought to the king.⁹ It appears, however, from records in the duchy office, that King Edward granted a rent-charge of one hundred pound to Sir James Harrington, in recompence of his great and laborious diligence about the capture and detention of Henry's great traitor, rebel, and enemy, lately called Henry the Sixth, made by the said James Talbot, and likewise anukides to Richard and Thomas Talbot, Esquires.—Talbot, and Levesey, for their services in the same capture. Henry had been for some time harboured by James Maychell of Crakenhorpe, Westmoreland. See Rymer's Fodera, xi. 448, 478.

7 Thickets.
 8 A plain extended between woods, a lawn.

1 Thus in King Richard III. — Grim-visaged fear hath smooch'd his wrinkled front.¹
 2 Departing for separation. To depart, in old language, is to part. Thus in the old marriage service — Till death us depart.²

3 We have this also in King Richard III. —
 'Out on you, cow! nothing but songs of death.'
 4 Sour words; words of asperity. 'Verbe eagle or source: percerous.'—Baret.

5 Alluding to the deaths of Thomas of Woodstock and Humphrey, duke of Gloucester. The author of the old play, in which this line is found, had a passage of Hall's Chronicle in his thoughts, in which the unfortunate ends of those who had borne the title is recounted: he thus concludes:—'So that this name of Gloucester is taken for an unhappy and unfortunate stile, as the grower speaks of Segane's horse, whose ryder was ever unhorsed, and whose possessor was ever brought to miserie.'

6 In the folio copy, instead of two keepers, we have through negligence the names of the persons who re-

- * I'll tell thee what befell me on a day,
- * In this self-place where now we mean to stand.
- * 2 Keep. Here comes a man, let's stay till he be past.

Enter KING HENRY, disguised, with a Prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,

- * To greet mine own land with my wishful sight.
- * No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine;
- * Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee,
- * Thy balm wash'd off; wherewith thou wast anointed:

No bending knee will call thee Cæsar now,

* No humble suitors press to speak for thee;

* No, not a man comes for redress of right;

For how can I help them, and not myself?

* 1 Keep. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's fee:

* This is the quondam king; let's seize upon him.

* K. Hen. Let me embrace these our adversaries;

* For wise men say, it is the wisest course.

* 2 Keep. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon him.

* 1 Keep. Forbear awhile; we'll bear a little more.

K. Hen. My queen, and son, are gone to France for aid;

And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick

* Is thither gone, to crave the French king's sister

* To wife for Edward: If this news be true,

* Poor queen, and son, your labour is but lost;

* For Warwick is a subtle orator,

* And Lewis a prince soon won with moving words.

* By this account, then, Margaret may win him;

* For she's a woman to be pitied much:

* Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;

* Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;

* The tiger will be mild, while she doth mourn;

* And Nero will be tainted with remorse,

* To hear, and see, her plaints, her brinish tears.

* Ay, but she's come to beg; Warwick, to give:

* She, on his left side, craving aid for Henry;

* He, on his right, asking a wife for Edward.

* She weeps, and says—her Henry is depos'd;

* He smiles, and says—his Edward is install'd;

* That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more:

* Whiles Warwick tells his title, smooths the wrong,

* Inferreth arguments of mighty strength;

* And, in conclusion, wins the king from her,

* With promise of his sister, and what else,

* To strengthen and support King Edward's place.

* O Margaret, thus 'twill be; and thou, poor soul,

* Art then forsaken, as thou wert'st forlorn.

* 2 Keep. Say, what art thou, that talk'st of kings and queens?

* K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was born to:

* A man at least, for less I should not be;

And men may talk of kings, and why not I?

* 2 Keep. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king.

* K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind: and that's enough.

* 2 Keep. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crown?

1 This also in King Richard II. —

* Not all the water in the rough road sea

* Can wash the balm from an anointed king.

It is observable that this line is one of those additions to the original play which are found in the folio and not in the quarto.

2 This line has already occurred in the former Act:—

* Inferreth arguments of mighty force.

In the old play the line occurs but once.

3 The piety of Henry scarce interests us more for his misfortunes than his constant solicitude for the welfare of his deceitful queen.—Steevens.

4 Malone thinks that there is an allusion here to an old poem by Sir Edward Dyer, beginning—'My mind to me a kingdom is.' See it in Percy's Reliques, 3d edition, vol. i. p. 293.

5 This is in every particular a falsification of history.

Sir John Grey fell in the second battle of St. Albans

K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my head;

* Not deck'd with diamonds, and Indian stones,

* Nor to be seen: 'my crown is call'd, content;

* A crown it is, that seldom kings enjoy.

* 2 Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with content,

Your crown content, and you, must be contented

* To go along with us: for, as we think,

* You are the king, King Edward hath depos'd;

* And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,

* Will apprehend you as his enemy.

* K. Hen. But did you never swear, and break an oath?

* 2 Keep. No, never such an oath, nor will not now.

* K. Hen. Where did you dwell, when I was king of England?

* 2 Keep. Here in this country, where we now remain.

* K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old;

* My father and my grandfather were kings;

* And you were sworn true subjects unto me:

* And, tell me then, have you not broke your oaths?

* 1 Keep. No;

For we were subjects, but while you were king.

* K. Hen. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe a man?

* Ah, simple men, you know not what you swear.

* Look, as I blow this feather from my face,

* And as the air blows it to me again,

* Obeying with my wind when I do blow,

* And yielding to another when it blows,

* Commanded always by the greater gust;

* Such is the lightness of you common men.

* But do not break your oaths; for, of that sin

* My mild entreaty shall not make you guilty.

* Go where you will, the king shall be commanded;

* And be you kings; command, and I'll obey.

* 1 Keep. We are true subjects to the king, King Edward.

* K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry,

* If he were seated as King Edward is.

1 Keep. We charge you, in God's name, and in the king's,

To go with us unto the officers.

* K. Hen. In God's name, lead; your king's name be obey'd!

* And what God will, then let your king perform;

* And what he will, I humbly yield unto. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, CLARENCE, and LADY GREY.

* K. Edw. Brother of Gloster, at Saint Albans' field

* This lady's husband, Sir John Grey, was slain,

* His lands then seiz'd on by the conqueror:

* Her suit is now, to repossess these lands;

* Which we in justice cannot well deny,

* Because in quarrel of the house of York

* The worthy gentleman did lose his life.

* Glo. Your highness shall do well, to grant her suit;

* It were dishonour, to deny it her.

fighting on the side of King Henry; and so far is it from being true that his lands were seized by the conqueror (Queen Margaret) that they were in fact seized by King Edward after his victory at Towton, 1461. The present scene is laid in 1464. Shakspeare followed the old play in this instance; but when he afterwards had occasion to mention this matter in writing his King Richard III. he stated it truly as he found it in the Chronicles. In Act I. Sc. 2 of that play, Richard, addressing himself to Queen Elizabeth (the Lady Grey of the present scene,) says:—

* In all which time you and your husband Grey

* Were factious for the house of Lancaster;

(And, Rivers, so were you:)—was not your husband in Margaret's battle at Saint Albans slain?

Malone says that this circumstance, among numerous others, proves incontestably that Shakspeare was not the original author of this and the preceding play.

K. Edw. It were no less; but yet I'll make a pause.

Glo. You! is it so?

I see, the lady hath a thing to grant,
Before the king will grant her humble suit.

Clar. He knows the game; How true he keeps the wind?

Glo. Silence!

K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit;

And come some other time, to know our mind.

L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:

May it please your highness to resolve me now;

And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me.

Glo. [Aside.] Ay, widow? then I'll warrant you all your lands,

And if what pleases him, shall pleasure you.

Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow.

Clar. I fear her not, unless she chance to fall.

Glo. God forbid that! for he'll take vantages.

K. Edw. How many children hast thou, widow? tell me.

Clar. I think, he means to beg a child of her.

Glo. Nay, whip me then; he'll rather give her two.

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glo. You shall have four, if you'll be rul'd by him.

K. Edw. 'Twere pity, they should lose their father's land.

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.

K. Edw. Lords, give us leave; I'll try this widow's wit.

Glo. Ay, good leave¹ have you; for you will have leave,

'Till youth take leave, and leave you to the crutch.

[GLOSTER and CLARENCE retire to the other side.]

K. Edw. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?

L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edw. And would you not do much, to do them good?

L. Grey. To do them good, I would sustain some harm.

K. Edw. Then get your husband's lands, to do them good.

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.

K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.

L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness' service.

K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me, if I give them?

L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me to do.

K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon.

L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.

K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to ask.

L. Grey. Why, then I will do what your grace commands.

Glo. He plies her hard; and much rain wears the marble.

Clar. As red as fire! nay, then her wax must melt.

L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?

K. Edw. An easy task; 'tis but to love a king.

L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject.

K. Edw. Where, then, thy husband's lands I freely give thee.

L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.

Glo. The match is made; she seals it with a curtsey.

K. Edw. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I mean.

L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.

K. Edw. Ay, but I fear me, in another sense.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?

L. Grey. My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;

That love, which virtue begs, and virtue grants.

K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.

L. Grey. Why, then you mean not as I thought you did.

K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my mind.

L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive.

Your highness aims at, if I aim aright.

K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.

L. Grey. To tell you plain, I had rather lie in prison.

K. Edw. Why, then thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

L. Grey. Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower;

For by that loss I will not purchase them.

K. Edw. Therein thou wrong'st thy children mightily.

L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both them and me.

But, mighty lord, this merry inclination

'Accords not with the sadness² of my suit;

Please you dismiss me, either with ay, or no.

K. Edw. Ay; if thou wilt say ay, to my request:

No; if thou dost say no, to my demand.

L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.

Glo. The widow likes him not, she knits her brows.

Clar. He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom.

K. Edw. [Aside.] Her looks do argue her replete with modesty;

Her words do show her wit incomparable;

All her perfections challenge sovereignty:

One way, or other, she is for a king;

And she shall be my love, or else my queen.—

Say, that King Edward take thee for his queen?

L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious lord:

I am a subject fit to jest withal,

But far unfit to be a sovereign.

K. Edw. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee,

I speak no more than what my soul intends;

And that is, to enjoy thee for my love.

L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto.

I know I am too mean to be your queen:

And yet too good to be your concubine.

K. Edw. You cavil, widow; I did mean, my queen.

L. Grey. I'll grieve your grace, my sons should call you—father.

K. Edw. No more, than when thy daughters call thee mother.

Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children,

And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor,

Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing

To be the father unto many sons.

Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.

Glo. The ghostly father now hath done his shrift.

Clar. When he was made a shriver, 'twas for shift.

K. Edw. Brothers, you muse what chat we two have had.

1 A very lively and spritely dialogue; the reciproca-tion is quicker than is common in Shakespeare.—John- son

2 This phrase implies readiness of assent
3 i. e. seriousness.

* Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks very sad.

* K. Edw. You'd think it strange if I should marry her.

* Clar. To whom, my lord?

* K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself.

* Glo. That would be ten days' wonder, at the least.

* Clar. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.

* Glo. By so much is the wonder in extremes.

* K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you both,

Her suit is granted for her husband's lands.

Enter a Nobleman.

* Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken, And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.

* K. Edw. See, that he be convey'd unto the Tower:—

* And go ye, brothers, to the man that took him,

* To question of his apprehension.—

* Widow, go you along;—Lords, use her honourable.

[Exit KING EDWARD, LADY GREY, CLARENCE, and Lord.]

* Glo. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.

* Would, he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,

* That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring,

* To cross me from the golden time I look for!

* And yet, between my soul's desire and me

* (The lustful Edward's title buried)

* Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,

* And all the unlock'd-for issue of their bodies,

* To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:

A cold premeditation for my purpose!

* Why, then I do but dream on sovereignty;

* Like one that stands upon a promontory,

* And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,

* Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;

* And chides the sea that sunders him from thence,

* Saying—he'll lade it dry to have his way:

* So do I wish the crown, being so far off;

* And so I chide the means that keep me from it;

* And so I say—I'll cut the causes off;

* Flattering me with impossibilities.—

* My eye's too quick, my heart o'erweenes too much,

* Unless my hand and strength could equal them.

* Well, say there is no kingdom then for Richard;

* What other pleasure can the world afford?

* I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,

* And deck my body in gay ornaments,

* And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.

* O miserable thought! and more unlikely,

* Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns!

* Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb:

* And, for I should not deal in her soft laws

* She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe

* To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;

* To make an envious mountain on my back,

* Where sits deformity to mock my body;

* To shape my legs of an unequal size;

* To disproportion me in every part,

* Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd bear-whelp,¹

* That carries no impression like the dam.

* And am I then a man to be belov'd?

* O, monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought.

1 It was an opinion which, in spite of its absurdity, prevailed long, that the bear brings forth only shapeless lumps of flesh, which she licks into the form of bears. It is now well known that the whelps of bears are produced in the same state with those of other animals.—Johnson.

2 Richard speaks here the language of nature. Whoever is stigmatized with deformity has a constant source of envy in his mind, and would counterbalance by some other superiority those advantages which he feels himself to want. Bacon remarks that the deformed are commonly daring; and it is almost proverbially observed that they are ill-natured. The truth is that the deformed, like all other men, are displeased with inferiority, and endeavour to gain ground by good or bad means, as they are virtuous or corrupt.—Johnson.

3 I.e. encircled. Steevens would read with Hamner:—

'Until my head that this misshap'd trunk bears.'

* Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,

* But to command, to check, to o'erbear such

* As are of better person than myself;²

* I'll make my heaven—to dream upon the crown;

* And, whilst I live, to account this world but hell,

* Until my misshap'd trunk that bears this head,

* Be round impaled with a glorious crown.

* And yet I know not how to get the crown,

* For many lives stand between me and home:

* And I,—like one lost in a thorny wood,

* That rents the thorns, and is rent with the thorns;

* Seeking a way, and straying from the way

* Not knowing now to find the open air,

* But toiling desperately to find it out,—

* Torment myself to catch the English crown:

* And from that torment I will free myself,

* Or hew my way out with a bloody axe.

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile;

* And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart;

* And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,

* And frame my face to all occasions.

* I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;

* I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;

* I'll play the orator as well as Nestor,

* Deceive more slyly than Ulysses could,

* And, like a Sinon, take another Troy;

* I can add colours to the camelion;

* Change shapes, with Proteus, for advantages,

* And set the mard'rous Machiavel³ to school.

Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?

* Tut! were it further off, I'll pluck it down. [Exit.]

SCENE III. France. A Room in the Palace. Flourish. Enter LEWIS, the French King, and LADY BONA, attended; the King takes his State. Then enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD her Son, and the EARL OF OXFORD.

* K. Lew. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret, [Rising.]

* Sit down with us: it ill befits thy state,

* And birth, that thou should'st stand, while Lewis doth sit.

* Q. Mar. No, mighty king of France; now Margaret

* Must strike her sail, and learn awhile to serve,

* Where kings command. I was, I must confess,

* Great Albion's queen in former golden days;

* But now mischance hath trod my title down,

* And with dishonour laid me on the ground;

* Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,

* And to my humble seat conform myself.

* K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?

* Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears,

* And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.

* K. Lew. What'er it be, be thou still like thyself,

* And sit thee by our side: yield not thy neck [Sits her by him.]

* To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind

* Still ride in triumph over all mischance.

* Be plain, Queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;

* It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief.

Otherwise, he observes, the trunk that bears the head is to be encircled with the crown, and not the head itself.

4 The old play reads with more propriety:—

'And set the aspiring Cataline to school.'

By which the anachronism is also avoided. Machiavel is mentioned in various books of the poet's age as the great exemplar of profound politicians. An amusing instance of the odium attached to his name is to be found in Gill's Logonomia Anglica, 1621:—'Et ne semper Sidelos loquamur, audī epilogum fabule quam docuit Boreall dialecto poeta, titulumque fuit reus Machiavelius:—

'Machill is hanged
And brenned is his buks:
Though Machill is hanged
Yet he is not wrangled,
'The Diel has him hanged
In his cruket cluaks.'

- * Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping thoughts,
 * And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to speak.
 * Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,—
 * That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
 * Is, of a king, become a banish'd man,
 * And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn;
 * While proud ambitious Edward, duke of York,
 * Usurps the regal title, and the seat
 * Of England's true anointed lawful king.
 * This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,—
 * With this my son, Prince Edward, Henry's heir,
 * Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
 * And, if thou fail us, all our hope is done:
 * Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
 * Our people and our peers are both misled,
 * Our treasure seiz'd, our soldiers put to flight,
 * And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.
 * K. Lew. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,
 * While we bethink a means to break it off.
 * Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our foe.
 * K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I'll succour thee.
 * Q. Mar. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:
 * And see, where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter WARWICK, attended.

- * K. Lew. What's he, approacheth boldly to our presence?
 * Q. Mar. Our earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest friend.
 * K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France?

[Descending from his State, Queen MARGARET rises.]

- * Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
 * For this is he that moves both wind and tide.
 * War. From worthy Edward, king of Albion,
 * My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
 * I come,—in kindness, and unfeigned love,—
 * First, to do greetings to thy royal person;
 * And, then, to crave a league of amity;
 * And, lastly, to confirm that amity
 * With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
 * That virtuous Lady Bona, thy fair sister,
 * To England's king in lawful marriage.

* Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry's hope is done.¹

War. And, gracious madam, [To Bona,] in our king's behalf,

* I am commanded, with your leave and favour,
 * Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue
 * To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
 * Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
 * Hath plac'd thy beauty's image, and thy virtue.

* Q. Mar. King Lewis,—and Lady Bona,—hear me speak,

- * Before you answer Warwick. His demand
 * Springs not from Edward's well meant honest love,
 * But from deceit, bred by necessity;
 * For how can tyrants safely govern home,
 * Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
 * To prove him tyrant, this reason may suffice,—

* That Henry liveth still: but were he dead,
 * Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henry's son.

* Look therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage,

* Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonour:
 * For though usurpers away the rule awhile,

* Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.
War. Injurious Margaret!

Prince. And why not queen?
War. Because thy father Henry did usurp;
 And thou no more art prince, than she is queen.

Oxf. Then Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt,

Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;
 And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,

* Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
 And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth,

Who by his prowess conquered all France:
 From these our Henry lineally descends.

War. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth discourse,

You told not, how Henry the Sixth hath lost
 All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten?

Methinks, these peers of France should smile at that.

But for the rest,—You tell a pedigree
 Of threescore and two years; a silly time

To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.
Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege,

* Whom thou obey'dst thirty and six years,
 And not bewray thy treason with a blush?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
 Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?

For shame, leave Henry, and call Edward king.
Oxf. Call him my king, by whose injurious doom

* My elder brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere,
 Was done to death? and more than so, my father,

Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years,
 * When nature brought him to the door of death?²

No, Warwick, no; while life upholds this arm,
 This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.

War. And I the house of York.
K. Lew. Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, and Oxford,

* Vouchsafe, at our request, to stand aside,
 * While I use further conference with Warwick.

* Q. Mar. Heaven grant, that Warwick's words bewitch him not!

[Retiring with the Prince and Oxford.]
 * K. Lew. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,

* Is Edward your true king? for I were loath
 * To link with him that were not lawful chosen.

War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour.
K. Lew. But is he gracious in the peoples' eye?

War. The more, that Henry was unfortunate.³
K. Lew. Then further,—all dissembling set aside,

* Tell me for truth the measure of his love
 * Unto our sister Bona.

War. Such it seems,
 As may become a monarch like himself.

Myself have often heard him say and swear,—
 That this his love was an eternal plant;⁴

Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground,
 The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun

1 This nobleman's embassy and commission, the insult he receives by the king's hasty marriage, and his consequent resolution to avenge it, with the capture, imprisonment, and escape of the king, Shakespeare found in Hall and Holinshed; but later as well as earlier writers of better authority, incline us to discredit the whole; and to refer the rupture between the king and his political creator to other causes. Perhaps we need seek no further than that jealousy and ingratitude which is but too often experienced in those who are under great obligations—too great to be discharged. There needs no other proof how little our common histories are to be depended on, than this fabulous story of Warwick and the Lady Bona. The king was privately married to the Lady Elizabeth Widville, in 1463, and in February, 1465, Warwick actually stood sponsor to the Princess Elizabeth, their first child. It should seem from the

Annales of W. of Wyrester, that no open rupture had taken place between the king and Warwick, up to the beginning of November, 1468; at least nothing appears to the contrary in that historian, whose work is unfortunately defective from that period.

2 There is nearly the same line in a former speech of Margaret's. It is found in its present situation alone in the old play.

3 This passage unavoidably brings to mind that admirable image of old age in Sackville's Induction to the Mirror for Magistrates.—

* His withered fist still knocking at death's door.¹
 4 He means that Henry was unsuccessful in war, having lost his dominions in France, &c.

5 In the language of Shakespeare's Cine, by an eternal plant was meant what we now call a perennial one.

Exempt from envy,¹ but not from disdain,
Unless the Lady Bona quit his pain.

K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.

Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine:
Yet I confess, [To War.] that often ere this day,
When I have heard your king's desert recounted,
Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

* K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus—Our sister shall be Edward's;

* And now forthwith shall articles be drawn
* Touching the jointure that your king must make,
* Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd:—
Draw near, queen Margaret; and be a witness,
That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king.

* Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device
* By this alliance to make void my suit;

* Before thy coming, Lewis was Henry's friend.

* K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret;

* But if your title to the crown be weak,—

* As may appear by Edward's good success,—

* Then 'tis but reason, that I be releas'd

* From giving aid, which late I promised.

* Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand.

* That your estate requires, and mine can yield.

War. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his ease;

Where having nothing, nothing he can lose.

And as for you yourself, our quondam queen,—

You have a father able to maintain you;—

And better 'twere, you troubled him than France.

* Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless Warwick, peace;

* Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings!²

* I will not hence, till with my talk and tears,

* Both full of truth, I make King Lewis behold

* Thy sly conveyance,³ and thy lord's false love;

* For both of you are birds of self-same feather.

[A Horn sounded within.

K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord ambassador, these letters are for
you;

Sent from your brother, Marquis Montague.

These from our king unto your majesty.—

And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not.

[To MARGARET. They all read their Letters.

Osf. I like it well, that our fair queen and mistress Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his.

Prince. Nay, mark, how Lewis stamps as he were nettled:

* I hope, all's for the best.

* K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen?

* Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhop'd joys.

War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent.

K. Lew. What! has your king married the Lady
Grey?

* And now, to sooth⁴ your forgery and his,

* Sends me a paper to persuade me patience?

* Is this the alliance that he seeks with France?

* Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner?

* Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before:
Thus proveth Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty.

War. King Lewis, I here protest,—in sight of heaven,

And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,—

That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's;

¹ Steevens thinks that envy in this place, as in many others, is put for malice or hatred. His situation places him above these, though it cannot secure him from female disdain.

² Johnson is inclined to think this ironical. The poverty of Margaret's father being a frequent topic of reproach.

³ The queen here applies to Warwick the very words that King Edward, p. 69, addresses to the Deity. It seems doubtful whether these words in the former instance are not in the old play addressed to Warwick also.

⁴ Conveyance is used for any crafty artifice. The word has already been explained. Vide King Henry VI. Part I. Act I. Sc. 3.

No more my king, for he dishonours me;
But most himself, if he could see his shame,—
Did I forget, that by the house of York
My father came untimely to his death?

Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece?⁵

Did I impale him with the regal crown?

Did I put Henry from his native right;

* And am I guerdon'd⁶ at the last with shame?

* Shame on himself! for my desert is honour.

* And, to repair my honour lost for him,

* I here renounce him, and return to Henry:

* My noble queen, let former grudges pass,

And henceforth I am thy true servitor;

I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bona,

And replant Henry in his former state.

* Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd my hate to love;

* And I forgive and quite forget old faults,

* And joy that thou becom'st King Henry's friend.

War. So much his friend, ay, his unfeigned friend

That, if King Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us

With some few bands of chosen soldiers,

I'll undertake to land them on our coast,

And force the tyrant from his seat by war.

* 'Tis not his new-made bride shall succour him:

* And as for Clarence,—as my letters tell me,

* He's very likely now to fall from him;

* For matching more for wanton lust than honour,

* Or than for strength and safety of our country.

* Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be re-veng'd,

* But by the help to this distressed queen?

* Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor
Henry live,

* Unless thou rescue him from foul despair?

* Bona. My quarrel, and this English queen's,⁷ are one.

* War. And mine, fair Lady Bona, joins with
yours.

* K. Lew. And mine with hers, and thine, and Margaret's.

Therefore, at last, I firmly am resolv'd,

You shall have aid.

* Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.

K. Lew. Then England's messenger, return in post;

And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—

That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,

To revel it with him and his new bride:

* Thou seest what's past, go fear⁸ thy king withal.

Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,

I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.

* Q. Mar. Tell him, My mourning weeds are laid
aside,

And I am ready to put armour on.

War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong;

And therefore I'll uncrown him, ere't be long.

There's thy reward; be gone.⁹ [Exit Mess.

K. Lew. But, Warwick, thou,

And Oxford, with five thousand men,

Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle:

* And, as occasion serves, this noble queen

* And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.

* Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt;—

* What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?

⁵ To sooth, in ancient language, was 'to countenance a falsehood or forged tale, to uphold one in his talks, and affirm it to be true which he speaketh.' Baret.
Malone blunders strangely, taking to sooth in his modern acceptation of to soften.

⁶ King Edward did attempt a thing once in the earle's house, which was much against the earle's honesty (whether he would have deflowered his daughter or his niece, the certainty was not for both their honours revealed,) for surely such a thing was attempted by King Edward.—Holinshed, p. 688.

⁷ Rewarded.

⁸ Fright.

⁹ Here we are to suppose that, according to ancient custom, Warwick makes a present to the herald or messenger, who in the old play is called a Post. See note on King Henry V. Act III. Sc. vii.

War. This shall assure my constant loyalty :—
That if our queen and this young prince agree,
I'll join mine eldest daughter,¹ and my joy,
To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.

Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion :—

*Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous,
Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick ;
And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.*

Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it ;

And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

[He gives his hand to WARWICK.]

K. Lew. Why stay we now ? These soldiers shall be levied,

And thou, Lord Bourbon, our high admiral,

Shall wait them over with our royal fleet.—

I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,

For mocking marriage with a dame of France.
[Exeunt all but WARWICK.]

War. I came from Edward as ambassador,
But I return his sworn and mortal foe :
Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,
But dreadful war shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a stale,² but me ?
Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.
I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again :
Not that I pity Henry's misery,
But seek revenge on Edward's mockery. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace.
Enter GLOSTER, CLARENCE, SOMERSET, MONTAGUE, and others.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you

Of this new marriage with the Lady Grey ?

Hath not our brother made a worthy choice ?

Clar. Alas, you know, 'tis far from hence to France ;

How could he stay till Warwick made return ?

Som. My lords, forbear this talk ; here comes the king.

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD, attended ; LADY GREY, as Queen ; PEMBROKE, STAFFORD, HASTINGS, and others.

Glo. And his well chosen bride.

K. Edw. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice,

That you stand pensive, as half discontent ?

Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick ;

Which are so weak of courage, and in judgment,

That they'll take no offence at our abuse.

K. Edw. Suppose, they take offence without a cause,

They are but Lewis and Warwick ; I am Edward,

Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will.

Glo. And you shall have your will, because our king :

Yet hasty marriage seldom proveth well.

K. Edw. Yea, brother Richard, are you offended too ?

Glo. Not I :

No ; God forbid, that I should wish them sever'd

¹ This is a departure from the truth of history, for Edward prince of Wales was married to Anne, second daughter of the earl of Warwick. In fact Isabella, his eldest daughter, was married to Clarence in 1468. There is, however, no inconsistency in the present proposal : for at the time represented, when Warwick was in France, neither of his daughters were married. Shakespeare has here again followed the old play. In King Richard III. he has properly represented Lady Anne, the widow of Edward prince of Wales, as the youngest daughter of Warwick.

² A stale here means a stalking horse, a pretence.

³ See King John, note on the final speech.

Whom God hath join'd together : ay, and 'twere pity,

To sunder them that yoke so well together.

K. Edw. Setting your scorn, and your mislike, aside,

Tell me some reason, why the Lady Grey

Should not become my wife, and England's queen :—

And you, too, Somerset, and Montague,

Speak freely what you think.

Clar. Then this is my opinion,—that king Lewis

Becomes your enemy, for mocking him

About the marriage of the Lady Bona.

Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave is charge,

Is now dishonoured by this new marriage.

K. Edw. What, if both Lewis and Warwick be appeas'd,

By such invention as I can devise ?

Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance,

Would more have strengthen'd this our commonwealth

'Gainst foreign storms, than any home-bred marriage.

Hast. Why, knows not Montague, that of itself

England is safe, if true within itself ?

Mont. Yes ; but the safer, when 'tis back'd with France.

Hast. 'Tis better using France, than trusting

France :

 Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,*

 Which he hath given for fence impregnable,*

 And with their helps only defend ourselves ;*

 In them, and in ourselves, our safety lies.*

Clar. For this one speech, Lord Hastings well deserves

To have the bear of the Lord Hungerford.

K. Edw. Ay, what of that ? it was my will, and grant ;

 And, for this once, my will shall stand for law.*

Glo. And yet, methinks your grace hath not done well,

To give the heir and daughter of Lord Scales

Unto the brother of your loving bride ;

 She better would have fitted me, or Clarence :*

 But in your bride you bury brotherhood.*

Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir⁴

Of the Lord Bonville on your new wife's son,

And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.

K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence ! is it for a wife,

 That thou art discontent ? I will provide thee.*

Clar. In choosing for yourself, you show'd your judgment ;

 Which being shallow, you shall give me leave*

To play the broker in mine own behalf ;

And to that end, I shortly mind to leave you.

K. Edw. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king,

And not be tied unto his brother's will.

Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleased his majesty

To raise my state to title of a queen,

Do me but right, and you must all confess

 That I was not ignoble of descent,*

 And meaner than myself have had like fortune.*

 But as this title honours me and mine,*

 So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,*

 Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.*

⁴ This has been the advice of every man who in any age understood and favoured the interest of England.—Johnson.

⁵ Until the Restoration minors coming into possession of great estates were in the wardship of the king, who bestowed them on his favourites, or in other words gave them up to plunder, and afterwards disposed of them in marriage as he pleased. I know not (says Johnson) when liberty gained more than by the abolition of the court of wards.

⁶ Her father was Sir Richard Widville, Knight, afterwards earl of Rivers ; her mother Jacqueline, duchess dowager of Bedford, who was daughter of Peter of Luxemburg, earl of St. Paul, and widow of John duke of Bedford, brother to King Henry V.

* K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns:
 * What danger, or what sorrow can befall thee,
 * So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
 * And their true sovereign, whom they must obey?
 * Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,
 * Unless they seek for hatred at my hands:
 * Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
 * And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.
 * Glo. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more. [Aside.]

Enter a Messenger.

* K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters, or what news,
 From France?

* Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters; and few words,

* But such as I, without your special pardon,
 Dare not relate.

* K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore, in brief,

* Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them.

* What answer makes King Lewis unto our letters?

* Mess. At my depart, these were his very words;
Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To reveal it with him and his new bride.

* K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave? belike he thinks me Henry.

* But what said Lady Bona to my marriage?

* Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain;

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.

* K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less;

* She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen?

* For I have heard, that she was there in place.¹

* Mess. Tell him, quoth she, my mourning weeds are done.²

And I am ready to put armour on.

* K. Edw. Belike, she minds to play the Amazon.
 But what said Warwick to these injuries?

* Mess. He, more incens'd against your majesty
 * Than all the rest, discharged me with these words;

Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,

And therefore I'll uncrown him, ere't be long.

* K. Edw. Ha! durst the traitor breathe out so proud words?

* Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd:

* They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption.

* But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret?

* Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign; they are so link'd in friendship,

* That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

* Clar. Belike, the elder; Clarence will have the younger.³

* Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,

* For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter;

* That though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage
 * I may not prove inferior to yourself.—

* You, that love me and Warwick, follow me.⁴

[Exit CLARENCE, and SOMERSET follows.]

* Glo. Not I:

* My thoughts aim at a further matter; I

* Stay not for love of Edward, but the crown. [Aside.]

* K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick!

* Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen;

* And haste is needful in this desperate case.—

* Pembroke, and Stafford, you in our behalf

* Go levy men, and make prepare for war;

* They are already, or quickly will be landed:

* Myself in person will straight follow you.

[Exit PEMBROKE and STAFFORD.]

* But, ere I go, Hastings,—and Montague,—

* Resolve my doubt. You twain, of all the rest,

* Are near to Warwick, by blood, and by alliance:

* Tell me, if you love Warwick more than me?

* If it be so, then both depart to him;

* I rather wish you foes, than hollow friends;

* But if you mind to hold your true obedience,

* Give me assurance with some friendly vow,

* That I may never have you in suspect.

* Mont. So God help Montague, as he proves true!

* Mont. And Hastings, as he favours Edward's cause!

* K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?

* Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you.

* K. Edw. Why so; then am I sure of victory.

* Now therefore let us hence; and lose no hour,

* Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power. [Exit.]

[Exit.]

SCENE II. A Plain in Warwickshire. Enter

WARWICK and OXFORD, with French and other

Forces.

* War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well;

* The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter CLARENCE and SOMERSET.

* But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come:—

* Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends?

* Clar. Fear not that, my lord.

* War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwick;

* And welcome, Somerset:—I hold it cowardice,

* To rest mistrustful where a noble heart

* Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love;

* Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's brother,

* Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings:

* But welcome, sweet Clarence; my daughter shall

* be thine.

* And now what rests, but, in night's coverture,

* Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd,

* His soldiers lurking in the towns about,

* And but attended by a simple guard,

* We may surprise and take him at our pleasure?

* Our scouts have found the adventure very easy:

* That as Ulysses,⁵ and stout Diomed,

* With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents,

* And brought from thence the Thracian fatal

* steeds;⁶

* So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle,

* At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,

* And seize himself; I say not—slaughter him,

* For I intend but only to surprise him.—

* You, that will follow me to this attempt,

* Applaud the name of Henry, with your leader.

[They all cry Henry!]

* Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort:

* For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George!

[Exit.]

SCENE III. Edward's Camp, near Warwick.

Enter certain Watchmen, to guard the King's Tent.

* 1 Watch. Come on my masters, each man take

* his stand;

* The king, by this, is set him down to sleep.

* 2 Watch. What, will he not to bed?

* 1 Watch. Why, no: for he hath made a solemn

* vow

¹ In place signifies these present. The expression is of frequent occurrence in old English writers. It is from the French en place.

² I. e. my mourning is ended.

³ This is consonant with the former passage of this play, though at variance with what really happened.

⁴ Johnson has remarked upon the actual improbability of Clarence making this speech in the king's hearing. Shakspeare followed the old play, where this line is also found. When the earl of Essex attempted to raise a rebellion in the city, with a design, as was supposed, to storm the queen's palace, he ran about the streets with his sword drawn, crying out, 'They that love me, follow me.'

⁵ See the tenth book of the Iliad. These circumstances were accessible, however, without reference to Homer in the original.

⁶ We are told by some of the writers of the Trojan story, that the capture of these horses was one of the necessary preliminaries of the fate of Troy.

* Never to lie and take his natural rest,
 * Till Warwick, or himself, be quite suppress'd.
 * 2 Watch. To-morrow then, belike, shall be the day,

* If Warwick be so near as men report.
 * 3 Watch. But say, I pray, what nobleman is that

* That with the king here resteth in his tent?
 * 1 Watch. 'Tis the Lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend.

* 3 Watch. O, is it so? But why commands the king,

* That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
 * While he himself keepeth in the cold field?

* 2 Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because more dangerous.

* 3 Watch. Ay; but give me worship and quietness,

* I like it better than a dangerous honour.¹

* If Warwick knew in what estate he stands,

* 'Tis to be doubted, he would waken him.

* 1 Watch. Unless our halberds did shut up his passage.

* 2 Watch. Ay; wherefore else guard we his royal tent,

* But to defend his person from night foes?

Enter WARWICK, CLARENCE, OXFORD, SOMERSET, and Forces.

* War. This is his tent; and see, where stand his guard.

Courage, my masters: honour now, or never!
 But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

1 Watch. Who goes there?

* 2 Watch. Stay, or thou diest.

[WARWICK, and the rest, cry all—Warwick!
 Warwick! and set upon the Guard; who fly, crying, Arm! Arm! WARWICK, and the rest, following them.]

The Drum beating, and Trumpets sounding. Re-enter WARWICK, and the rest, bringing the King out in a Gown, sitting in a Chair; GLOSTER and HASTINGS fly.

* Som. What are they that fly there?

* War. Richard, and Hastings: let them go, here's the duke.

* K. Edw. The duke! why, Warwick, when we parted last,

Thou call'dst me king?

* War. Ay, but the case is alter'd:

* When you disgrac'd me in my embassy,

* Then I degraded you from being king.

And come now to create you duke of York.

Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,

That know not how to use ambassadors;

Nor how to be contented with one wife;

Nor how to use your brothers brotherly;

* Nor how to study for the people's welfare;

Nor how to shrowd yourself from enemies?

* K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here too?

* Nay, then I see, that Edward needs must down.—

* Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,

* Of thee thyself, and all thy complices,

* Edward will always bear himself as king:

* Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,

* My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

* War. Then, for his mind,² be Edward England's king:

[Takes off his Crown.]

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,

* And be true king indeed; thou but the shadow.—

* My lord of Somerset, at my request,

* Set that forthwith Duke Edward be convey'd

* Unto my brother, archbishop of York.

* When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows,

* I'll follow you, and tell what answer

* Lewis, and the Lady Bona, send to him:

Now, for a while, farewell, good duke of York.

¹ This honest watchman's opinion coincides with that of Falstaff. See the First Part of King Henry IV Act v Sc. 3.

* K. Edw. What fates impose, that men must needs abide;

* It boots not to resist both wind and tide.

[Exit KING EDWARD, led out; SOMERSET with him.]

* Oxf. What now remains, my lords, for us to do,

* But march to London with our soldiers?

* War. Ay, that's the first thing that we have to do;

* To free King Henry from imprisonment,

And see him seated in the regal throne. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Palace. Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH and RIVERS.

* Riv. Madam, what makes you in this sudden change?

* Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to learn,

* What late misfortune is befall'n King Edward?

* Riv. What loss of some pitch'd battle against Warwick?

* Q. Eliz. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

* Riv. Then is my sovereign slain?

* Q. Eliz. Ay, almost slain, for he is taken prisoner;

* Either betray'd by falsehood of his guard,

* Or by his foe surpris'd at unawares:

* And, as I further have to understand,

* Is new committed to the bishop of York,

* Fell Warwick's brother, and by that our foe.

* Riv. These news, I must confess, are full of grief:

* Yet, gracious madam, bear it as you may:

* Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.

* Q. Eliz. Till then, fair hope must hinder life's decay.

* And I the rather wean me from despair,

* For love of Edward's offspring in my womb:

* This is it that makes me bridle passion,

* And bear with mildness my misfortune's cross;

* Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear,

* And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs,

* Lest with my sighs or tears I blast or drown

* King Edward's fruit, true heir to the English crown.

* Riv. But, madam, where is Warwick then become?

* Q. Eliz. I am informed, that he comes towards London,

* To set the crown once more on Henry's head:

* Guess thou the rest; King Edward's friends must down.

* But to prevent the tyrant's violence

* (For trust not him that hath once broken faith,

* I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary,

* To save at least the heir of Edward's right;

* There shall I rest secure from force, and fraud.

* Come, therefore, let us fly, while we may fly;

* If Warwick take us, we are sure to die. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.³ Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, SIR WILLIAM STANLEY, and others.

* Glo. Now, my Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley,

* Leave off to wonder why I draw you hither,

* Into this chiefest thicket of the park.

* Thus stands the case: You know, our king, my brother,

* Is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands

* He hath good usage and great liberty;

* And often, but attended with weak guard,

* Comes hunting this way to disport himself.

* I have advertis'd him by secret means,

* That if, about this hour, he make his way,

* Under the colour of his usual game,

* He shall here find his friends, with horse and men,

* To set him free from his captivity.

² I. e. in his mind; as far as his own mind goes.
³ Shakespeare follows Holinshed in the representation here given of King Edward's capture and imprisonment. The whole, however, is untrue. Edward was never in the hands of Warwick.

Enter KING EDWARD and a Huntsman.

Hunt. This way, my lord; for this way lies the game.

* K. Edw. Nay, this way, man; see, where the huntmen stand.—

* Now, brother of Gloster, Lord Hastings, and the rest,

Stand you thus close, to steal the bishop's deer?

* Glo. Brother, the time and case requireth haste; your horse stands ready at the park corner.

* K. Edw. But whither shall we then?

* Hast. To Lynn, my lord: and ship from thence to Flanders.

* Glo. Well guess'd, believe me; for that was my meaning.

* K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.

* Glo. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talk.

* K. Edw. Huntsman, what say'st thou? wilt thou go along?

* Hunt. Better do so, than tarry and be hang'd.

* Glo. Come then, away; let's have no more ado.

* K. Edw. Bishop, farewell: shield thee from Warwick's frown;

And pray that I may repossess the crown. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. A Room in the Tower. Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, WARWICK, SOMERSET, Young RICHMOND, OXFORD, MONTAGUE, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.

* K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and friends

* Have shaken Edward from the regal seat;

* And turn'd my captive state to liberty,

* My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys;

* At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

* Lieut. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;

* But, if a humble prayer may prevail,

* I then crave pardon of your majesty.

* K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?

* Nay, be thou sure, I'll well requite thy kindness,

* For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure:

* Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds

* Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,

* At last, by notes of household harmony,

* They quite forget their loss of liberty.—

* But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free,

* And chiefly therefore I thank God, and thee;

* He was the author, thou the instrument.

* Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,

* By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me;

* And that the people of this blessed land

* May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars;

* Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,

* I here resign my government to thee,

* For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

* War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous;

* And now may seem as wise as virtuous,

* By spying, and avoiding, fortune's malice,

* For few men rightly temper with the stars:¹

* Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace,

* For choosing me, when Clarence is in place.²

* Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,

* To whom the heavens, in thy nativity,

* Adjudg'd an olive branch, and laurel crown,

* As likely to be blest in peace, and war;

* And therefore I yield thee my free consent.

* War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.

* K. Hen. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your hands;

* Now join your hands, and, with your hands, your hearts,

* That no dissension hinder government:

* I make you both protectors of this land;

* While I myself will lead a private life,

* And in devotion spend my latter days,

* To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise.

* War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's will?

* Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent:

* For on thy fortune I repose myself.

* War. Why then, though loath, yet must I be content:

* We'll yoke together, like a double shadow

* To Henry's body, and supply his place:

* I mean, in bearing weight of government,

* While he enjoys the honour, and his ease.

* And, Clarence, now then it is more than needful,

* Forthwith that Edward be pronounced a traitor,

* And all his lands and goods be confiscate.

* Clar. What else? and that succession be determin'd.

* War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.

* K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,

* Let me entreat (for I command no more)

* That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,

* Be sent for, to return from France with speed:

* For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear

* My joy of liberty is half eclips'd.

* Clar. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed.

* K. Hen. My lord of Somerset, what youth is that, Of whom you seem to have so tender care?

* Som. My liege, it is young Henry, earl of Richmond.

* K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope: If secret powers [Lays his Hand on his Head.]

* Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,

* This pretty lad³ will prove our country's bliss.

* His looks are full of peaceful majesty;

* His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,

* His hand to wield a sceptre; and himself

* Likely, in time, to bless a regal throne.

* Make much of him, my lords; for this is he,

* Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Messenger.

* War. What news, my friend?

* Mess. That Edward is escaped from your brother,

* And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.

* War. Unsavoury news: But how made he escape?

* Mess. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloster,

* And the Lord Hastings, who attend'd him

* In secret ambush on the forest side,

* And from the bishop's huntmen rescued him;

* For hunting was his daily exercise.

* War. My brother was too careless of his charge.

* But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide

* A salve for any sore that may betide.

[Exeunt KING HENRY, WAR. CLAR. Lieut. and Attendants.]

* Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's:

* For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help;

² See note 1, p. 78.

³ This was adopted from Hall by the author of the old play; Holinshed also copies Hall almost verbatim:—'Whom when the king had a good while beheld, he said to such princes as were with him, Lo, aurelle this is he, to whom both we and our adversaries, leaving the possession of all things, shall hereafter give room and place.' p. 678. Henry earl of Richmond, was the son of Edmond earl of Richmond, and Margaret, daughter to John the first duke of Somerset. Edmond was half brother to King Henry VI. being the son of that king's mother, Queen Catharine, by her second husband, Owen Tudor. Henry the Seventh, to show his gratitude to Henry VI. for this early presage in his favour, solicited Pope Julius to canonize him a saint; but either would not pay the price, or, as Bacon supposes, the pope refused lest 'as Henry was reputed in the world abroad but for a simple man, the estimation of that kind of honour might be diminished if there were not a distance kept between innocents and saints.'

⁴ I. e. waited for him.

- * And we shall have more wars, before't be long.
- * As Henry's late presaging prophecy
- * Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond;
- * So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts
- * What may befall him, to his harm, and ours :
- * Therefore, Lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
- * Forthwith we'll send him hence to Brittany,
- * Till storms be past of civil enmity.
- * Osf. Ay ; for if Edward repossess the crown,
- * 'Tis like, that Richmond with the rest shall down.
- * Som. It shall be so ; he shall to Brittany.
- * Come, therefore, let's about it speedily. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Before York. Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and Forces.

- * K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest ;
- * Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends,
- * And says—that once more I shall interchange
- * My waned state for Henry's regal crown.
- * Well have we pass'd, and now repass the seas,
- * And brought desired help from Burgundy :
- * What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
- * From Ravenspurgh haven¹ before the gates of York,
- * But that we enter, as into our dukedom ?
- * Glo. The gates made fast !—Brother, I like not this ;
- * For many men, that stumble at the threshold,
- * Are well foretold—that danger lurks within.
- * K. Edw. Tush, man ! abodements must not now affright us :
- * By fair or foul means we must enter in,
- * For hither will our friends repair to us.
- * Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more, to summon them.

Enter, on the Walls, the Mayor of York, and his Brethren.

- * May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,
- * And shut the gates for safety of ourselves ;
- * For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.
- * K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your king,
- * Yet Edward, at the least, is duke of York.
- * May. True, my good lord ; I know you for no less.
- * K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my dukedom ;
- * As being well content with that alone.
- * Glo. But, when the fox hath once got in his nose,
- * He'll soon find means to make the body follow. [Aside.]
- * Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt ?
- * Open the gates, we are King Henry's friends.
- * May. Ay, say you so ? the gates shall then be open'd. [Exeunt from above.]
- * Glo. A wise stout captain, and persuaded soon !
- * Hast. The good old man would fain that all were well,
- * So 'twere not 'long of him :² but, being enter'd,
- * I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade
- * Both him, and all his brothers, unto reason.

Re-enter the Mayor, and Two Aldermen, below.

- * K. Edw. So, master mayor : these gates must not be shut,
- * But in the night, or in the time of war.
- * What ! fear not, man, but yield me up the keys ; [Takes his Keys.]
- * For Edward will defend the town, and thee,
- * And all those friends that deign to follow me.

Drum. Enter MONTGOMERY, and Forces, marching.

- Glo. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery, Our trusty friend, unless I be deceiv'd.
- * K. Edw. Welcome, Sir John ! But why come you in arms ?
- Mont. To help King Edward in his time of storm, As every loyal subject ought to do.
- * K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery : But we now forget
- * Our title to the crown ! and only claim
- * Our dukedom, till God please to send the rest.
- * Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again ;
- * I came to serve a king, and not a duke,—
- * Drummer, strike up, and let us march away. [A March begun.]

- * K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, a while ; and we'll debate,
- * By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.
- * Mont. What talk you of debating ? in few words,
- * If you'll not here proclaim yourself our king,
- * I'll leave you to your fortune ; and be gone,
- * To keep them back that come to succour you :
- * Why should we fight, if you pretend no title ?
- Glo. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points ?
- * K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make our claim ;
- * Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.
- * Hast. Away with scrupulous wit ! now arms must rule.
- * Glo. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crowns.
- * Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand ;
- * The bruit³ thereof will bring you many friends.
- * K. Edw. Then be it as you will ; for 'tis my right,
- * And Henry but usurps the diadem.
- Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like himself ;

And now will I be Edward's champion.

- Hast. Sound, trumpet ; Edward shall be here proclaim'd :—

* Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

[Gives him a Paper. Flourish.]

Sold. [Reads.] Edward the Fourth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, &c.

Mont. And whoso'er gainsays King Edward's right,

By this I challenge him to single fight.

[Throws down his Gauntlet.]

All. Long live Edward the Fourth !

* K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery ;—and thanks unto you all.

* If fortune serve me, I'll requite this kindness.

* Now, for this night, let's harbour here in York :

* And, when the morning sun shall raise his car

* Above the border of this horizon,

* We'll forward towards Warwick, and his mates ;

* For, well I wot,⁴ that Henry is no soldier.—

* Ah, froward Clarence !—how evil it becometh thee,

* To flatter Henry, and forsake thy brother !

* Yet, as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwick.—

* Come on, brave soldiers ; doubt not of the day ;

* And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.⁵ London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, WARWICK, CLARENCE, MONTAIGUE, EXETER, and OXFORD.

War. What counsel, lords ? Edward from Belgium, With hasty Germans, and blunt Hollanders, Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas, And with his troops doth march amain to London ; And many giddy people flock to him.

these plays. Warwick has but just gone off the stage, when Edward says :—

'And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,

Where peremptory Warwick now remains.'

In the original play this scene follows immediately after King Henry's observations on young Richmond, the sixth scene of the present play.

¹ In the old play this is written Raunspurhaven, we may therefore infer that such was the pronunciation.

² The mayor is willing we should enter, so he may not be blamed.

³ Report. Vide Macbeth, Act v. Sc. 7.

⁴ Know.

⁵ This scene is perhaps the worst contrived of any in

* Oxf. Let's levy men and beat him back again.
Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out;
 Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.
War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted
 friends,
 Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war;
 Those with I muster up:—and thou, son Clarence,
 'Shalt stir, in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent,
 'The knights and gentlemen to come with thee:
 'Thou, brother Montague, in Buckingham,
 'Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find
 'Men well inclin'd to hear what thou command'st:
 And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well belov'd,
 In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.—
 My sovereign, with the loving citizens,—
 * Like to his island, girl in with the ocean,
 * Or modest Dian, circled with her nymphs,—
 Shall rest in London, till we come to him.—
 Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply.—
 Farewell, my sovereign.

K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's true hope.

* Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness' hand.

* K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate!

* Mont. Comfort, my lord,—and so I take my leave.

* Oxf. And thus, [Kissing HENRY's hand,] I seal
 my truth, and bid adieu.

* K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,

* And all at once, once more a happy farewell.

War. Farewell, sweet lords; let's meet at Coventry.

[Exit WAR. CLAR. OXF. and MONT.]

* K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest a while.

* Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?

* Methinks, the power, that Edward hath in field

* Should not be able to encounter mine.

* Exe. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.

* K. Hen. That's not my fear, my meed¹ hath got me fame.

* I have not stopp'd mine ears to their demands,

* Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;

* My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,

* My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,

* My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears:

* I have not been desirous of their wealth,

* Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,

* Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd:

* Then why should they love Edward more than me?

* No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace;

* And, when the lion fawns upon the lamb,

* The lamb will never cease to follow him.

[Shout within. A Lancaster! A Lancaster!]

Exe. Hark, hark, my lord! what shouts are these?

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers.

* K. Edw. Seize on the shame-fac'd Henry, bear him hence,

* And once again proclaim us king of England.—

* You are the fount that makes small brooks to flow:

* Now stops thy spring; my sea shall suck them dry,

* And swell so much the higher by their ebb.—

* Hence with him to the Tower; let him not speak.

[Exit some with KING HENRY.]

* And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,

* Where peremptory Warwick now remains:

4

1 This line, in the folio copy, is given to the king, to whose character it is so unsuitable, that it has been thought best to give it to Oxford, who is the next speaker in the old play.

2 Shakespeare has twice repeated this passage, which made an impression upon him in the old play. He has applied the same expression to the duke of York, where his overthrow at Wakefield is described:—

'Environed he was with many foes,

And stood against them as the hope of Troy

Against the Greeks.'

In the former instance no trace is to be found of these lines in the old play. Several similar repetitions are found in this Third Part of King Henry VI.

3 Mark.

* The sun shames hot, and, if we use delay,

* Cold biting winter mars our hop'd for hay.

* Glo. Away betimes, before his forces join,

* And take the great-grown traitor unawares:

* Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Coventry. Enter, upon the Walls, WARWICK, the Mayor of Coventry, Two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?

* 1 Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How far off is our brother Montague?

Where is the post that came from Coventry?

* 2 Mess. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troop.

Enter SIR JOHN SOMERVILLE.

* War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

* And, by the guess, how nigh is Clarence now?

* Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces.

* And do expect him here some two hours hence.

[Drum heard.]

* War. Then Clarence is at hand, I hear his drum.

* Som. It is not his, my lord: here Southam lies:

* The drum your honour hears, marcheth from Warwick.

* War. Who should that be? belike, unlook'd-for friends.

* Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

Drums. Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Forces, marching.

* K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle.

* Glo. See how the surly Warwick mends the wall.

War. O, unbild spite! is sportful Edward come?

Where slept our scouts,⁴ or how are they seduc'd,

That we could hear no news of his repair?

* K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city gates,

* Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee?

* Call Edward—king, and at his hands beg mercy,

* And he shall pardon thee these outrages.

* War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,

Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down?—

Call Warwick—patron, and be penitent,

And thou shalt still remain the duke of York.

Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said—the king;

Or did he make the jest against his will?

* War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

* Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give;

* I'll do thee service for so good a gift.

* War. 'Twas I, that gave the kingdom to thy brother.

K. Edw. Why, then 'tis mine, if but by Warwick's gift.

* War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:

And, weakening, Warwick takes his gift again:

And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

4

4 Warwick has but just left the stage, declaring his intention to go to Coventry. How then could Edward know of that intention? Shakespeare here again followed the old play. Some of the old dramatic writers seem to have thought that all the persons of the drama, must know whatever was known to the writers themselves, or to the audience.

5 The allusion is to the proverb, 'Make hay while the sun shines.'

6 Thus in King John:—

'O, where hath our intelligence been drunk?

Where hath it slept?'

7 That is, enroll myself among thy dependents, Cowell informs us that servitium is 'that service which the tenant, by reason of his fee, oweth unto his lord.'

* K. Edw. But Warwick's king is Edward's prisoner :

* And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this,—
What is the body, when the head is off ?

* Glo. Alas, that Warwick had no more forecast,
But, whiles he thought to steal the single ton,
'The king was sliſly finger'd from the deck !'
You left poor Henry at the biſhop's palace,¹
And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.

* K. Edw. 'Tis even so ; yet you are Warwick ſtill.

* Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time, kneel down, kneel down :

* Nay, when ? strike now, or else the iron cools.

* War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,

* And with the other fling it at thy face,

* Than bear so low a ſail, to ſtrike to thee.

* K. Edw. Sail how thou canſt, have wind and tide thy friend ;

* This hand, ſet wound about thy cold-black hair,

* Shall, whiles the head is warm, and new cut off,

* Write in the duſt this ſentence with thy blood,—

* *Wind-changing Warwick now can change no
more.*

Enter Oxford, with Drum and Colours.

* War. O cheerful colours ! ſee, where Oxford comes !

Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaſter !

[Oxford and his Forces enter the City.

* Glo. The gates are open, let us enter too.

* K. Edw. So other foes may ſet upon our backs.

* Stand we in good array ; for they, no doubt,

* Will iſſue out again, and bid us battle :

* If not, the city, being but of ſmall defence,

* We'll quickly rouse the traitors in the ſame.

War. O, welcome, Oxford, for we want thy help.

Enter Montague, with Drum and Colours.

Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaſter !

[He and his Forces enter the City.

* Glo. Thou and thy brother both ſhall buy this treason

* Even with the deareſt blood your bodies bear.

* K. Edw. The harder match'd, the greater victory ;

* My mind preſageth happy gain, and conqueſt.

Enter Somerset, with Drum and Colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaſter !

[He and his Forces enter the City.

* Glo. Two of thy name, both dukes of Somerset,
Have sold their lives unto the houſe of York ;
And thou ſhalt be the third, if this ſword hold.

Enter Clarence, with Drum and Colours.

War. And lo, where George of Clarence ſweeps along,

Of force enough to bid his brother battle ;

* With whom an upright zeal to rights prevails,

* More than the nature of a brother's love :—

* Come, Clarence, come ; thou wilt, if Warwick calls.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means ;

[Taking the red Rose out of his Cap.

* Look here, I throw my infamy at thee :

I will not ruinate my father's houſe,

Who gave his blood to lime¹ the ſtones together,

* And ſet up Lancaſter. Why, trow'ſt thou, Warwick,

* That Clarence is ſo harſh, ſo blunt,² unnatural,

' To bend the fatal instruments of war

' Against his brother, and his lawful king ?

* Perhaps, thou wilt object my holy oath :

* To keep that oath, were more impiety

* Than Jephtha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter.

* I am so sorry for my trespass made,

* That, to deserve well at any brother's hands,

* I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe ;

* With resolution, wheresoe'er I meet thee

* (As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad,)

* To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.

And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee,

And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.—

* Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends ;

And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,

For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

* K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd,

Than if thou never hadst deserv'd our hate.

* Glo. Welcome, good Clarence : this is brother-like.

War. O passing traitor, perjur'd, and unjust !

* K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town, and fight ?

Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears ?

* War. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence :

I will away towards Barnet presently,

And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st.

* K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way :—

Lords, to the field ; Saint George, and victory.

[March. Exeunt.

SCENE II. A Field of Battle near Barnet. Alarums, and Excursions. Enter KING EDWARD, bringing in WARWICK wounded.

* K. Edw. So, lie thou there : die thou, and die our fear ;

* For Warwick was a bug,³ that fear'd us all.—

* Now, Montague, sit fast ; I seek for thee,

* That Warwick's bones may keep thine company.
[Exit.

War. Ah, who is nigh ? Come to me, friend, or foe,

And tell me who is victor, York or Warwick ?

Why ask I that ? my mangled body shews,

* My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart
shews

That I must yield my body to the earth,

And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,

Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle,

Under whose shade the ramping lion slept :

Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,

* And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.

* These eyes, that now are diamond'd with death's

black veil,

* Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,

* To search the secret treasons of the world :

The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,

Were likend off to kingly sepulchres ;

For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave ?

And who durst smile, when Warwick bent his brow ?

Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood !

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,

Even now forsake me ; and, of all my lands,

Is nothing left me, but my body's length !⁴

Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust ?

And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

taken prisoner at Tewksbury, 1471, and there beheaded ; his brother John losing his life in the same fight.

1 l. e. To cement.

2 l. e. stupid, insensible of paternal fondness.

3 l. e. exceeding, egregious. 'A passing impudent fellow ; insinuating impudens.'—Baret.

4 Warwick was the bugbear that frightened us all.

3 This expression of impudence has been already noticed in The Tempest, and King Richard II.

Enter OXFORD and SOMERSET.

* Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! wert thou as we are,
* We might recover all our loss again!
* The queen from France hath brought a puissant power:
* Even now we heard the news: Ah, could'st thou fly!

* War. Why, then I would not fly.—Ah, Montague,
* If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,
* And with thy lips keep in my soul a while!
* Thou lov'st me not; for, brother, if thou didst,
* Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood,
* That glues my lips, and will not let me speak.
* Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.
* Som. Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;

* And, to the latest gasp, cried out for Warwick,
* And said—Commend me to my valiant brother.
* And more he would have said; and more he spoke,
* Which sounded like a cannon in a vault,
* That might not be distinguish'd; but, at last,
* I well might hear deliver'd with a groan,—
* O, farewell, Warwick!

War. Sweet rest to his soul!—
Fly, lords, and save yourselves: for Warwick bids
You all farewell, to meet again in heaven. [Dies.
Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power! [Exeunt, bearing off WAR. Body.

SCENE III. Another Part of the Field. Flourish.
—Enter KING EDWARD in triumph; with CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and the rest.

K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course,

* And we are grac'd with wreaths of victory.
* But, in the midst of this bright-shining day,
* I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
* That will encounter with our glorious sun,
* Ere he attain his caseful western bed:
* I mean, my lords,—those powers, that the queen
* Hath rais'd in Gallia, have arriv'd our coast,
* And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

* Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud,
* And blow it to the source from whence it came:
* Thy very beams will dry those vapours up;
* For every cloud engenders not a storm.

* Glo. The queen is valu'd thirty thousand strong,
* And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her;
* If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd,
* Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

* K. Edw. We are advertis'd by our loving friends,
* That they do hold their course towards Tewksbury;
* We having now the best at Barnet field,
* Will thither straight, for willingness ride way;
* And, as we march, our strength will be augmented
* In every country as we go along.
Strike up the drum; cry—Courage! and away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Plains near Tewksbury. March.
—Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD, SOMERSET, OXFORD, and Soldiers.

* Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss,

* But cheerly seek how to redress their harms.

order to dissuade a person from covetousness, draw out with his lance the length and breadth of a man's grave, adding, 'This is all thou shalt have when thou art dead, if thou canst happily get so much.'

Johnson observes that Warwick's mention of his parks and manors diminishes the pathetic of these lines. It is true that it is something in the strain of the whining ghosts of the Mirror for Magistrates; but it was the popular style of the time: Cavendish, in his Metrical Legends, introduces Wolsey's shade lamenting to leave his palaces and gardens.

1 The old play has this line—
* Which sounded like a cannon in a vault.
I cannot but think that cannon is an error of the press in the first folio. 'The indistinct gabble of undertakers

* What though the mast be now blown overboard,
* The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
* And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood?
* Yet lives our pilot still: Is't meet, that he
* Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
* With fearful eyes add water to the sea,
* And give more strength to that which hath too much?

* While, in his moan, the ship splits on the rock,
* Which industry and courage might have sav'd?
* Ah, what a shame! ah, what a fault were this!
* Say, Warwick was our anchor: What of that?
* And Montague our top-mast: What of him?
* Our slaughter'd friends the tackles: What of these?

* Why, is not Oxford here another anchor?
* And Somerset another goodly mast?
* The friends of France our shrouds and tacklings?
* And, though unskilful, why not Ned and I
* For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge?
* We will not from the helm, to sit and weep;
* But keep our course, though the rough wind say

—no,

* From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck.

* As good to chide the waves, as speak them fair.
* And what is Edward, but a ruthless sea?
* What Clarence, but a quicksand of deceit?
* And Richard, but a ragged fatal rock?
* All these the enemies to our poor bark.

* Say, you can swim; alas, 'tis but a while:
* Tread on the sand; why, there you quickly sink:
* Bestride the rock; the tide will wash you off,
* Or else you famish, that's a threefold death.
* This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
* In case some one of you would fly from us,
* That there's no hop'd-for mercy with the brothers,
* More than with ruthless waves, with sands, and rocks.

* Why, courage, then! what cannot be avoided,
* 'Twere childish weakness to lament, or fear.
* Prince. Methinks, a woman of this valiant spirit,
* Should, if a coward heard her speak these words,

* Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
* And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.

* I speak not this, as doubting any here:
* For, did I but suspect a fearful man,

* He should have leave to go away betimes;
* Least, in our need, he might infect another,
* And make him of like spirit to himself.

* If any such be here, as God forbid!
* Let him depart, before we need his help.

* Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage!
And warriors faint! why, 'twere perpetual shame.—

* O, brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee; Long may'st thou live,
To bear his image, and renew his glories!

* Som. And he, that will not fight for such a hope,
Go home to bed, and like the owl by day,
If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at.

* Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset:—sweet Oxford, thanks.

* Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.

(says Steevens,) while they adjust a coffin in a family vault, will abundantly illustrate the preceding simile. Such a peculiar hubbub of inarticulate sounds might have attracted our author's notice; it has too often forced itself on mine.

2 Arriv'd is here used in an active form.
3 This speech in the original play is expressed in eleven lines. Malone thinks its extraordinary expansion into thirty-seven lines a decisive proof that the old play was the production of some writer who preceded Shakespeare.

4 Thus Jacques moralising upon the weeping stag in As You Like It, Act I. Sc. 2:—

—Thou mak'st a testament
As woodlarks do, giving the sum of more Than that which has too much.
A similar thought is found in Shakespeare's Lover's Complaint.

Enter a Messenger.

Mass. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand.

Ready to fight; therefore be resolute.

Osf. I thought no less: it is his policy,

To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.

Som. But he's deceiv'd, we are in readiness.

Q. Mar. This cheers my heart, to see your forwardness.

Osf. Here pitch our battle, hence we will not budge.

March. Enter, at a distance, KING EDWARD, CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and Forces.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,

Which, by the heavens' assistance, and your strength,

Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.

I need not add more fuel to your fire,

For, well I wot, ye blaze to burn them out:

Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords.

Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say,

My tears ginsay; for every word I speak,

Ye see, I drink the water of mine eyes.

Therefore, no more but this:—Henry, your sovereign,

Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd,

His realm a slaughterhouse, his subjects slain,

His statutes cancell'd, and his treasure spent;

And yonder is the wolf, that makes this spoil.

You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,

Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

[Exeunt both Armies.]

SCENE V. Another part of the same. Alarums: Excursions: and afterwards a Retreat. Then enter KING EDWARD, CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and Forces; with QUEEN MARGARET, OXFORD, and SOMERSET, Prisoners.

K. Edw. Now, here a period of tumultuous broils.

Away with Oxford to Hammes castle¹ straight:

For Somerset, off with his guilty head.

Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them speak.

Osf. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words.

Som. Nor I, but stoop with patience to my fortune.

[Exeunt Oxf. and Som. guarded.]

Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublous world,

To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.

K. Edw. Is proclamation made,—that who finds Edward,

Shall have a high reward, and he his life?

Glo. It is: and lo, where youthful Edward comes.

Enter Soldiers, with PRINCE EDWARD.

K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant, let us hear him speak:

What! can so young a thorn begin to prick?

Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make,

For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,

And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?

Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York!

Suppose, that I am now my father's mouth;

Reign thy chair, and, where I stand, kneel thou,

Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee,

Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to.

² Know. ³ Unsay, deny.

⁶ We have nearly the same words in the Tempest—

“O, my heart bleeds,

“To think of the teen that I have turn'd you to.”

⁷ The prince calls Richard Esop for his crooked-

Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolv'd!

Glo. That you might still have worn the potticost,

And ne'er have stol'n the breech from Lancaster.

Prince. Let Esop's fable in a winter's night;

His currish riddles sort not with this place.

Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that word.

Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to men.

Glo. For God's sake, take away this captive scold.

Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back rather.

K. Edw. Peace, wilful boy, or I will charm⁸ your tongue.

Clar. Untutor'd lad, thou art too malapert.

Prince. I know my duty, you are all undutiful:

Lascivious Edward,—and thou perjurd⁹ George,

And thou misshapen Dick, I tell ye all,

I am your better, traitors as ye are:—

* And thou usurp'st my father's right and mine.

K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this railer here.¹⁰ [Stabs him.]

* Glo. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agony. [Glo. stabs him.]

* Clar. And there's for twitting me with perjury. [Clar. stabs him.]

Q. Mar. O, kill me too!

Glo. Marry, and shall. [Offers to kill her.]

K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we have done too much.

Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with words?¹¹

K. Edw. What! doth she swoon? use means for her recovery.

Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother:

I'll hence to London on a serious matter:

Ere ye come thence, be sure to hear some news.

Clar. What? what?

Glo. The Tower, the Tower! [Exit.]

* Q. Mar. O, Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy!

* Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murderers!—

They, that stabb'd¹² Cæsar, shed no blood at all,

Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,

* If this foul deed were by, to equal it.

* He was a man; this, in respect, a child;

And men ne'er spend their fury on a child.

* What's worse than murderer, that I may name it?

* No, no; my heart will burst, an if I speak;—

* And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.—

* Butchers and villains, bloody cannibals!

* How sweet a plant have you untimely cropp'd!

* You have no children, butchers! if you had,¹³

* The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse:

* But if you ever chance to have a child

Look in his youth to have him so cut off,

* As, deathsmen! you have rid¹⁴ this sweet young prince!

K. Edw. Away with her; go, bear her hence perforce.

Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, despatch me here;

Here sheath thy sword, I'll pardon thee my death:

What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou.

Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.

Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it.

Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear, I would not do it?

ness; and the poet following nature makes Richard highly incensed at the reproach.

⁸ See King Henry VI. Part II. Act iv. Sc. 1.

⁹ That is, 'thou who art the likeness,' &c. The old copies describe Edward as striking the first blow, and Gloucester the next; and this is according to history, which informs us that Edward smote the prince with his gauntlet, on which the rest dispatched him.

¹⁰ I. e. dispute, contention.

¹¹ The same sentiment is repeated by Macduff in the tragedy of Macbeth; and this passage may serve as a comment on that.

¹² To rid is to cut off, to destroy

Q. Mar. Ay, but thou wast to forswear thyself;
 'Twas sin before,¹ but now 'tis charity.
 'What! wilt thou not? where is that devil's butcher,
 Hard-favour'd Richard? Richard, where art thou?
 Thou art not here: Murder is thy alms-deed;
 Petitioners for blood thou ne'er put'st back.
K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge ye, bear her
 hence.

Q. Mar. So come to you, and yours, as to this prince! [Exit, led out forcibly.]
K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?
Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess,
 To make a bloody supper in the Tower.
K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head.

'Now march we hence: discharge the common sort
 With pay and thanks, and let's away to London;
 And see our gentle queen how well she fares;
 By this, I hope, she hath a son for me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. London. A Room in the Tower.
KING HENRY is discovered sitting with a Book in his Hand, the Lieutenant attending. Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good day, my lord: What, at your book so hard?

K. Hen. Ay, my good lord: My lord, I should say rather;

'The sin to flatter, good was little better:
 Good Gloster, and good devil, were alike,
 * And both preposterous; therefore, not good lord.

* Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer. [Exit Lieutenant.]

* K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf:

* So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,
 * And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.—
 What scene of death hath Roesius now to act?

Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind;
 The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

* K. Hen. The bird, that hath been lured in a bush,

'With trembling wings misdoubteth² every bush:
 And I, the hapless male³ to one sweet bird
 Have now the fatal object in my eye,
 Where any poor young was lin'd, was caught, and kill'd.

* Glo. Why, what a peevish⁴ fool was that of Crete,

'That taught his son the office of a fowl?
 * And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd.

* K. Hen. I, Dardanus; my poor boy, Icarus;
 Thy father, Minos, that denied our course;

'The sun, that sear'd the wings of my sweet boy,
 'Thy brother Edward; and thyself, the sea,
 'Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life.

* Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words!
 'My breast can better brook thy dagger's point,
 Than can my ears that tragic history.—

* But wherefore dost thou come? is't for my life?

* Glo. Think'st thou, I am an executioner?

* K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art;
 'If murdering innocents be executing,

'Why, then thou art an executioner.
Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.

* K. Hen. Had'st thou been kill'd, when first thou didst presume,

'Then hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine.
 And thus I prophecy,—that many a thousand,

'Which now mistrust no parcel⁵ of my fear;
 'And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's⁶,
 'And many an orphan's water-standing eye,—

¹ She alludes to the desertion of Clarence.

² To misdoubt is to suspect danger, to fear.

³ The word male is here used in an uncommon sense, for the male parent: the sweet bird is evidently his son Prince Edward.

⁴ Peevish, in the language of our ancestors, was used to signify mad or foolish. See note on Comedy of Errors, Act iv. Sc. 1.

⁵ Who suspect no part of what my fears portend.

⁶ To rook, or ruck, is to cower down like a bird at roost or on its nest. The word is of very ancient use in our language.

'Men for their sons, wives for their husbands' fate,
 'And orphans for their parents' timeless death,—
 'Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born.
 The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
 'The night-crow cried, aboding luckless time;
 Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempests shook down
 trees;

The raven rook'd⁷ her on the chimney's top,
 And chattering pies in dismal discords sung.
 Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
 And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope,
 'To wit,—an indigest deformed lump,
 Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree.

Teeth hadst thou in thy head, when thou wast born,
 To signify,—thou cam'st to bite the world:
 And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
 'Thou cam'st—

Glo. I'll hear no more;—Die, prophet, in thy speech; [Stabs him.]

For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd!

* K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after this.

O God! forgive my sins, and pardon thee! [Dies.]

Glo. What, will the aspiring blood of Lancaster Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted.
 See, how my sword weeps for the poor king's death!

'O, may such purple tears be always shed
 'From those that wish the downfall of our house!

'If any spark of life be yet remaining,
 Down, down to hell; and say—I sent thee thither.

[Stabs him again.]

I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear.—
 Indeed, 'tis true, that Henry told me of;

For I have often heard my mother say,
 I came into the world with my legs forward:

Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste,
 'And seek their ruin that usurp'd our right?

The midwife wonder'd; and the women cried,
 'O, Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth.

'And so I was; which plainly signified—
 That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.

'Then, since the heavens have shap'd my body so,
 Let hell make crook'd my mind to answer it!

I have no brother, I am like no brother:
 'And this word—love, which greybeards call divine,

Be resident in men like one another,
 And not in me; I am myself alone.—

Clarence, beware; thou keep'st me from the light
 But I will sort⁸ a pitchy day for thee:

For I will buzz abroad such prophecies,
 'That Edward shall be fearful of his life;

And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death.
 'King Henry, and the prince his son, are gone:

'Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest;
 Counting myself but bad, till I be best.—

'I'll throw thy body in another room,
 And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom. [Exit.]

SCENE VII. The same. A Room in the Palace,
KING EDWARD is discovered sitting on his Throne;

*QUEEN ELIZABETH with the infant Prince, CLARENCE, GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and others, near
 him.*

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal
 throne,

Ropurchas'd with the blood of enemies.
 What valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn,

Have we mow'd down,⁹ in tops of all their pride?
 Three dukes of Somerset, threefold renown'd

For hardy and undoubted champions:
 Two Cliffords, as the father and the son,

And two Northumberlands; two braver men
 Ne'er spur'd their couriers at the trumpet's sound:

'—rudis indigestaque moles.' Ovid. Met. l. 7.

⁸ Dryden seems to have had this line in his mind when writing his Edipus:—

'It was thy crooked mind hunch'd out thy back,
 And wauder'd in thy limbs.'

⁹ Select, choose out.
¹⁰ A kindred image occurs in King Henry V.—
 '—mowing like grass

Your fresh-fair virgins, and your flowing infans.

' With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Montague,
That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roar'd.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security.—

Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy :—
Young Ned, for thee, thine uncle, and myself,
Have in our armours watch'd the winter's night ;
' Went all a foot in summer's scalding heat,
That thou might'st repose the crown in peace ;
And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain.

Glo. I'll blast his harvest, if your head were laid ;
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thick, to heave ;
And heave it shall some weight, or break my back :—
Work thou the way,—and thou shalt execute.¹

[Aside.

K. Edw. Clarence, and Gloster, love my lovely queen ;

And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.

Clar. The duty, that I owe unto your majesty,
I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe.

K. Edw. Thanks, noble Clarence ; worthy brother, thanks.²

' Glo. And, that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st,

' Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit :—

To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master ; }

' And cried—all hail ! when as he meant— } Aside.
all harm.

K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
Having my country's peace, and brothers' loves.

Clar. What will your grace have done with Margaret ?

Beignier, her father, to the king of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,
And hither have they sent it for her ransom.

K. Edw. Away with her, and wait her hence to France.

And now what rests, but that we spend the time
With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
Such as befit the pleasures of the court ?
Sound, drums and trumpets !—farewell, sour annoy !
For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. { Exeunt.

² The old quarto play appropriates this line to the queen. The first and second folio, by mistake, have given it to Clarence. In Stevens's copy of the second folio, which had belonged to King Charles the First, his majesty had erased Clara, and written King in its stead. Shakspeare, therefore, in the catalogue of his restorers, may boast a royal name.

THE three parts of King Henry VI. are suspected, by Mr. Theobald, of being supposititious, and are declared by Dr. Warburton, to be certainly not Shakspeare's. Mr. Theobald's suspicion arises from some obsolete words; but the phraseology is like the rest of the author's style; and single words, of which, however, I do not observe more than two, can conclude little.

Dr. Warburton gives no reason; but I suppose him to judge upon deeper principles and more comprehensive views, and to draw his opinion from the general effect and spirit of the composition, which he thinks inferior to the other historical plays.

From mere inferiority nothing can be inferred: in the productions of wit there will be inequality. Sometimes judgment will err, and sometimes the matter itself will defeat the artist. Of every author's works, one will be the best, and one will be the worst. The colours are not equally pleasing, nor the attitudes equally graceful, in all the pictures of Titian or Reynolds.

Dissimilitude of style and heterogeneity of sentiment, may sufficiently shew that a work does not really belong to the reputed author. But in these plays no such marks of spuriousness are found. The diction, the versification, and the figures, are Shakspeare's. These plays, considered, without regard to characters and incidents, merely as narratives in verse, are more happily conceived, and more accurately finished than those of King John, King Richard II. or the tragic scenes of King Henry IV. and V. If we take these plays from Shakspeare, to whom shall they be given? What author of that age had the same easiness of expression and fluency of numbers?*

Of these three plays I think the second is the best. The truth is, that they have not sufficient variety of action, for the incidents are too often of the same kind; yet many of the characters are well discriminated. King Henry, and his Queen, King Edward, the Duke of Gloster, and the Earl of Warwick, are very strongly and distinctly painted.

The old copies of the two latter parts of King Henry VI. and of King Henry V. are so apparently mutilated and imperfect, that there is no reason for supposing them the first draughts of Shakspeare. I am inclined to believe them copies taken by some auditor, who wrote down during the representation what the time would permit; then, perhaps, filled up some of his omissions at a second or third hearing, and, when he had by this method formed something like a play, sent it to the printer.—JOHNSON.

* This note by Dr. Johnson has been preserved not withholding the full answer to his argument which is given in the abstract of Malone's dissertation prefixed to these plays, which discriminates between what is and what is not from the hand of our great poet. 'No fraudulent copyist (says Malone) or short-hand writer would have invented circumstances totally different from those which appear in Shakspeare's new modelled draughts, as exhibited in the folio, or insert whole speeches of which scarcely a trace is to be found in that edition.'

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING RICHARD THE THIRD.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THIS Tragedy, though called in the original edition 'The Life and Death of King Richard the Third,' comprises only fourteen years. The second scene commences with the funeral of King Henry VI, who is said to have been murdered on the 21st of May, 1471. The imprisonment of Clarence, which is represented previously in the first scene, did not, in fact, take place till 1477-8.

Several dramas on the present story had been written before Shakespeare attempted it. There was a Latin play on the subject, by Dr. Legge, which had been acted at St. John's College, Oxford, some time before the year 1568. And a childish imitation of it, by one Henry Lacey, exists in MS. in the British Museum; (MSS. Harl. No. 6928;) it is dated 1596. In the books of the Stationers' Company are the following entries:—Aug. 15, 1596, A Tragical Report of King Richard the Third: a ballad.† June 19, 1594, Thomas Creede made the following entry: 'An enterlude, intituled the Tragedie of Richard the Third, wherein is shewn the Death of Edward the Fourth, with the Smothering of the Two Princes in the Tower, with the lamentable Ende of Shore's Wife, and the Contenton of the Two Houses of Lancaster and Yorke.' A single copy of this ancient Interlude, which Mr. Boswell thinks was written by the author of Locrine, unfortunately wanting the title-page, and a few lines at the beginning, was in the collection of Mr. Rhodes, of Lyon's Inn, who liberally allowed Mr. Boswell to print it in the last Variorum edition of Shakespeare.* It appears evidently to have been read and used by Shakespeare. In this, as in other instances, the bookseller was probably induced to publish the old play, in consequence of the success of the new one in performance, and before it had yet got into print.

Shakespeare's play was first entered at Stationers' Hall, Oct. 20, 1597, by Andrew Wise; and was then published with the following title:—'The Tragedy of King Richard the Third: Containing his treacherous Plots against his Brother Clarence; and the pitiful Murder of his innocent Nephewes; his tyrannical Usurpation: with the whole course of his detested Life, and most deserved Death. As it hath been lately acted by the Right Honourable the Lord Chamberlaine his servants. Printed by Valentine Sims, for William Wioe, 1597.' It was again reprinted, in 4to, in 1598, 1602, 1613 or 1618, 1622, and twice in 1629.

This play was probably written in the year 1593 or 1594. One of Shakespeare's Richards, and most probably this, is alluded to in the Epigrams of John Weever,† published in 1599; but which must have been written in 1595.

AD GULIELMUM SHAKESPEARE.

Honie-tong'd Shakespeare, when I saw thine issue,
I swore Apollo got them, and none other:
Their rose-tainted features clothed in tissue,
Some heaven-born goddesses said to be their mother.
Rose cheek'd Adonis with his amber tresses,
Fair fire-hot Venus charming him to love her,
Chaste Lucretia, virgin-like her dresses,
Proud lust-stung Tarquine, seeking still to prove her,
Romeo, Richard, more whose names I know not,
Their sugred tongues and power attractive beauty,

* A complete copy of Creede's edition of this curious Interlude, (which upon comparison proved to be a different impression from that in Mr. Rhodes's collection,) was sold by auction by Mr. Evans very lately. The title was as follows:—'The true Tragedie of Richard the Third, wherein is shewn the death of Edward the Fourth, with the smothering of the two young Princes in the Tower: With a lamentable end of Shore's wife, an example for all wicked women; and lastly, the conjunction of the two noble Houses Lancaster and Yorke, as it was played by the Queene's Maiesties players. London, printed by Thomas Creede; and are to be sold by William Barley at his shop in Newgate Market, neare Christ Church doore, 1594; 4to.' It is a circumstance sufficiently remarkable that but a single copy of each of the two editions of this piece should be known to exist.

† This very curious little volume, which is supposed to be unique, is in the possession of Mr. Comb, of Hen-

Say they are saints, although that saints they shew not,
For thousand vowes to them subjective duile,
They burn in love thy children Shakespeare let them,
Go wo thy muse more nymphish brood beget them.

21th Epig. 4th Weekes
The character of Richard had been in part developed in the last parts of King Henry VI. where, Schlegel observes, 'his first speeches lead us already to form the most unfavourable prognostications respecting him: he lowers obliquely like a thunder-cloud on the horizon, which gradually approaches nearer and nearer, and first pours out the elements of devastation which it is charged when it hangs over the heads of mortals.' The other characters of the drama are of too secondary a nature to excite a powerful sympathy; but in the back ground the widowed Queen Margaret appears as the fury of the past, who calls forth the curse on the future: very calamity which her enemies draw down on each other, is a cordial to her revengeful heart. Other female voices join, from time to time, in the lamentations and imprecations. But Richard is the soul, or rather the demon, of the whole tragedy, and fulfils the promise which he formerly made to — set the murderous Machiavel to school.

'Besides the uniform aversion with which he inspires us, he occupies us in the greatest variety of way, by his profound skill in dissimulation, his wit, his prudence, his presence of mind, his quick activity, and his valour. He fights at last against Richmond like a desperado, and dies the honourable death of the hero on the field of battle.'—But Shakespeare has satisfied our moral feelings:—'He shows us Richard in his last moments already branded with the stamp of reprobation. We see Richard and Richmond on the night before battle sleeping in their tents; the spirits of those murdered by the tyrant, ascend in succession and pour out their curses against him, and their blessings on his adversary. These apparitions are, properly, merely the dreams of the two generals made visible. It is no doubt contrary to sensible probability, that their senses should only be separated by so small a space; but Shakespeare could reckon on poetical spectators, who were ready to take the breadth of the stage for the distance between the two camps, if, by such a favour, they were to be recompensed by beauties of so sublime a nature as this series of spectres, and the soliloquy of Richard on his awaking.'‡

Boswell, in part of a note, which I have thought it best to omit, observed that the favour with which the tragedy has been received on the stage in modern times 'must in some measure be imputed to Cibber's reformation of it.' The original play was certainly too long for representation, and there were parts which might, with advantage, have been omitted in representation, as 'dramatic encumbrances;' but such a clumsy piece of patchwork as the performance of Cibber, was surely any thing but 'judicious;' and it is only surprising, that the taste which has led to other reformations in the performance of our great dramatic poet's works, has not given to the stage a judicious abridgment of this tragedy in his own words, unencumbered with the superfluous transpositions and gratuitous additions which have been so long inflicted upon us.

ley. The title is as follows:—'Epigrammes in the old est Cut and newest Fashion. A twice seven Hours (in so many Weekes) Studie. No longer (like the Fashion) not unlike to continue. The first seven, John Weever. Six voluies at valuelles. At London: printed by V. S. for Thomas Bushelle; and are to be sold at his shop, at the great north doore of Pauls. 1590. 12s.' There is a portrait of the author, engraved by Cecil, prefixed. According to the date upon this print, Weever was then twenty-three years old; but he tells us, in some introductory stanzas, that when he wrote the Epigrams, which compose the volume, he was not twenty years old; that he was one 'That twenty twelvemonths yet did never know.'

Consequently, these Epigrams must have been written in 1580.

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. A Street. Enter GLOSTER.
Gloster.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun¹ of York;
And all the clouds, that lour'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;²
Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.³
Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed⁴ steeds,
To fight the souls of fearful adversaries,—
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.⁵
But I,—that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,⁶
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionable,
That dogs bark at me, as I halt by them;—
Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time;
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity;
And therefore,—since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair well-spoken days,—
I am determin'd to prove a villain,
And hate the idle pleasures of these days.
Plots have I laid, inductions⁷ dangerous,
By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence, and the king,
In deadly hate the one against the other;
And, if King Edward be as true and just,

As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up;
About a prophecy, which says—that G
Of Edward's heirs the murderer shall be.⁸
Dive, thoughts, down to my soul! here Clarence comes.

Enter CLARENCE, guarded, and BRAKENBURY.
Brother, good day: What means this armed guard,
That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,
Tendering my person's safety, hath appointed
This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glo. Upon what cause?

Clar. Because my name is—George.

Glo. Alack, my lord, that fault is none of yours;
He should, for that, commit your godfathers:—
O, belike, his majesty hath some intent,

That you shall be new christen'd in the Tower.
But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know?

Clar. Yea, Richard, when I know; for, I protest,
As yet I do not: But, as I can learn,
He hearkens after prophecies, and dreams;

And from the cross-row plucks the letter G,
And says—a wizard told him, that by G
His issue disinherited should be;

And, for my name of George begins with G,
It follows in his thought, that I am he:
These, as I learn, and such like toys⁹ as these,
Have mov'd his highness to commit me now.

Glo. Why, this it is, when men are rul'd by women:—

'Tis not the king, that sends you to the Tower;
My Lady Grey, his wife, Clarence, 'tis she,
That tempests¹⁰ him to this extremity.

Was it not she, and that good man of worship,
Antony Woodville, her brother there,
That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower;

From whence this present day he is deliver'd?
We are not safe, Clarence, we are not safe.

Clar. By heaven, I think, there is no man secure,

1 The cognizance of Edward IV. was a sun, in memory of the three suns which are said to have appeared at the battle which he gained over the Lancastrians at Mortimer's Cross.

2 Made glorious by his manly chivalry,
With bruised arms and wreaths of victory.

Rape of Lucrece.

3 Dances.

4 I. e. steeds caparisoned or clothed in the trappings of war. The word is properly barded, from equus bardatus, Latin of the middle ages.

5 'Is the warlike sound of drum and trumpet turned to the soft noise of lyre and lute? The neighing of barbed steeds, whose loudness filled the air with terror, and whose breaths dimmed the sun with smoke, converted so delicate tunes and amorous glances.—Lyly's Alexander and Campaspe, 1594. There is a passage in the Legend of the Death of King Richard III. in the Mirror for Magistrates, evidently imitated from Shakspeare.

6 Feature is proportion, or beauty, in general. By dissembling is not meant hypocritical nature, that pretends one thing and does another; but nature, that puts together things of a dissimilar kind, as a brave soul and a deformed body.

7 Preparations for mischief.

8 This is from Holinshed. Philip de Comines says that the English at that time were never unfurnished with some prophecy or other, by which they accounted for every event.

9 I. e. fancies, freaks of imagination.

10 I. e. frames his temper, moulds it to this extremity. This word is often used in the same figurative sense by Spenser and other contemporaries of Shakspeare.

But the queen's kindred, and night-walking hermits
That trudge betwixt the king and Mistress Shore.
Heard you not, what an humble suppliant
Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.
I'll tell you what,—I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery:
The jealous o'er-worn widow, and herself,¹
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me;
His majesty hath straitly given in charge,
That no man shall have private conference,
Of what degree soever with his brother.

Glo. Even so? an please your worship, Braken-
bury,

You may partake of any thing we say:

We speak no treason, man;—We say, the king
Is wise and virtuous; and his noble queen
Well struck in years;² fair, and not jealous:
We say, that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
A cherry lip,
A bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue;
And that the queen's kindred are made gentlefolks:
How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought to do.

Glo. Naught to do with mistress Shore? I tell thee, fellow,

He that doth naught with her, excepting one,
Were best to do it secretly, alone.

Brak. What one, my lord?

Glo. Her husband, knave:—Would'st thou betray me?

Brak. I beseech your grace to pardon me; and,
withal,

Forbear your conference with the noble duke.

Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey.³

Glo. We are the queen's objects,⁴ and must obey.
Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;
And whatsoever you will employ me in,—
Were it, to call king Edward's widow—sister,—
I will perform it to enfranchise you.
Mean time, this deep disgrace in brotherhood,
Touches me deeper than you can imagine.

Clar. I know it pleaseth neither of us well.

Glo. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you:⁵
Mean time, have patience.

Clar. I must perforce; farewell.
[Exeunt CLARENCE, BRAKENBURY, and GUARD.]

Glo. Go, tread the path that thou shalt ne'er return,

Simple, plain Clarence!—I do love thee so,
That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven,
If heaven will take the present at our hands.
But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings?

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord!

Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain!
Well are you welcome to this open air.

How hath your lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must:

But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks,
That were the cause of my imprisonment.

1 The Queen and Shore.

2 This odd expression was preceded by others equally singular, expressing what we now call 'an advanced age.'

3 This and the three preceding speeches were probably all designed for prose. It is at any rate impossible that this line could have been intended for metre.

4 I.e. the lowest of her subjects. This substantive is found in Psalm xxxv. 15.—'Yea the very objects came together against me unawares, making mouths at me, and ceased not.'

5 He means, 'or else be imprisoned in your stead.'

Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too;

For they, that were your enemies, are his,
And have prevail'd as much on him, as you.

Hast. More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Glo. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so bad abroad as this at home;—
The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy,
And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glo. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is bad indeed.

O, he hath kept an evil diet long,
And over-much consum'd his royal person;
'Tis very grievous to be thought upon.

What is he in his bed?

Hast.

He is.

Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you.

[Exit HASTINGS.]

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die
Till George be pack'd with posthorse up to heaven.
I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments;
And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live:

Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to bustle in!

For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter:⁶
What though I kill'd her husband, and her father?

The readiest way to make the wench amends,
Is—to become her husband, and her father:

The which will I; not all so much for love,
As for another secret close intent,

By marrying her, which I must reach unto.

But yet I run before my horse to market:
Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives, and reigns;

When they are gone, then must I count my gains.
[Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. Another Street. Enter the Corpses of KING HENRY THE SIXTH, borne in an open Coffin, Gentlemen bearing Halberds, to guard it; and LADY ANNE as mourner.

Anna. Set down, set down your honourable load,—

If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,—

Whilst I a while obsequiously⁷ lament

The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster—

Poor keycold⁸ figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!

Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost,

To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,

Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,

Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds!

Lo, in these windows, that let forth thy life,

I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes:—

O, cursed be the hand that made these holes!

Cursed the heart, that had the heart to do it!

Cursed the blood, that let this blood from hence!

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,

That makes us wretched by the death of thee,

Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads,

Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives!

If ever he have child, abortive be it,

Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,

Whose ugly and unnatural aspect

To lie signified anciently to reside, or remain in a place, as appears by many instances in these volumes.

6 A mew was a place in which falcons were kept,
and being confined therein, while moulting, was metaphorically used for any close place or places of confinement. The verb to mew was formed from the substantive.

7 Lady Anne, the betrothed widow of Edward prince of Wales. See King Henry VI. Part III.

8 Funereal.

9 A key, on account of the coldness of the metal of which it is composed, was often employed to stop any slight bleeding. The epithet is common to many old writers.

May fright the hopeful mother at the view ;
And that be heir to his unhappiness !
If ever he have wife, let her be made
More miserable by the death of him,
Than I am made by my young lord, and thee !—
Come, now, toward Chertsey with your holy load,
Taken from Paul's to be interred there ;
And, still as you are weary of the weight,
Rest you, whilst I lament King Henry's corpse.
[The Bearer take up the Corpses, and advance.]

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Stay you, that bear the corpse, and set it down.

Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,

To stop devoted charitable deeds ?

Glo. Villains, set down the corpse ; or, by Saint Paul,

I'll make a corpse of him that disobeys.¹

I Gent. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

Glo. Unmanner'd dog ! stand thou when I command :

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast,
Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,
And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

[The Bearer set down the Coffin.]

Anne. What, do you tremble ? are you all afraid ?
Alas, I blame you not ; for you are mortal,
And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.—
Avaunt, thou dreadful minister of hell !

Thou hadst but power over his mortal body,
His soul thou canst not have ; therefore, be gone.

Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curst.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not :

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell,
Fill'd it with cursing cries, and deep exclams.

If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,
Behold this pattern² of thy butcheries ;—

O, gentlemen, see, see ! dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh !³—

Blush, bluish, thou lump of foul deformity ;
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood

From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells ;
Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural,

Provokes this deluge most unnatural.——

O God, which this blood mad'st, revenge his death !
O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death !

Either, heaven, with lightning strike the murderer dead,

Or, earth, gape open wide, and eat him quick ;
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,

Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered !

Glo. Lady, you know no rules of charity,

Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.

Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor man ;

No beast so fierce, but knows some touch of pity.

Glo. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.

Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the truth !

Glo. More wonderful, when angels are so angry.—
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,

Of these supposed evils, to give me leave,
By circumstance, but to acquit myself.

Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus'd⁴ infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,

By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.

Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me have

Some patient leisure to excuse myself.

Anne. Foulter than heart can think thee, thou canst make

No excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Glo. By such despite, I should accuse myself.

Anne. And, by despairing, shalt thou stand excus'd ;

For doing worthy vengeance on thyself,
That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.

Glo. Say, that I slew them not ?

Anne. Why then, they are not dead :
But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.

Glo. I did not kill your husband.

Anne. Why, then he is alive.

Glo. Nay, he is dead ; and slain by Edward's hand.

Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest ; Queen Margaret saw

Thy murderous falchion smoking in his blood ;
The which thou once didst bend against her breast,
But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glo. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue,
That laid thy guilt⁵ upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind,
That never dreamt on aught but butcheries :

Didst thou not kill this king ?

Glo. I grant ye.

Anne. Dost grant me, hedgehog ? then, God grant me too,

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed !

O, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

Glo. The fitter for the King of heaven that hath him.

Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never come.

Glo. Let him thank me, that help to send him thither ;

For he was fitter for that place, than earth.

Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell.

Glo. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me name it.

Anne. Some dungeon.

Glo. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou liest !

Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.

Glo. I know so.—But, gentle Lady Anne,—
To leave this keen encounter of our wits,

And fall somewhat into a slower method ;—
Is not the causer of the timeless deaths

Of these Plantagenets, Henry, and Edward,
As blameful as the executioner ?

Anne. Thou wast the cause, and most accurs'd effect.

Glo. Your beauty was the cause of that effect ;
Your beauty, which did haunt me in my sleep ;

To undertake the death of all the world,

So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.

Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.

Glo. These eyes could not endure that beauty's wreck,

You should not blemish it, if I stood by ;

As all the world is cheered by the sun,

So I by that ; it is my day, my life.

Anne. Black night o'ershade thy day, and death thy life !

Glo. Curse not thyself, fair creature ; thou art both.

Anne. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.

Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,

To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.

Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,

To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my husband.

Glo. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,
Did it to help thee to a better husband.

Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.

1 I. e. disposition to mischief.

2 'I'll make a ghost of him that lets me.'—Hamlet.

3 Example.

4 This is from Hollinshed. It is a tradition very generally received, that the murdered body bleeds on the couch of the murderer. This was so much believed by Sir Kenelm Digby, that he has endeavoured to explain the reason. The opinion seems to be derived from the ancient Swedes, or northern nations, from whom we descended ; for they practised this method of trial in doubtful cases.—See Pitt's Atlas, Sweden, p. 30.

5 Diffus'd anciently signified dark, obscure, strange, uncouth, or confused.

6 I. e. the crime of my brothers. He has just charged the murder of Lady Anne's husband on Edward

Glo. He lives, that loves you better than he could.

Anne. Name him.

Glo. Plantagenet.

Anne. Why, that was he.

Glo. The self-same name, but one of better nature.

Anne. Where is he?

Glo. Here : [She spits at him.]

Anne. Why dost thou spit at me?

Glo. 'Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake!

Anne. Never came poison from so sweet a place.

Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.

Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.

Glo. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.

Anne. 'Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead!"

Glo. I would they were, that I might die at once; For now they kill me with a living death."

These eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,

Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops:

These eyes, which never shed remorseful¹ tear,—

No,—when my father York and Edward wept,

To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made,

When black-fac'd Clifford shook his sword at him:

Not when thy warlike father, like a child,

Told the sad story of my father's death;

And twenty times made pause, to sob, and weep,

That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,

Like trees bedash'd with rain :—in that sad time,

My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;⁴

And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,

Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping.

I never sued to friend, nor enemy;

My tongue could never learn sweet soothing word;

But now thy beauty is propos'd my foe,

My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speak. [She looks scornfully at him.]

Teach not thy lip such scorn; for it was made

For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.

If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,

Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;

Which if thou please to hide in this true breast,

And let the soul forth that adoresth thee,

I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,

And humbly beg the death upon my knee.

[He lays his breast open; she offers at it with his sword.]

Nay, do not pause; for I did kill King Henry;—

But 'twas thy beauty that provoked me.⁵

Nay, now despatch; 'twas I that stabb'd young

Edward;—

[She again offers at his breast.]

But 'twas thy heavenly face that set me on.

[She lets fall the sword.]

Take up the sword again, or take up me.

Anne. Arise, dissembler: though I wish thy death,

I will not be thy executioner.

Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.

Anne. I have already.

Glo. That was in thy rage:

Speak it again, and, even with the word,

This hand, which, for thy love, did kill thy love,

Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love;

To both their deaths shalt thou be accessory.

Anne. I would, I knew thy heart.

Glo. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.

Anne. I fear me, both are false.

Glo. Then never man was true.

Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.

Glo. Say then, my peace is made.

Anne. That shall you know hereafter.

Glo. But shall I live in hope?

Anne. All men, I hope, live so.

Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.

Anne. To take, is not to give.

[She puts on the ring.]

Glo. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy finger,

Even so thy breast encloseth my poor heart;

Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.

And if thy poor devoted servant may

But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,

Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.

Anne. What is it?

Glo. That it may please you leave these sad designs

To him that hath more cause to be a mourner,

And presently repair to Crosby-place.⁶

Where—after I have solemnly interr'd,

At Chertsey monast'ry this noble king,

And wet his grave with my repentant tears,—

I will with all expedient⁷ duty see you:

For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you,

Grant me this boon.

Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys me

too,

To see you are become so penitent.—

Tressel, and Berkley, go along with me.

Glo. Bid me farewell.

Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve.

But, since you teach me how to flatter you,

Imagine I have said farewell already.⁸

[Exeunt LADY ANNE, TRESSSEL, and

BERKLEY.]

Glo. Sirs, take up the corpse.

Genl. Towards Chertsey, noble lord?

Glo. No, to White Friars; there attend my coming

[Exeunt the rest, with the Corpse.]

Was ever woman in this humour woo'd?

Was ever woman in this humour wen?

I'll have her,—but I will not keep her long.

What! I, that kill'd her husband, and his father,

To take her in her heart's extremest hate;

With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,

The bleeding witness of her hatred by;

With God, her conscience, and these bars against

me,

And I no friends to back my suit withal,

But the plain devil, and dissembling looks,

And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing!

Ha!

Hath she forgot already that brave prince,

Edward, her lord, whom I some three months since,

Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury?⁹

A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,—

Fram'd in the prodigality of nature,

Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,—

The spacious world cannot again afford:

1 See notes on King Henry V. Act v. Sc. 2; and King

Henry VI. Part II. Act III. Sc. 2.

2 We have the same expression in Venus and Adonis applied to love:—

'For I have heard it is a life in death

That laughs and weeps, and all but with a breath.'

Pope adopts it:—

'— a living death I bear,

Says Dapperwit, and sunk beside his chair.'

3 Pitiful.

4 Here is an apparent reference to King Henry VI.

Part III. Act. II. Sc. 1.

5 Shakespeare countenances the observation that no woman can ever be offended with the mention of her beauty.

6 Crosby Place is now Crosby Square, in Bishopsgate

Street. This magnificent house was built in 1466, by Sir John Crosby, grocer and woolman. He died in 1475.

The ancient hall of this fabric is still remaining, though divided by an additional floor, and encumbered with intern galleries, having been converted into a place of worship for Antinomians, &c. The upper part of it was lately the warehouse of an eminent packer. Sir J.

Crosby's tomb is in the neighbouring church of St. Elen the Great.

7 I. e. expeditious.

8 Cibber, who altered King Richard III. for the stage, was so thoroughly convinced of the improbability of this scene, that he thought it necessary to make Tressel

say:—

'When future chronicles shall speak of this,

They will be thought romance, not history.'

The embassy under Lord Macartney to China witnessed the representation of a play in a theatre at Tien-tsing with a similar incongruous plot.

9 This fixes the exact time of the scene to August,

1471. King Edward, however, is introduced in the second act dying. That king died in April, 1483; consequently there is an interval between this and the next act of almost twelve years. Clarence, who is represented in the preceding scene as committed to the Tower before the burial of King Henry VI. was in fact not confined nor put to death till March, 1477-8, seven years afterwards.

And will she yet abase her eyes on me,
That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed?
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
On me, that hark, and am misshapen thus?
My dukedom to a beggary denier!
I do mistake my person all this while:
Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man.¹
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass;
And entertain a score or two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body:
Since I am crept in favour with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost.
But, first, I'll turn you fellow in² his grave;
And then return lamenting to my love.—
Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass.
That I may see my shadow as I pass. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in the Palace.
Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, LORD RIVERS, and LORD GREY.

Riv. Have patience, madam; there's no doubt his majesty

Will soon recover his accustomed health.

Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse:
Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,
And cheer his grace with quick and merry words.

Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide of me?

Grey. No other harm, but loss of such a lord.

Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly son,

To be your comforter when he is gone.

Q. Eliz. Ah, he is young; and his minority is put unto the trust of Richard Gloster,
A man that loves not me, nor none of you.

Riv. Is it concluded, he shall be protector?

Q. Eliz. It is determin'd, not concluded yet:⁴
But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and STANLEY.⁵

Grey. Here come the lords of Buckingham and Stanley.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace!

Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!

Q. Eliz. The Countess Richmond,⁶ good my lord of Stanley,

To your good prayer will scarcely say—amen.
Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you, good lord, assur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe
The envious slanders of her false accusers;
Or, if she be accus'd on true report,
Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley?

Stan. But now, the duke of Buckingham, and I,
Are come from visiting his majesty.

Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords?

Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully.

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer with him?

Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement

Between the duke of Gloster and your brothers,
And between them and my lord chamberlain;
And sent to warn⁷ them to his royal presence.

Q. Eliz. 'Would all were well!—But that will never be;—

I fear, our happiness is at the height.

Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and DORSET.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it:—

Who are they, that complain unto the king,
That I, forsooth, am stern, and love them not?
By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly,
That fill his ears with such dissention rumours.
Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemy.

Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth must be abus'd
By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks?

Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks your grace?

Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace.
When have I injured thee? when done thee wrong?
Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction?

A plague upon you all! His royal grace,—
Whom God preserve better than you would wish!—
Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing while,

But you must trouble him with lewd⁸ complaints.

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the matter:

The king, of his own royal disposition,
And not provok'd by any suitor else;
Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred,
That in your outward action shows itself,
Against my children, brothers, and myself,
Makes him to send: that thereby he may gather
The ground of your ill will, and so remove it.

Glo. I cannot tell;⁹—The world is grown so bad,
That wrens may prey where eagles dare not perch:
Since every Jack¹⁰ became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloster;

You envy my advancement, and my friends';
God grant, we never may have need of you!

Glo. Meantime, God grants that we have need of you:

Our brother is imprison'd by your means,
Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility
Held in contempt; while great promotions
Are daily given, to ennoble those
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble.

Q. Eliz. By Him, that rais'd me to this careful height,

From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his majesty

Against the duke of Clarence, but have been
An earnest advocate to plead for him.

My lord, you do me shameful injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Glo. You may deny that you were not the cause
Of my Lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Riv. She may, my lord, for—

Glo. She may, Lord Rivers?—why, who knows not so?

1 A small coin, the twelfth part of a French sous.

2 Marvellous is here used adverbially. A proper man, in old language, was a well-proportioned one.

3 Is for me.

4 Determin'd signifies the final conclusion of the will: concluded, which cannot be altered by reason of some act, consequent on the final judgment.

5 By inadvertence, in the old copies Derby is put for Stanley. The person meant was Thomas Lord Stanley, lord steward of King Edward the Fourth's household. But he was not created earl of Derby, till after the accession of King Henry VII. In the fourth and fifth acts of this play, he is every where called Lord Stanley.

6 Margaret, daughter to John Beaufort, first duke of Somerset. After the death of her first husband, Edmund Tudor, earl of Richmond, half-brother to King Henry VI. by whom she had only one son, afterwards King Henry VII., she married Sir Henry Stafford, uncle to Humphry, duke of Buckingham.

7 i. e. summon.

8 Leud here signifies idle, ungracious; and not rude, ignorant, as Steevens asserts.

9 i. e. I cannot tell what to say or think of it.

10 This proverbial expression at once demonstrates the origin of the term Jack, so often used by Shakespeare. It means one of the very lowest class of people, among whom this name is most common and familiar.

She may do more, sir, than denying that :
She may help you to many fair preferments ;
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honours on your high desert.
What may she not ? She may,—ay, marry, may she,—

Rio. What, marry, may she ?

Glo. What, marry, may she ? marry with a king,
A bachelor, a handsome strpling too ;
I wis,¹ your grandam had a worse match.

Q. Eliz. My lord of Gloster, I have too long borne
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs :
By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty,
Of those gross taunts I often have endur'd.
I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen, with this condition—
To be so baited, scorn'd, and storm'd at :
Small joy have I in being England's queen.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, behind.

Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech thee !

Thy honour, state, and seat, is due to me.

Glo. What ? threat you me with telling of the king ?

Tell him, and spare not : look, what I have said
I will avouch, in presence of the king :
I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.
Tis time to speak, my pains² are quite forgot.

Q. Mar. Out, devil ! I remember them too well :
Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower,
And Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury.

Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,

I was a packhorse in his great affairs ;
A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends ;
To royalize his blood, I spilt mine own.

Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his, or thine.

Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband Grey,

Were factious for the house of Lancaster ;—

And, Rivers, so were you :—Was not your husband in Margaret's battle at Saint Albans slain ?³

Let me put in your minds, if you forget,
What you have been ere now, and what you are ;
Withal, what I have been, and what I am.

Q. Mar. A murderous villain, and so still thou art.

Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father Warwick,

Ay, and forswore himself,—Which Jesu pardon !

Q. Mar. Which God revenge !

Glo. To fight on Edward's party, for the crown :
And, for his meed,⁴ poor lord, he is mew'd up :
I would to God, my heart were flint like Edward's,
Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine ;
I am too childish-foolish for this world.

Q. Mar. Hie thee to hell for shame, and leave this world,

Thou caccodemon ! there thy kingdom is.

Rio. My lord of Gloster, in those busy days,
Which here you urge, to prove us enemies,
We follow'd then our lord, our lawful king ;
So should we you, if you should be our king.

1 I. e. I think.

2 Labours.

3 See note on King Henry VI. Part III. Act III. Sc. 2. Margaret's battle is Margaret's army.

4 Reward.

5 To pill is to pillage. It is often used with to pill or strip. Killdare did use to pill and poll his friends, tenants, and reyners.—Holinshed.

6 Gentle is here used ironically.

7 'What dost thou in my sight.' This phrase has been already explained in the notes to Love's Labour's Lost, Act IV. Sc. 3. In As You Like It, Act I. Sc. 1, Shakespeare again plays upon the word make, as in this instance.—

'Now, sir, what make you here ?

Nothing : I am not taught to make any thing.'

8 Margaret fled into France after the battle of Hexham, in 1464, and Edward issued a proclamation pro-

Glo. If I should be ?—I had rather be a pedlar.
Far be it from my heart, the thought thereof !

Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this country's king.

As little joy you may suppose in me,
That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.

Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof,
For I am she, and altogether joyless.
I can no longer hold me patient.— [Advancing.]

Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill'd⁵ from me :
Which of you trembles not, that looks on me ?

If not, that, I being queen, you bew like subjects ;
Yet that, by you depos'd, you quake like rebels !—
Ah, gentle⁶ villain, do not turn away !

Glo. Foul wrinkled witch, what mak'st⁷ thou in my sight ?

Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd ;
That will I make, before I let thee go.

Glo. Wert thou not banished on pain of death ?⁸

Q. Mar. I was ; but I do find more pain in banishment,

Than death can yield me here by my abode.

A husband, and a son, thou ow'st to me,—

And thou a kingdom ;—all of you, allegiance :

This sorrow that I have, by right is yours ;

And all the pleasures you usurp are mine.

Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,
When thou didst crown his warlike brows with paper,

And with thy acorns drew'st rivers from his eyes ;

And then, to dry them, gav'st the duke a clout,

Steep'd in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland ;—

His curses, then from bitterness of soul

Denounc'd against thee, are all fall'n upon thee ;

And God, not we, hath plagu'd⁹ thy bloody deed.

Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O, 'twas the foulest deed to slay that babe,

And the most merciless that e'er was heard of.

Rio. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.

Dors. No man but prophesied revenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it.¹⁰

Q. Mar. What ! were you snarling all, before I came,

Ready to catch each other by the throat,

And turn you all your hatred now on me !

Did York's dread curse prevail so much with heaven,

That Henry's death, my lovely Edward's death,

Their kingdom's loss, my woful banishment,

Could all but¹¹ answer for that peevish brat ?

Can curses pierce the clouds, and enter heaven.—

Why, then give way, dull clouds, to my quick

curses !—

Though not by war, by surfeit die your king,¹²

As ours by murder, to make him a king !

Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales,

For Edward, my son, that was prince of Wales

Die in his youth, by like untimely violence !

Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,

Outlive thy glory, like my wretched self !

Long may'st thou live, to wait thy children's loss ;

And see another, as I see thee now.

Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine !

Long die thy happy days before thy death ;

hibling any of his subjects from aiding her return, or harbouring her, should she attempt to revisit England.

She remained abroad till April, 1471, when she landed at Weymouth. After the battle of Tewksbury, in May,

1471, she was confined in the Tower, where she continued a prisoner till 1475, when she was ransomed by her father Regnier, and removed to France, where she died in 1482. So that her introduction in the present scene is a mere poetical fiction.

9 To plague in ancient language is to punish. Hence the scriptural term of the plagues of Egypt.

10 See King Henry VI. Part III. Act I, Sc. 2 :—

'What, weeping-ripe, my Lord Northumberland.'

11 But is here used in its exceptive sense : could all this only, or nothing but (i. e. be out or except) this answer for the death of that brat.

12 Alluding to his luxurious life.

And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief,
Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen!—
Rivers,—and Dorset,—you were standers by,—
And so wast thou, Lord Hastings,—when my son
Was stabb'd with bloody daggers: God, I pray him,
That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off!

Glo. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wither'd bag.

Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me.

If heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
O, let them keep it, till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace!
The worm of conscience still be-gnaw thy soul!
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv'st,
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be while some tormenting dream
Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils!
Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog!
Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature, and the son of hell!
Thou slander of thy mother's heavy womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!
Thou rag of honour! thou detested——

Glo. Margaret.

Q. Mar. Richard!

Glo. Ha?

Q. Mar. I call thee not.

Glo. I cry thee mercy then; for I did think,
That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names.

Q. Mar. Why, so I did: but look'd for no reply.
O, let me make the period to my curse.

Glo. 'Tis done by me; and ends in—Margaret.

Q. Eliz. Thus have you breath'd your curse against yourself.

Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune!

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider,^a
Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about?
Fool, fool! thou whet'st a knife to kill thyself.
The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me
To help thee curse this pois'nous bunch-back'd toad.

Hast. False-boding woman, end thy frantic curse;
Lest, to thy harm, thou move our patience.

Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you! you have all mov'd mine.

Riv. Were you well serv'd, you would be taught your duty.

Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do me duty.

Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects:
O, serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty.

Dors. Dispute not with her, she is lunatic.

Q. Mar. Peace, master marquis, you are malapert:

Your fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current;^b

1 'Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog.' It was an old prejudice which is not yet quite extinct, that those who are defective or deformed, are marked by nature as prone to mischief. She calls him hog, in allusion to his cognizance, which was a boar. The expression (says Warburton) is fine; remembering her youngest son, she alludes to the ravage which hogs make with the finest flowers in gardens; and intimating that Elizabeth was to expect no other treatment for her sons. The rhyme for which Collingborne was executed, as given by Heywood in his Mutual History of King Edward IV. will illustrate this:—

'The cat, the rat, and Lovell our dog,
Doe rule all England under a hog.
The crooke backt boore the way hath found
To root our roes from our ground,
Both flower and bud will he confound;
Till king of beasts the swine be crown'd:
And then the dog, the cat, and rat
Shall in his trough feed and be fat.'

The persons almed at in this rhyme, were the king, Oatesby, Ratcliff, and Lovell.

O, that your young nobility could judge,
What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable!
They that stand high, have many blasts to shake
them:

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Glo. Good counsel, marry;—learn it, learn it, marquis.

Dors. It touches you, my lord, as much as me.

Glo. Ay, and much more: But I was born so high,
Our airy^c buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade!—alas!
alas!—

Witness my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up.

Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest:—

O God, that seest it, do not suffer it;

As it was won with blood, lost be it so!

Buck. Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.

Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me;

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,

And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd.

My charity is outrage, life my shame,—

And in my shame still live my sorrow's rage!

Buck. Have done, have done.

Q. Mar. O princely Buckingham, I kiss thy hand,

In sign of league and amity with thee:

Now fair befall thee, and thy noble house!

Thy garments are not spotted with our blood,

Nor thou within the compass of my curse.

Buck. Nor no one here; for curses never pass

The lips of those that breathe them in the air.

Q. Mar. I'll not believe but they ascend the sky,
And there awake God's gentle-sleeping peace.

O Buckingham, beware of yonder dog;

Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,

His venom tooth will rankle to the death:

Have not to do with him, beware of him;

Sin, death, and hell have set their marks on him;

And all their ministers attend on him.

Glo. What doth she say, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord.

Q. Mar. What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?

And soothe the devil that I warn thee from?

O, but remember this another day,

When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow;

And say, poor Margaret was a prophessee.—

Live each of you the subjects to his hate,

And he to yours, and all of you to God's? [Exit.]

Hast. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses.

Riv. And so doth mine; I muse, why she's at liberty.

Glo. I cannot blame her, by God's holy mother;

She hath had too much wrong, and I repent

My part thereof, that I have done to her.

Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.

Glo. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrong.

I was too hot to do somebody good,

That is too cold in thinking of it now.

Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid:

2 Alluding to Gloucester's form and venom. A bottled spider is a large, bloated, glossy spider: supposed to contain venom proportionate to its size.

3 He was created marquis of Dorset in 1476. The scene is laid in 1477-8.

4 Jery for brood. This word properly signified a brood of eagles, or hawks; though in later times often used for the nest of those birds of prey. Its etymology is from cyren, eggs; and we accordingly sometimes find it spelled eyry. The commentators explained it nest in this passage, according to which explanation the meaning a few lines lower would be, 'your nest buildeth in our nest's nest!'

5 It is evident, from the conduct of Shakespeare, that the house of Tudor retained all their Lancastrian prejudices, even in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. He seems to deduce the woes of the house of York from the curses which Queen Margaret had ranted against them, and he could not give that weight to her curses, without supposing a right in her to utter them.—Walpole.

He is frank'd¹ up to fattening for his pains;—
God pardon them that are the cause thereof!

Riv. A virtuous and a christianlike conclusion,
To pray for them that have done scath² to us.

Glo. So do I ever, being well advis'd;—
For had I curs'd now, I had curs'd myself. [Aside.]

Enter CATESBY.

Cates. Madam, his majesty both call for you,—
And for your grace,—and you, my noble lords.

Q. Eliz. Catesby, I come:—Lords, will you go with me?

Riv. Madam, we will attend your grace.

[Exeunt all but GLOSTER.]

Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl.

The secret mischiefs that I set abroad,

I lay unto the grievous charge of others.

Clarence,—whom I, indeed, have laid in darkness,

I do bewEEP to many simple gulls;

Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;

And tell them—'tis the queen and her allies,

That stir the king against the duke my brother.

Now they believe it; and withal whet me

To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey:

But then I sigh, and with a piece of scripture,

Tell them—that God bids us do good for evil:

And thus I clothe my naked villany

With odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ:

And seem a saint, when most I play the devil.

Enter Two Murderers.

But soft, here come my executioners.

How now, my hardy, stout resolved mates?

Are you now going to despatch this thing?

1 Murd. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant,

That we may be admitted where he is.

Glo. Well thought upon, I have it here about me:

[Gives the Warrant.]

When you have done, repair to Crosby-place.

But, sirs, be sudden in the execution,

Withal obdurate, do not hear him plead;

For Clarence is well spoken, and, perhaps,

May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him.

1 Murd. Tut, tut, my lord, we will not stand to prate,

Talkers are no great doers; be assur'd,

We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Glo. Your eyes drop mill-stones, when fools' eyes drop tears:

I like you, lads:—about your business straight;

Go, go, despatch.

1 Murd. We will, my noble lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Tower.

Enter CLARENCE and BRAKENBURY.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

Clar. O, I have pass'd a miserable night,

So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,

That, as I am a christian faithful man,

I would not spend another such a night,

Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days;

So full of dismal terror was the time.

Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell me.

Clar. Methought, that I had broken from the Tower,

1 A frank is a pen or coop in which hogs and other animals were confined while fattening. To be franked up was to be closely confined. To franch, or frank, was to stuff, to cram, to fatten.

2 Harm, mischief.

3 This appears to have been a proverbial saying. It occurs again in the tragedy of Cæsar and Pompey, 1687:—

'Men's eyes must millstones drop, when fools shed tears.'

4 Clarence was desirous to assist his sister Margaret against the French king, who invaded her jointure lands after the death of her husband, Charles duke of Burgundy, who was killed at Nancy, in January, 1476-7. Isabel, the wife of Clarence, being then dead (poisoned by the duke of Gloucester, as it has been conjectured,) he wished to have married Mary, the daughter and heir

And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;⁴

And, in my company, my brother Gloster:

Who from my cabin tempted me to walk

Upon the hatches; thence we look'd toward England,

And cited up a thousand heavy times,

During the wars of York and Lancaster

That had befall'n us. As we pac'd along

Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,

Methought, that Gloster stumbled; and, in falling,

Struck me, that thought to stay him, overboard,

Into the tumbling billows of the main.

O lord! methought, what pain it was to drown

What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!

What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!

Methought, I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;

A thousand men, that fishes gnaw'd upon;

Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,

Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,

All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea,

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes

Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept

(As 'twere in scorn of eyes) reflecting gems,

That wou'd the slimy bottom of the deep,

And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Brak. Had you such leisure in the time of death

To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?

Clar. Methought, I had; and often did I strive

To yield the ghost: but still the envious flood

Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth

To seek the empty, vast, and wand'ring air;

But smother'd it within my panting bulk;

Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not with this sore agony?

Clar. O, no, my dream was lengthen'd after life;

O, then began the tempest to my soul!

I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,

With that grim ferryman which poets write of,

Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The first that there did greet my stranger soul,

Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,

Who cry'd aloud,—What scourge for perjury

Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?

And so he vanish'd: Then came wand'ring by

A shadow like an angel, with bright hair

Dabbled in blood,⁵ and he shriek'd out aloud,—

Clarence is come,—false, fleeing,⁶ perjur'd Clarence,

That stab'd me in the field by Tewkesbury;—

Seize on him, furies, take him to your torments!

With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends

Environ'd me, and howl'd in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that, with the very noise,

I trembling wak'd, and, for a season after,

Could not believe but that I was in hell;

Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brak. No, marvel, lord, though it affrighted you!

I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. O, Brakenbury, I have done these things—

That now give evidence against my soul,—

For Edward's sake; and, see, how he requites

me!

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,

But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,

Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁷ and my poor children:—

of the duke of Burgundy; but the match was opposed by Edward, who hoped to have obtained her for his brother-in-law, Lord Rivers, and this circumstance has been suggested as the principal cause of the breach between Edward and Clarence. Mary of Burgundy however chose a husband for herself, having married, in 1477, Maximilian, son of the Emperor Frederic.

5 See a note on Milton's Lycidas, v. 187. Milton's Minor Poems, by T. Warton, ed. 1791.

6 Unvalued for invaluable, not to be valued, inestimable.

7 Fast is waste, desolate. Vastum per inane.

8 Bulk, i. e. breast. See note on Hamlet, Act II. Sc. 1.

9 Lee has transplanted this image into his Mithridates, Act iv. Sc. 1.

10 Fleeting or fitting, in old language, was used for uncertain, inconstant, fluctuating.

11 The wife of Clarence died before he was apprehended and confined in the Tower.

That you depart, and lay no hands on me;
The deed you undertake is damnable.

1 Murd. What we will do, we do upon command.

2 Murd. And he, that hath commanded, is our king.

Clar. Erroneous vassal! the great King of kings
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder; Wilt thou then
Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?
Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

3 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee,

For false forswearing, and for murder too:
Thou didst receive the sacrament, to fight
In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.

1 Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God, Didst break that vow; and, with thy treacherous blade,

Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son.

2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.

1 Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law to us,

When thou hast broke it in such dear degree?

Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?

For Edward, for my brother, for his sake:

He sends you not to murder me for this;

For in that sin he is as deep as I.

If God will be avenged for the deed,

O, know you, that he doth it publicly;

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;

He needs no indirect nor lawless course,

To cut off those that have offended him.

1 Murd. Who made thee then a bloody minister,

When gallant springing, brave Plantagenet,

That princely novice,¹ was struck dead by thee?

Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage.

1 Murd. Thy brother's love, our duty, and thy fault,

Provoke us hither now to slaughter thee?

Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;

I am his brother, and I love him well.

If you are hired for meed,² go back again,

And I will send you to my brother Gloucester;

Who shall reward you better for my life,

Than Edward will for tidings of my death.

2 Murd. You are deceiv'd, your brother Gloucester hates you.³

Clar. O, no; he loves me, and he holds me dear:
Go you to him from me.

Both Murd. Aye, so we will.

Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York

Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm,

And charg'd us from his soul to love each other,

He little thought of this divided friendship:

Bid Gloucester think on this, and he will weep.

1 Murd. Ay, millstones; as he lesson'd us to weep.

Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.

1 Murd. Right, as snow in harvest.—Come, you deceive yourself;

'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.

Clar. It cannot be; for he bewept my fortune,

And hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with sobs,

That he would labour my delivery.

1 Murd. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thralldom to the joys of heaven.

2 Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die,
my lord.

1 See note on Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1.

2 Blooming Plantagenet, a prince in the spring of life.

3 Youth, one yet new to the world.

4 Reward.

5 Walpole rightly suggested, from the Chronicle of Croyland, that the true cause of Gloucester's hatred to Clarence was, that Clarence was unwilling to share with his brother, that moiety of the estate of the great earl of Warwick, to which Gloucester became entitled on his marriage with the younger sister of the duchess of Clarence, Lady Anne Neville, who had been betrothed to Edward prince of Wales. This is fully confirmed by a letter

Clar. Hast thou that holy feeling in thy soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And art thou yet to thy own soul so blind,
That thou wilt war with God, by murdering me?—
Ah, sirs, consider, he, that set you on
To do this deed, will hate you for the deed.

2 Murd. What shall we do?

Clar. Relent, and save your souls.

1 Murd. Relent! 'tis cowardly, and womanish.

Clar. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, devilish.

Which of you, if you were a prince's son,
Being pent from liberty, as I am now,
If two such murderers as yourselves came to you,
Would not entreat for life?—

My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks;

O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,

Come thou on my side, and entreat for me,

As you would beg, were you in my distress.

A begging prince what beggar pities not?

2 Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

1 Murd. Take that, and that; if all this will not do, [Stabs him.

I'll drown you in the malmsey-butt within.
[Exit, with the body.

2 Murd. A bloody deed, and desperately despatch'd!

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands

Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Re-enter first Murderer.

1 Murd. How now? what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not?

By heaven, the duke shall know how slack you have been.

2 Murd. I would he knew, that I had sav'd his brother!

Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say;

For I repent me that the duke is slain. [Exit.

1 Murd. So do not I; go, coward, as thou art—

Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole,

Till that the duke give order for his burial:

And when I have my meed, I will away;

For this will out, and then I must not stay. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace. Enter
KING EDWARD (led in sick), QUEEN ELIZA-BETH, DORSET, RIVERS, HASTINGS, BUCKING-HAM, GREY, and others.

K. Edw. Why, so:—now have I done a good day's work;—

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy

From my Redeemer to redeem me hence;

And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven.

Since I have made my friends at peace on earth,

Rivers, and Hastings, take each other's hand;

Dissemble not your hatred¹, swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudging hate;

And with my hand I seal my true heart's love.

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like!

King Edw. Take heed, you daily not before your
king;

Loet he, that is the supreme King of kings,

Confound your hidden falsehood, and award

Either of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love!

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart!

from Sir John Faston to his brother, dated Feb 14, 1471-2:—'Yesterday the king, the queen, my lords of Clarence and Gloucester went to Shene to pardon; men say, not all in charity. The king entreath my lord of Clarence for my lord of Gloucester; and, as it is said, he answereth, that he may well have my lady his sister-in-law, but they shall part no livelihood, as he saith; so, what will fall, can I not say.'—Paston's Letters, vol. ii. p. 91.

6 i. e. do not merely cloak and conceal your ill-will to each other, but eradicate it altogether from your bosoms, and swear to love each other.

K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt in this,— Nor your son Dorset,—Buckingham, nor you;—
You have been factious one against the other.
Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;
And what you do, do it unfeignedly.

Q. Eliz. There, Hastings;—I will never more remember

Our former hatred, so thrive I, and mine!

K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him,—Hastings, love lord marquis.

Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest,
Upon my part shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I. [Embraces Dorset.]

K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this league

With thy embracements to my wife's allies,
And make me happy in your unity.

Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate Upon your grace [To the Queen], but with all duteous love

Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most love!
When I have most need to employ a friend,
And most assured that he is a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me! this do I beg of heaven,
When I am cold in love, to you, or yours.

[Embracing Rivers, &c.]

K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham,
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart.
There wanteth now our brother Gloucester here,
To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble duke.

Enter Gloucester.

Gla. Good-morrow to my sovereign king, and queen;

And, princely peers, a happy time of day!

K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day:—

Brother, we have done deeds of charity;
Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate,
Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.

Gla. A blessed labour, my most sovereign liege.—

Among this princely heap, if any here,
By false intelligence, or wrong surmise,
Hold me a foe;

If I unwittingly, or in my rage,
Have aught committed that is hardly borne
By any in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me to his friendly peace:

'Tis death to me, to be at enmity;
I hate it, and desire all good men's love.—

First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dutious service;—

Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham,
If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us:—

Of you, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey, of you,—
That all without desert have frown'd on me;—

Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen: indeed, of all.
I do not know that Englishman alive,

With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility.¹

¹ Milton has this observation:—'The poets, and some English, have been in this point so mindful of decorum, as to put never more pious words in the mouth of any person than of a tyrant. I shall not instance an abstruse author, wherein the king might be less conversant, but one whom we well know was the closest companion of these his solitudes, William Shakespeare; who introduced the person of Richard the Third, speaking in as high a strain of piety and mortification as is uttered in any passage in this book, and sometimes to the same sense and purpose with some words in this place. I intended (saith he), not only to oblige my friends, but my enemies. The like saith Richard:—

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility.

Other stuff of this sort may be read throughout the tragedy, wherein the poet used not much licence in depart-

Q. Eliz. A holy-day shall this be kept hereafter:—
I would to God all strifes were well compounded.—
My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness
To take our brother Clarence to your grace.

Glo. Why, madam, have I offer'd love for this,
To be so flouted in this royal presence?
Who knows not, that the gentle duke is dead?

[They all start.]

You do him injury to scorn his corpse.

K. Edw. Who knows not he is dead! who knows
he is?

Q. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this!

Buck. Look I so pale, Lord Dorset, as the rest?
Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks.

K. Edw. Is Clarence dead? the order was reversed.

Glo. But he, poor man, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear;
Some tardy cripple bore the countermand,²
That came too lag to see him buried:—
God grant, that some, less noble, and less loyal,
Nearer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,³
Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,
And yet go current from suspicion.

Enter Stanley.

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!

K. Edw. I prythee, peace; my soul is full of sorrow.

Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.

K. Edw. Then say at once, what is it thou request'st?

Stan. The forfeit,⁴ sovereign, of my servant's life;
Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman,
Lately attendant on the duke of Norfolk.

K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death?

And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave?
My brother kill'd no man, his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.

Who sued to me for him? who, in my wrath,

Kneel'd at my feet, and bade me be advis'd?⁵

Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?

Who told me, how the poor soul did forsake

The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me?

Who told me, in the field at Tewksbury,

When Oxford had me down, he rescued me,

And said, Dear brother, live, and be a king?

Who told me, when we both lay in the field,

Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me

Even in his garments; and did give himself,

All thin and naked, to the numb-cold night?

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath

Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you

Had so much grace to put it in my mind.

But when your carters, or your waiting-vassals,

Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd

The precious image of our dear Redeemer,

You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon;

And I, unjustly too, must grant it you:—

But for my brother, not a man would speak,—

Nor I (ungracious) speak unto myself

For him, poor soul.—The proudest of you all

Have been beholden to him in his life;

ing from the truth of history, which delivers him a deep desembling, not of his affections only, but his religion.⁶

² This is an allusion to a proverbial expression which Drayton has verified in his Baron's Wars.—
'Ill news hath wings, and with the wind doth go,
Comfort's a cripple, and comes ever slow.'

Canto II. Ed. 1619.

³ We have the same play on words in Macbeth:—

'—the near in blood,

The nearer bloody.'

⁴ He means the remission of the forfeit.

⁵ 'This lamentation is very tender and pathetic. The recollection of the good qualities of the dead is very natural, and no less naturally does the king endeavour to communicate the crime to others.'—Johnson. The hint for this pathetic speech is to be found in Sir Thomas More's History of Edward V. inserted in the Chronicles.

⁶ I. e. be circumspect, deliberate, or consider what I was about

Yet none of you would once plead for his life.—
O God! I fear, thy justice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this.—
Come, Hastings, help me to my closet.¹ O,
Poor Clarence!

[Exeunt King, Queen, Hastings, Rivers,
Dorset, and Grey.

Glo. This is the fruit of rashness!—Mark'd you
not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence's death?
O! they did urge it still unto the king:
God will revenge it. Come, lords; will you go,
To comfort Edward with our company?

Buck. We wait upon your grace. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The same. Enter the DUCHESS of YORK, with a Son and Daughter of CLARENCE.

Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?

Duch. No, boy.

Daugh. Why do you weep so oft? and beat your breast;

And cry—O Clarence, my unhappy son!

Son. Why do you look on us, and shake your head,
And call us—orphans, wretches, cast-aways,
If that our noble father be alive?

Duch. My pretty cousins,² you mistake me both;
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loath to lose him, not your father's death:
It were lost sorrow, to wail one that's lost.

Son. Then grandam, you conclude that he is dead.

The king my uncle is to blame for this:
God will revenge it; whom I will importune
With earnest prayers all to that effect.

Daugh. And so will I.

Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love you well:

Incapable³ and shallow innocents,
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.

Son. Grandam, we can: for my good uncle Gloucester
Told me, the king, provok'd to't by the queen,
Devis'd impeachments to imprison him:
And when my uncle told me so, he wept,
And pitied me, and kindly kiss'd my cheek;
Bade me rely on him, as on my father,
And he would love me dearly as his child.

Duch. Ah, that deceit should steal such gentle shapes,

And with a virtuous visor hide deep vice!
He is my son, ay, and therein my shame,
Yet from my dugs⁴ he drew not this deceit.

Son. Think you, my uncle did dissemble,⁵ grandam?

Duch. Ay, boy.

Son. I cannot think it. Hark! what noise is this?

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, distractedly; RIVERS, and DORSET, following her.

Q. Eliz. Ah! who shall hinder me to wail and weep?

To chide my fortune, and torment myself?
I'll join with black despair against my soul,
And to myself become an enemy.

Duch. What means this scene of rude impatience?

Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence:—
Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead.
Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves, that want their sap?
—If you will live, lament; if die, be brief;
That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's;

Or, like obedient subjects, follow him
To his new kingdom of perpetual rest.

Duch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow,
As I had title in thy noble husband!

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:⁶

But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death;
And I for comfort have but one false glass,
That grieves me when I see my shame in him.
Thou art a widow; yet thou art a mother,
And hast the comfort of thy children left thee;
But death hath snatch'd my husband from my arms,
And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble hands,
Clarence, and Edward. O, what cause have I (Thine being but a moiety of my grief,)
To overgo thy plaints, and drown thy cries!

Son. Ah, aunt! you wept not for our father's death;

How can we aid you with our kindred tears?

Daugh. Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,
Your widow-dolour likewise be unwept!

Q. Eliz. Give me no help in lamentation,
I am not barren to bring forth laments:
All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I, being govern'd by the wat'ry moon,
May send forth plentiful tears to drown the world!

Ah, for my husband, for my dear Lord Edward!

Chil. Ah, for our father, for our dear Lord Clarence!

Duch. Alas, for both, both mine, Edward and Clarence!

Q. Eliz. What stay had I, but Edward? and he's gone.

Chil. What stay had we, but Clarence? and he's gone.

Duch. What stays had I, but they? and they are gone.

Q. Eliz. Was never widow, had so dear a loss.
Chil. Were never orphans, had so dear a loss.

Duch. Was never mother, had so dear a loss.
Alas! I am the mother of these griefs;
Their woes are parcel'd,⁷ mine are general.
She for an Edward weeps, and so do I;
I for a Clarence weep, so doth not she:
These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I:
I for an Edward weep, so do not they:—
Alas, you three, on me, threefold distress'd,
Pour all your tears, I am your sorrow's nurse,
And I will pamper it with lamentations.

Dor. Comfort, dear mother; God is much dis-pleas'd,

That you take with unthankfulness his doing;
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd—ungrateful,
With dull unwillingness to repay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with heaven,
For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

Riv. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother,
Of the young prince your son: send straight for him,
Let him be crown'd. In him your comfort lives:
Drown desperate sorrow in dead Edward's grave,
And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS,
RATCLIFF, and others.

Glo. Sister, have comfort: all of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining star;
But none can cure their harms by wailing them.—
Madam, my mother, I do cry you mercy,
I did not see your grace:—Humbly on my knee
I crave your blessing.

1 Hastings was lord chamberlain to King Edward IV.
2 Cecily, daughter of Ralph Neville, first earl of Westmoreland, and widow of Richard duke of York, who was killed at the battle of Wakefield, 1460. She survived her husband thirty-five years, living till the year 1493.

3 The duchess is here addressing her grand-children;
but cousin seems to have been used instead of our kinsman and kinswoman, and to have supplied the place of both.

4 Unsusceptible.

5 This word gave no offence to our ancestors; one instance will show that it was used even in the most refin'd poetry:—

'And on thy dugs the queen of love doth tell
Her godhead's power in scrowles of my desire.'
Constable's Sonnets, 1604, Dec. vi. Son. 4.

6 In the language of our elder writers, to dissemble signified to feign or simulate, as well as to cloak or conceal feelings or dispositions. Milton uses dissembler in this sense in the extract in a note on a former page.

7 The children by whom he was represented

8 Divided.

Duch. God bless thee; and put meekness in thy breast,
Love, charity, obedience, and true duty!
Glo. Amen; and make me die a good old man!—
That is the butt-end of a mother's blessing; [Aside.
I marvel, that her grace did leave it out.
Buck. You cloudy princes, and heart-sorrowing peers,

That bear this mutual heavy load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other's love:
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.
The broken rancour of your high-swollen hearts,
But lately splinted, knit, and join'd together,
Must gently be preserv'd, cherish'd, and kept:
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fetch'd:
Hither to London, to be crown'd our king.

Rio. Why with some little train, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out;
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green, and yet ungo-vern'd:

Where every horse bears his commanding reins,
And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Glo. I hope, the king made peace with all of us;
And the compact is firm, and true, in me.

Rio. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:³
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach,
Which, haply, by much company might be urg'd:
Therefore I say, with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Must. And so say I.

Glo. Then be it so; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that straight shall post to Ludlow.
Madam, and you my mother,—will you go
To give your censures in this weighty business?

[Exeunt all but BUCKINGHAM and GLOSTER.]

Duch. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God's sake, let not us two stay at home:
For, by the way, I'll sort occasion,
As indur'd to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the queen's proud kindred from the prince.

Glo. My other self, my counsel's consistory,
My oracle, my prophet!—My dear cousin,
I, as a child, will go by thy direction.
Towards Ludlow then, for we'll not stay behind.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Street. Enter two Citizens, meeting.

1 Cit. Good morrow, neighbour: Whither away
so fast?

2 Cit. I promise you, I scarcely know myself:
Hear you the news abroad?

1 Cit. Yes; the king's dead.

2 Cit. Ill news, by'r lady; seldom comes the better:⁴

I fear, I fear, 'twill prove a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3 Cit. Neighbours, God speed.

1 Cit. Give you good morrow, sir.

1 Edward, the young prince, in his father's lifetime, and at his demise, kept his household at Ludlow, as prince of Wales; under the governance of Anthony Woolville, earl of Rivers, his uncle by the mother's side.
The insertion of his being sent thither was to see justice done in the Marches; and, by the authority of his presence, to restrain the Welchmen, who were wild, dissolute, and ill-disposed, from their accustomed murders and outrages.—Vide Holinshed.

2 This speech seems rather to belong to Hastings, who was of the duke of Gloucester's party. The next speech might be given to Stanley.

3 I. e. your judgments, your opinions.

4 That is preparatory, by way of prelude.

5 An ancient proverbial saying, noticed in The English Courtier and Country Gentlemen, 4to. bl. l. 1606,

3 Cit. Doth the news hold of good King Edward's death?

2 Cit. Ay, sir, it is too true; God help the while!

3 Cit. Then, masters, look to see a troublous world.

1 Cit. No, no; by God's good grace, his son shall reign.

3 Cit. Woe to that land, that's govern'd by a child!⁶

2 Cit. In him there is a hope of government;

That, in his nonage,⁷ council under him,

And, in his full and ripen'd years, himself,

No doubt, shall then, and till then, govern well.

1 Cit. So stood the state, when Henry the Sixth
Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old.

3 Cit. Stood the state so? no, no, good friends,
God wot;

For then this land was famously enrich'd

With politic grave counsel; then the king

Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

1 Cit. Why, so hath this, both by his father and mother.

3 Cit. Better it were they all came by his father;
Or, by his father, there were none at all:

For emulation now, who shall be nearest,

Will touch us all too near, if God prevent not.

O, full of danger is the duke of Gloucester;

And the queen's sons, and brothers, haught and proud:

And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,

This sickly land might solace as before.

1 Cit. Come, come, we fear the worst: all will be well.

3 Cit. When clouds are seen, wise men put on their cloaks;

When great leaves fall, then winter is at hand;

When the sun sets, who doth not look for night?

Untimely storms make men expect a dearth:

All may be well; but, if God sort it so,

'Tis more than we deserve, or I expect.

2 Cit. Truly, the hearts of men are full of fear:

You cannot reason almost with a man

That looks not heavily, and full of dread.

3 Cit. Before the days of change, still is it so:

By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust

Ensuing danger; as, by proof, we see

The water swell before a boisterous storm.⁸

But leave it all to God. Whither away?

2 Cit. Marry, we were sent for to the justices.

3 Cit. And so was I; I'll bear you company.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of York, the young DUKE of YORK, QUEEN ELIZABETH, and the DUCH-ESS of YORK.

Arch. Last night, I heard, they lay at Stony-Stratford;

And at Northampton they do rest to-night:⁹

To-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Duch. I long with all my heart to see the prince;

I hope, he is much grown since last I saw him.

Q. Eliz. But I hear, no; they say, my son of York Hath almost overtaken him in his growth.

sign. B: '— as the proverb sayth seldome come the better. Val. That proverb indeed is ancient, and for the most part true.'

6 'Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child.'

Ecclesiast. c. x.

Shakespeare found it cited in the duke of Buckingham's speech to the citizens in More's Richard III.

7 We may hope well of his government under all circumstances; we may hope this of his council while he is in his nonage, and of himself in his ripar years.

8 See note 6, p. 97.

9 'Before such great things, men's hearts of a secret instinct of nature misgive them; as the sea without wind swelleth of himself some time before a tempest.—From More's Richard III. copied by Holinshed, III. 721.

10 This is the reading of the folio. The quarto of 1597
reads:—

'Last night I hear they lay at Northampton:

At Stony-Stratford they will be to-night.'

By neither reading can the truth of history be preserved.
According to the reading of the quarto the scene would

York. Ay, mother, but I would not have it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin? it is good to grow.

York. Grandam, one night, as we did sit at supper,

My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow
More than my brother; Ay, quoth my uncle Gloster,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace:
And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet flowers are slow, and weeds make haste.

Duch. 'Good faith, 'good faith, the saying did not hold

In him that did object the same to thee:
He was the wretched'st thing, when he was young:
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious madam.

Duch. I hope, he is; but yet let mothers doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember'd,

I could have given my uncle's grace a flout,
To touch his growth, nearer than he touch'd mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I prythee, let me hear it.

York. Marry, they say, my uncle grew so fast,
That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old;
'Twas full two years ere I could get a tooth.
Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.

Duch. I prythee, pretty York, who told thee this?

York. Grandam, his nurse.

Duch. His nurse? why, she was dead ere thou wast born.

York. If 'twere not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Q. Eliz. A parlous¹ boy: Go to, you are too shrewd.

Arch. Good madam, be not angry with the child.

Q. Eliz. Pitchers have ears.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger:
What news?

Mess. Such news, my lord,

As grieves me to unfold.

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news?

Mess. Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey, are sent to Pomfret,

With them Sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them?

Mess. The mighty dukes,
Gloster and Buckingham.

Q. Eliz. For what offence?

Mess. The sum of all I can, I have disclos'd;
Why, or for what, the nobles were committed,
Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ah me, I see the ruin of my house!
The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind;
Insulting tyranny begins to jut²

Upon the innocent and awless throne:—

Welcome, destruction, blood, and massacre!
I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling days!

be on the day on which the king was journeying from Northampton to Stratford; and of course the messenger's account of the peers being seized, &c. which happened on the next day after the king had lain at Stratford, is inaccurate. If the folio reading be adopted the scene is indeed placed on the day on which the king was seized; but the archbishop is supposed to be apprized of a fact which, before the entry of the messenger, he manifestly does not know; namely, the duke of Gloster's coming to Stratford the morning after the king had lain there, taking him forcibly back to Northampton, and seizing the Lords Rivers, Grey, &c. The truth is, that the queen herself, the person most materially interested in the welfare of her son, did not hear of the king's being carried back from Stony-Stratford to Northampton till about midnight of the day on which this violence was offered to him by his uncle. See Hall, Edward V. fol. 6. Malone thinks this an unanswerable argument in favour of the reading of the quarto; while Stevens thinks it a matter of indifference, but prefers the text of the folio copy on account of the verification

How many of you have mine eyes beheld?

My husband lost his life to get the crown;

And often up and down my sons were tost,

For me to joy, and weep, their gain, and loss;

And being seated, and domestic broils

Clean over blown, themselves, the conquerors,

Make war upon themselves; brother to brother,

Blood to blood, self 'gainst self:—O, preposterous

And frantic courage, end thy damned spleen;

Or let me die, to look on death no more!

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy, we will to sanctuary.—

Madam, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.

Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go.

[To the Queen.

And thither bear your treasure and your goods.

For my part, I'll resign unto your grace

The seal I keep;³ And so betide to me,

As well I tender you, and all of yours!

Come, I'll conduct you to the sanctuary. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I. London. A Street. The Trumpets sound. Enter the Prince of Wales, GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, CARDINAL BOURCHIER,⁴ and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.⁵

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sovereign:

The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No, uncle; but our crosses on the way

Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy:

I want more uncles here to welcome me.

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years

Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit:

No more can you distinguish of a man,

Than of his outward show; which, God he knows,

Seldom, or never, jumpeth⁶ with the heart.

Those uncles, which you want, were dangerous;

Your grace attended to their sugar'd words,

But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:

God keep you from them, and from such false friends!

Prince. God keep me from false friends! but they were none.

Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.

Enter the Lord Mayor, and his Train.

May. God bless your grace with health and happy days!

Prince. I thank you, good my lord;—and thank you all.— [Exeunt Mayor, &c.

I thought, my mother, and my brother York,

Would long ere this have met us on the way:

Eye, what a slug is Hastings! that he comes not

To tell us whether they would come, or no.

² The quarto reads to jet, which Mr. Boswell thought preferable; but the folio is right. 'To jut upon the throne,' is to make incursions or incursions upon it. See Cooper's Dictionary, 1694, in voce incurse. Jutless is not producing awe, not reverenced.

³ Afterwards, however, this obsequious archbishop [Rotherham] to ingratiate himself with Richard III. put his majesty's badge, the Heg, upon the gate of the Public Library at Cambridge.

⁴ Thomas Bourchier was made a cardinal, and elected Archbishop of Canterbury in 1464. He died in 1486.

⁵ London was anciently called Camara Regie. See Coke's Institutes, 4. 243; Camden's Britannia, 374; and Ben Jonson's Entertainment to King James, passing to his Coronation. London is called the king's special chamber in the duke of Buckingham's oration to the citizens (apud Morre), which Shakespeare has taken other phrases from.

⁶ To jump with, is to agree with, to suit, or correspond with.

Enter HASTINGS.

Buck. And in good time, here comes the sweating lord.

Prince. Welcome, my lord: What, will our mother come?

Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not I, The queen your mother, and your brother York, slave taken sanctuary: The tender prince Would fain have come with me to meet your grace, But by his mother was perforce withheld.

Buck. Fye! what an indirect and peevish course Is this of hers!—Lord cardinal, will your grace Persuade the queen to send the duke of York Unto his princely brother presently?

If she deny,—Lord Hastings, go with him, And from her jealous arms pluck him perforce.

Card. My lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory

Can from his mother win the duke of York, Anon expect him here: But if she be obdurate To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid We should infringe the holy privilege Of blessed sanctuary! met for all this land, Would I be guilty of so deep a sin.

Buck. You are too senseless-obedient, my lord, Too ceremonious, and traditional:¹

Weigh it but with the grossness² of this age, You break not sanctuary in seizing him.

The benefit thereof is always granted To those whose dealings have deserv'd the place, And those who have the wit to claim the place:

This prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserv'd it; And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it:

Then, taking him from thence, that is not there, You break no privilege nor charter there.

Of have I heard of sanctuary men; But sanctuary children, no'er till now.³

Card. My lord, you shall o'errule my mind for once.—

Come on, Lord Hastings, will you go with me?

Hast. I go, my lord.

Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may. [Exeunt Cardinal and HAST.]

Say, uncle Gloster, if our brother come, Whens shall we sojourn till our coronation?

Glo. Where it seems best unto your royal self. If I may counsel you, some day, or two,

Your highness shall repose you at the Tower: Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit For your best health and recreation.

Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any place:— Did Julius Cæsar build that place, my lord?

Glo. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place; Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified.

Prince. Is it upon record? or else reported Successively from age to age he built it?

Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.

Prince. But say, my lord, it were not register'd; Methinks, the truth should live from age to age,

As 'twere retail'd⁴ to all posterity, Even to the general all-ending day.

Glo. So wise so young, they say, do ne'er live long.⁵ [Aside.]

Prince. What say you, uncle?

Glo. I say, without characters, fame lives long. Thus, like the formal⁶ vice, iniquity, } Aside.
I moralize two meanings in one word. }

Prince. That Julius Cæsar was a famous man; With what his valour did enrich his wit,

His wit set down to make his valour live. Death makes no conquest of this conqueror;

For new he lives in fame, though not in life.— I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham.

Buck. What, my gracious lord?

Prince. An if I live until I be a man, I'll win our ancient right in France again,

Or die a soldier, as I liv'd a king.

Glo. Short summers lightly⁷ have a forward spring. [Aside.]

Enter YORK, HASTINGS, and the Cardinal.

Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the duke of York.

Prince. Richard of York! how fares our loving brother?

York. Well, my dread lord; so I must call you now.

Prince. Ay, brother; to our grief, as it is yours: Too late⁸ he died, that might have kept that title, Which by his death hath lost much majesty.

Glo. How fares our cousin, noble lord of York?

York. I thank you, gentle uncle. O, my lord, You said that idle weeds are fast in growth:

The prince my brother hath outgrown me far

Glo. He hath, my lord.

York. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. O, my fair cousin, I must not say so.

York. Then is he more beholden to you, than I.

Glo. He may command me, as my sovereign; But you have power in me, as in a kinsman.

York. I pray you, uncle, give me this dagger.

Glo. My dagger, little cousin? with all my heart.

Prince. A beggar, brother?

York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will give; And, being but a toy, which is no grief to give.

Glo. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.

York. A greater gift? O, that's the sword to it?

Glo. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.

York. O then, I see, you'll part but with light gifts: In weightier things you'll say a beggar, my lord.

Glo. It is too weighty for your grace to wear.

York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.⁹

Glo. What, would you have my weapon, little lord?

York. I would, that I might thank you as you call me.

Glo. How?

York. Little.

Prince. My lord of York will still be cross in talk;—

Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.

² Grossness here means plainness, simplicity. Warburton, not understanding the word, would have changed it. Johnson has misinterpreted it; and Malone, though he defends the reading, leaves it unexplained.

³ This argument is from More's History, as printed in the Chronicles, where it is very much enlarged upon. 'Verely I have often heard of saintuarye men, but I never heard erle of saintuarye chyldren * * *. But he can be no saintuarye manne, that neither hath wisdom to desire it, nor malice to deserve it, whose lyfe or libertye can by no lawfull processe stand in jeopardy. And he that taketh one oute of saintuarye to dooe hym good, I saye plainlye that he breaketh no saintuarye.'—More's History of Kinge Richard the Thirde. Edit. 1521, p. 42.

⁴ I. e. recounted. Minshew, in his Dictionary, 1617, besides the verb retail, in the mercantile sense, has the verb to retail or retell.

⁵ I have knowne children languishing of the spleene, obstructed and altered in temper, talke with gravity and wisdom surpassing those tender years, and their judgments carrying a marvellous imitation of the wisdom of the ancient, having after a sorte attained that by disease which other have by course of yeares; whereon I take it the proverbe ariseth, that they be of shorte life who are of wit so pregnant.—Bright's Treatise of Melancholy, 1586, p. 62.

⁶ For an account of the vice in old plays, see note on Twelfth Night, Act iv. Sc. 2. 'He appears (says Mr. Gifford) to have been a perfect counterpart of the harlequin of the modern stage, and had a two-fold office, to insatiate the hero of the piece to wickedness, and, at the same time, to protect him from the devil, whom he was permitted to buffet and baffle with his wooden sword, till the process of the story required that both the protector and the protected should be carried off by the hand, or the latter driven roaring from the stage by some miraculous interposition in favour of the repentant offender.'

⁷ 'Short summers commonly have a forward spring.' So in an old proverb preserved by Ray:—'There's lightning lightly before thunder.'

⁸ Lately.
⁹ This taunting answer of the prince has been misinterpreted: he means to say, 'I hold it cheap, or care but little for it, even were it heavier than it is.'

York. You mean, to bear me, not to bear with me:—
Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me;
Because that I am little, like an ape,
He thinks that you should bear me on your shoulders.¹

Buck. With what a sharp provided wit he reasons!
To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himself:
So cunning, and so young, is wonderful.

Glo. My gracious lord, will't please you pass along?
Myself, and my good cousin Buckingham,
Will to your mother; to entreat of her,
To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

York. What, will you go unto the Tower, my lord?

Prince. My lord protector needs will have it so.

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, sir, what should you fear?

York. Marry, my uncle Clarence's angry ghost;
My grandam told me, he was murder'd there.

Prince. I fear no uncles dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope.

Prince. As if they live, I hope, I need not fear.
But come, my lord, and, with a heavy heart,
Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower.

[Exeunt Prince, York, Hastings, Cardinal, and Attendants.]

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating York
Was not incensed² by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously?

Glo. No doubt, no doubt: O, 'tis a perilous boy;
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;³
He's all the mother's, from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest.—

Come hither, gentle Catesby; thou art sworn
As deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart:
Thou know'st our reasons urg'd upon the way;
—What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter
To make William Lord Hastings of our mind,
For the instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle?

Cate. He for his father's sake so loves the prince,
That he will not be won to aught against him.

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? will not he?

Cate. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.

Buck. Well then, no more but this: Go, gentle
Catesby,

And, as it were far off, sound thou Lord Hastings,
How he doth stand affected to our purpose;
And summon him to-morrow to the Tower,
To sit about the coronation.
If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too; and so break off the talk,
And give us notice of his inclination:
For we to-morrow hold divided⁴ councils,
Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd.

Glo. Commend me to Lord William: tell him,
Catesby,

His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries
To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret Castle;
And bid my friend, for joy of this good news,
Give mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, go, effect this business soundly.

Cate. My good lords both, with all the heed I can.

Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we sleep?
Cate. You shall, my lord.

Glo. At Crosby-place, there shall you find us both. [Exit Catesby.]

Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we perceive

Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?

Glo. Chop off his head, man;—somewhat we will do:—

And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford, and all the movables
Whereof the king my brother was possess'd.

Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand.

Glo. And look to have it yielded with all kindness.
Come, let us sup betimes; that afterwards
We may digest our complots in some form.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Before Lord Hastings' House.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord,— [Knocking.]

Hast. [Within.] Who knocks?

Mess. One from Lord Stanley

Hast. [Within.] What is't o'clock?

Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Enter Hastings.

Hast. Cannot thy master sleep these tedious nights?

Mess. So it should seem by that I have to say.
First, he commends him to your noble lordship.

Hast. And then,—

Mess. And then he sends you word, he dreamt
To-night the boar had rased⁵ off his helm:
Besides, he says, there are two councils held;
And that may be determin'd at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at the other.
Therefore he sends to know your lordship's pleasure,—

If presently, you will take horse with him,
And with all speed post with him toward the north,
To shun the danger that his soul divines.

Hast. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord;
Bid him not fear the separated councils:
His honour,⁶ and myself, are at the one;
And, at the other, is my good friend Catesby;
Where nothing can proceed, that toucheth us,
Whereof I shall not have intelligence.

Tell him, his fears are shallow, wanting instance:⁷
And for his dreams—I wonder, he's so fond⁸
To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers:
To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,
Were to incense the boar to follow us,
And make pursuit, where he did mean no chase.
Go, bid thy master rise and come to me;
And we will both together to the Tower,
Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say.
[Exit.]

Enter Catesby.

Cate. Many good morrows to my noble lord!

Hast. Good morrow, Catesby; you are early stirring:

What news, what news, in this our tottering state?

Cate. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord;

And, I believe, will never stand upright,

Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

Hast. How! wear the garland? dost thou mean the crown?

Cate. Aye, my good lord.

1 York alludes to the protuberance on Gloucester's back, which was commodious for carrying burdens.

2 I. e. incited, instigated.

3 Capable is quick of apprehension, susceptible, intelligent.

4 But the protectours and the duke after they had sent to the lord cardinal, the Lord Stanley, and the Lord Hastings, then lord chamberlain, with many other noblemen, to commune and devise about the coronation in one place, as fast were they in another place, contriving the contrary to make the protectours king. The Lord Stanley, that was after earl of Darby, wisely mistrusted him, and said unto the Lord Hastings that he much misliked these two several councils.—Holinshed, from Sir T. More

5 Every material circumstance in this scene is from Holinshed, except that it is a knight with whom Hastings converses instead of Buckingham.

6 This term rased or rashed, is always given to describe the violence inflicted by a boar. By the boar, throughout this scene, is meant Gloucester, in allusion to his crest.

7 This was the usual address to noblemen in Shakspere's time; it was indifferently used with your lordship. See any old letter or dedication of that age.

8 Instance is here put for motive, cause.

9 Weak, silly.

Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.
But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it?

Cate. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you forward

Upon his party, for the gain thereof:
And, thereupon, he sends you this good news,—
That, this same very day, your enemies,
The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.

Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news,
Because they have been still my adversaries:
But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do it, to the death.

Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind!

Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelvemonth hence,
That they, who brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy.

Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,
I'll send some packing, that yet think not on't.

Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,
When men are unprepar'd, and look not for it.

Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out
With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: and so 'twill do
With some men else, who think themselves as safe
As thou, and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear
To princely Richard, and to Buckingham.

Cate. The princes both make high account of you,
For they account his head upon the bridge. [Aside.]

Hast. I know, they do; and I have well deserv'd it.

Enter STANLEY.

Come on, come on, where is your bear-spear, man?
Fear you the bear, and go so unprovided?

Stan. My lord, good morrow; and good morrow,
Catesby:—

You may jest on, but, by the holy rood,¹
I do not like these several councils, I.

Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as you do yours;

And never, in my life, I do protest,
Was it more precious to me than 'tis now:
Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am?

Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from London,

Were jocund, and suppos'd their states were sure,
And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;
But yet, you see, how soon the day o'ercast.
This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;²
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!
What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, have with you.—Wot³ you what, my lord?

To-day, the lords you talk of are beheaded.

Stan. They, for their truth, might better wear their heads,

Than some, that have accus'd them, wear their hats.

But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before, I'll talk with this good fellow.
[Exit STAN. and CATESBY.]
How now, sirrah? how goes the world with thee?

Purs. The better, that your lordship please to ask.

Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now,
Than when thou last'st me last where now we meet.
Then I was going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;
But now I tell thee (keep it to thyself);
This day those enemies are put to death,
And I in better state than ere I was.

Purs. God hold it,⁴ to your honour's good content!

Hast. Gramercy, fellow: There, drink that for me. [Throwing him his purse.]

Purs. I thank your honour. [Exit Pursuivant.]

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour.

Hast. I thank thee, good Sir John,⁵ with all my heart.

I am in your debt for your last exercise;⁶

Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest;
Your honour hath no shiving⁷ work in hand.

Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man
The men you talk of came into my mind.

What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there:

I shall return before your lordship thence.

Hast. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. And supper too, although thou know'st it not. [Aside.]

Come, will you go?

Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship.

[Exit]

SCENE III. Pomfret. Before the Castle. Enter RATCLIFF, with a Guard, conducting RIVERS GREY,⁸ and VAUGHAN, to Execution.

Rat. Come, bring forth the prisoners.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this,—
To-day, shalt thou behold a subject die,
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.

Grey. God keep the prince from all the pack of you!

A knot you are of damned blood-suckers.

Vaugh. You live, that shall cry woe for this hereafter.

Rat. Despatch; the limit⁹ of your lives is out.
Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison,
Fatal and ominous to noble peers!

Within the guilty closure of thy walls,
Richard the Second here was hack'd to death
And, for more slander to thy dismal seat,
We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our heads,

When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I,
For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.

Riv. Then curs'd she Hastings, then curs'd she Buckingham,

Then curs'd she Richard:—O, remember, God,
To hear her prayers for them, as now for us!

1 Cross.

2 I. e. suspect it of danger.

3 Know.

4 That is, continue it.

5 See note 1 on the first scene of The Merry Wives of Windsor.

6 Exercise probably means religious exhortation or lecture.

7 From the continuation of Harding's Chronicle, 1543, where the account given originally by Sir Thomas More is transcribed with some additions, it appears that the person who held this conversation with Hastings was Sir Thomas Howard, who is introduced in the last act of this play as earl of Surrey.

8 Confession.

9 Queen Elizabeth Grey is deservedly pitied for the loss of her two sons; but the royalty of their birth has so engrossed the attention of historians, that they never reckon into the number of her misfortunes the murder of this her second son, Sir Richard Grey. It is remarkable how slightly the death of Earl Rivers is always mentioned, though a man invested with such high offices of trust and dignity; and how much we dwell on the execution of the lord chamberlain Hastings, a man in every light his inferior. In truth, the generality draw their ideas of English story from the tragic rather than the historic authors.—Walpole.

10 The limit for the limited time.

And for my sister, and her princely sons,—
Be satisfied, dear God, with our true bloods,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt!
Ed. Make haste, the hour of death is expiate.
Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaughan,—let us here embrace:

Farewell, until we meet again in heaven. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Tower.
BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS, the Bishop of Ely,¹ CATESBY, LOVEL, and others, sitting at a Table: Officers of the Council attending.

Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met

is—to determine of the coronation:

In God's name, speak, when is the royal day?

Buck. Are all things ready for that royal time?

Stan. They are; and wants but nomination.²

Ely. To-morrow then I judge a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?

Who is most inward³ with the noble duke?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces; for our hearts,—

He knows no more of mine, than I of yours;

Nor I, of his, my lord, than you of mine:

Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well;

But, for his purpose in the coronation,

I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd

His gracious pleasure any way therein:

But you, my noble lord, may name the time;

And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice,

Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Enter GLOSTER.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the duke himself.

Glo. My noble lords and cousins, all, good morrow:

I have been long a sleeper; but, I trust,
My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded.

Buck. Had you not come upon your cue,⁴ my lord,
William Lord Hastings had pronounced your part,—
I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king.

Glo. Than any Lord Hastings, no man might be bolder;

His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.—

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,

I saw good strawberries in your garden there;⁵

I do beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.

[Exit Ely.]

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

[Takes him aside.]

Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business;

And finds the teaty gentleman so hot,

1 We have this word in the same sense again in Shakespeare's twenty-second Sonnet:—

'Then look I death my days should expiate.'

I cannot but think with Steevens that it is an error of the press for expiate.

2 Dr. John Morton, who was elected to the see of Ely in 1473. He was advanced to the see of Canterbury in 1486, and appointed lord chancellor in 1497. He died in the year 1500. This prelate first devised the scheme of putting an end to the long contests between the houses of York and Lancaster, by a marriage between Henry earl of Richmond, and Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Edward IV.; and was a principal agent in procuring Henry, when abroad, to enter into a covenant for the purpose.—See More's Life of Richard III.

3 The only thing wanting is appointment of a particular day for the ceremony.

4 Indiscreet, confidential.

5 See note on Hamlet, Act II. Sc. 2.

6 This circumstance of asking the bishop for some of his strawberries seems to have been mentioned by the old historians merely to show the unusual affability and good humour which the dissembling Gloster affected at the very time he had determined on the death of Hastings. It originates with Sir Thomas More, who mentions the protector's entrance to the council 'fyrste about

That he will lose his head, ere give consent,
His master's child, as worshippfully he terms it,
Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.

Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile, I'll go with you.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM.]

Stan. We have not yet set down this day of triumph.

To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden;

For I myself am not so well provided,

As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Re-enter Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my lord protector? I have sent for these strawberries.

Hast. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning;

There's some conceit or other likes him well,

When he doth bid good morrow with such spirit.

I think, there's ne'er a man in Christendom,

Can lesser hide his love, or hate, than he;

For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Stan. What of his heart perceive you in his face,

By any likelihood⁷ he shew'd to-day?

Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offended;

For, were he, he had shown it in his looks.

Re-enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM.

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve

That do conspire my death with devilish plots

Of damned witchcraft, and that have prevail'd

Upon my body with their hellish charms?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord,

Makes me most forward in this noble presence

To doom the offenders: Whosoe'er they be,

I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glo. Then be your eyes the witness of their evil,

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold mine arm

Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up:

And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch,

Consorted with that harlot, strumpet Shore,

That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble

lord,—

Glo. If! thou protector of this damned strumpet,

Talk'st thou to me of ifs?—Thou art a traitor:—

Off with his head: now, by Saint Paul, I swear,

I will not dine until I see the same.—

Lovel, and Catesby, look, that it be done;

The rest that love me, rise, and follow me.

[Exeunt Council, with GLO. and BUCK.]

Hast. Woo, woo, for England! not a whit for me;

For I, too fond, might have prevented this:

Stanley did dream the bear did raise his helm;

But I disdain'd it, and did scorn to fly.

Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble,⁸

And startled, when he look'd upon the Tower,

As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house.

O, now I want the priest that spake to me:

I now regret I told the pursuivant,

ix of the clocke, saluting them curtesly, and excusing himself that he had ben from them so long, saying merrily that he had been a slepe that day. And after a litle talking wth them he said unto the bishop of Elye, my lord, you have very good strawberries at your gar-dayne in Holborne, I require you let us have a messe of them.' It is remarkable that this bishop (Morton) is supposed to have furnished Sir Thomas More with the materials of his history, if he was not the original author of it. See Preface to More's Life of Richard III
ed. 1921.

7 I. e. semblance, appearance.

8 For foot-cloth see note on King Henry VI. Part 2
Act iv. Sc. 7. A foot-cloth horse was a palfrey covered with such housings, used for state; and was the usual mode of conveyance for the rich, at a period when carriages were unknown.

This is from Holinshed, who copies Sir Thomas
More:—'In riding toward the Tower the same morning in which he [Hastings] was beheaded, his horse twice or thrice stumbled with him, almost to the falling;
which thing, albeit each man wot well daily happeneth to them to whom no such mischance is toward: yet hath it bene of an old rite and custome observed as a token oftentimes notable foregoing some great misfortune.'

As too triumphing, how mine enemies,
To-day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,
And I myself secure in grace and favour.
O, Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy curse
Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Cats. Despatch, my lord, the duke would be at dinner;

Make a short shrift, he longs to see your head.

Hast. O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,¹
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast;
Ready, with every nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, despatch; 'tis bootless to exclaim.

Hast. O, bloody Richard!—miserable England!
I prophesy the fearfulst time to thee,
That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.
Come, lead me to the block, bear him my head;
They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.²

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The Same. The Tower Walls. Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM, in rusty armour, and marvellous ill-favoured.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy colour?

Murder thy breath in middle of a word,—
And then again begin, and stop again,
As if thou wert distraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak, and look back, and pry on every side,
Fremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending³ deep suspicion: ghostly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time, to grace my stratagems.
But what, is Catesby gone?

Glo. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor and CATESBY.

Buck. Let me alone to entertain him.—Lord mayor,—

Glo. Look to the drawbridge there.

Buck. Hark, hark! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent for you,—

Glo. Look back, defend thee, here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocence defend and guard us!

Enter LOVEL and RATCLIFF,⁴ with HASTINGS'S Head.

Glo. Be patient, they are friends; Ratcliff, and Lovel.

Lov. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I lov'd the man, that I must weep.
I took him for the plainest harmless creature,
That breath'd upon the earth a Christian;
Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts:
So smooth he dash'd his vice with show of virtue,
That, his apparent open guilt omitted,—
I mean, his conversation⁵ with Shore's wife,—
He liv'd from all attainer of suspect.

William Lord Hastings was beheaded on the 13th of June, 1483. His eldest son by Catherine Neville, daughter of Richard Neville, earl of Salisbury, and widow of William Lord Bonville, was restored to his honours and estate by King Henry VII. in the first year of his reign. The daughter of Lady Hastings, by her first husband, was married to the marquis of Dorset, who appears in the present play.

² Those who now smile at me shall shortly be dead themselves.

³ i. e. pretending

⁴ The quarto has 'Enter Catesby with Hastings's Head.' For this absurd alteration, by which Ratcliff is represented at Pomfret and in London at the same time, it is probable the editors of the folio have to answer.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covertst shelter'd traitor

That ever liv'd.—Look you, my lord mayor,
Would you imagine, or almost believe,
(Were't not, that by great preservation
We live to tell it you,) the subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council-house,

To murder me, and my good lord of Gloster?

May. What! had he so?

Glo. What! think you we are Turks, or im-dels?

Or that we would, against the form of law,
Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death;
But that the extreme peril of the case,
The peace of England, and our persons' safety,
Enforc'd us to this execution?

May. Now, fair befall you! he deserv'd his death:
And your good graces both have well proceeded,
To warn false traitors from the like attempts.
I never look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with mistress Shore.

Buck. Yet had we not determin'd he should die,
Until your lordship came to see his end;
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Somewhat against our meaning, hath prevented:
Because, my lord, we would have had you heard
The traitor speak, and timorously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who, haply, may Miscostrue us in him, and wait his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall serve,

As well as I had seen, and heard him speak:
And do not doubt, right noble princes both,
But I'll acquaint our dutious citizens
With all your just proceedings in this case.

Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here,

To avoid the censures of the carping world.

Buck. But since you came too late of our intent,⁶
Yet witness what you hear we did intend:
And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

[Exit Lord Mayor.]

Glo. Go after, after, cousin Buckingham.
The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post:—
There, at your meekest vantage of the time,
Infer the bastardy of Edward's children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying—he would make his son
Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed his house,
Which, by the sign thereof, was termed so.⁷
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite in change of lust;
Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters,
wives,

Even where his lustful eye, or savage heart,
Without control, list'd to make his prey.
Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person:—
Tell them when that my mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had wars in France;
And, by just computation of the time,
Found, that the issue was not his begot;
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke my father:
Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere far off;
Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord; I'll play the orator,

⁵ i. e. familiar intercourse: what is now called 'criminal conversation.'

⁶ 'Too late of our intent.' In common speech a similar phrase is sometimes used; viz. 'to come short of a thing.' Mason would have changed it to for.

⁷ This person was one Walker, a substantial citizen and grocer, at the Crozon in Cheapside. These topics of Edward's cruelty, lust, unlawful marriage, &c. are enlarged upon in that most extraordinary invective, the petition presented to Richard before his accession, which was afterwards turned into an act of parliament. Parl. Hist. 2. p. 396. See also the duke of Buckingham's speech to the citizens in More's History, as copied by the Chronicles.

As if the golden fee, for which I plead,
Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu.

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's castle.¹

Where you shall find me well accompanied,
With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and, towards three or four o'clock,
Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit BUCKINGHAM.]

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to doctor Shaw,— Go thou [To CAT.], to friar Penker;—bid them both Meet me, within this hour, at Baynard's Castle.

[Enter LOVEL and CATESBY.]

Now will I in, to take some privy order
To draw the brats of Clarence² out of sight;
And to give notice, that no manner of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. [Exit.]

SCENE VI. A Street. Enter a Scrivener.

Scriv. Here is the indictment of the good Lord
Hastings;

Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd,
That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's.
And mark how well the sequel hangs together:—
Eleven hours I have spent to write it over,
For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me;
The precedent³ was full as long a doing:
And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd,
Untainted, unexamined, free, at liberty.
Here's a good world the while!—Who is so gross,
That cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says—he sees it not?
Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such bad dealing must be seen in thought.⁴

[Exit.]

SCENE VII. The same. Court of Baynard's Castle. Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM, meeting.

Glo. How now, how new? what say the citizens?

Buck. Now by the holy mother of our Lord,
The citizens are mum, say not a word.

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children?

Buck. I did; with his contract with Lady Lacy,⁵
And his contract by deputy in France:
The insatiate greediness of his desires,
And his enforcement of the city wives;
His tyranny for trifles; his own bastardy,—
As being got, your father then in France;⁶
And his resemblance, being not like the duke,
Withal, I did infer your lineaments,—
Being the right idea of your father,

Both in your form and nobleness of mind;
Laid open all your victories in Scotland,
Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace,
Your bounty, virtue, fair humility;
Indeed, left nothing, fitting for your purpose,
Untouch'd, or slightly handled, in discourse.
And, when my oratory grew to an end,
I bade them, that did love their country's good,
Cry—God save Richard, England's royal king!

Glo. And did they so?

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a word
But, like dumb statues,⁷ or breathless stones,
Star'd on each other, and look'd deadly pale.
Which when I saw, I reprehended them;
And ask'd the mayor what meant this wilful silence;
His answer was—the people were not us'd
To be spoke to, but by the recorder.

Then he was urg'd to tell my tale again:
*Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke infer'd;*⁸

But nothing spoke in warrant from himself.
When he had done, some followers of mine own,
At lower end o' the hall, hurl'd up their caps,
And some ten voices cried, God save King Richard!
And thus I took the vantage of those few,— Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends, quoth I;
This general applause, and cheerful shout,
Argues your wisdom, and your love to Richard:
And even here brake off and came away.

Glo. What monstrous blocks were they: Would they not speak?

Will not the mayor then, and his brethren, come?

Buck. The mayor is here at hand; intend⁹ some fear;

Be not you spoke with, but by mighty suit:
And look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll make a holy descent:
And be not easily won to our requests;
Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.

Glo. I go; And if you plead as well for them,
As I can say nay to these¹⁰ for myself,
No doubt we'll bring it to a happy issue.

Buck. Go, go, up to the leads: the lord mayor knocks. [Exit GLOSTER.]

Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord; I dance attendance here
I think, the duke will not be spoke withal.—

Enter, from the Castle, CATESBY.

Now, Catesby! what says your lord to my request?

Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble lord,
To visit him to-morrow, or next day:
He is within, with two right reverend fathers, his concubine. Edward, however, had been married to Lady Eleanor Butler, widow of Lord Butler of Sudely, and daughter to the great earl of Shrewsbury. On this ground his children were declared illegitimate by the only parliament assembled by King Richard III.; but no mention was made of Elizabeth Lucy.

⁶ This tale is supposed to have been first propagated by the duke of Clarence when he obtained a settlement of the crown on himself and his issue after the death of Henry VI. Sir Thomas More says that the duke of Gloucester, soon after Edward's death, revived this scandal.
Walpole thinks it highly improbable that Richard should have urged such a topic to the people, or 'start doubts of his own legitimacy, which was too much connected with that of his brothers, to be tossed and bandied about before the multitude.' He has also shown that Richard 'lived in perfect harmony with his mother, and lodged with her in her palace at this very time.'—Historical Doubts, 4to. 1768.

⁷ It would not be difficult (says Mr. Reed) to fill whole pages with instances to prove that statue was formerly a word of three syllables; and there are several passages in Shakespeare where it is necessary so to pronounce it. It has been thought advisable in these instances to adhere to the old orthography, statua, which distinguishes it as a trisyllable, as in the present instance.

⁸ Pretend.

⁹ Buckingham is to plead for the citizens; and if (says Richard) you speak for them as plausibly as I in my own person, or for my own purposes shall seem to deny your suit, there is no doubt we shall bring all to a happy issue.

¹ Baynard's Castle was originally built by Baynard, a nobleman who (according to Stowe) came in with the conqueror. It had belonged to Richard duke of York, but was now Edward the Fifth's. This edifice, which stood in Thames Street, has been long pulled down; it is said that parts of its strong foundations may be seen at low water.

² Edward Earl of Warwick, who, the day after the battle of Bosworth, was sent by Richard from his confinement at Sheriff-Hutton Castle to the Tower, without even the shadow of an allegation against him, and who was afterwards cruelly sacrificed to a scruple of Ferdinand king of Spain, who was unwilling to marry his daughter Katharine to Arthur prince of Wales while he lived, conceiving that his claim might interfere with Arthur's succession to the crown. He was beheaded in 1499. Margaret, afterwards married to Sir Richard Pole, the last princess of the house of Lancaster, who was restored in blood in the fifth year of Henry VIII. and afterwards, in the thirty-first year of his reign [1540,] barbarously led to the block at the age of seventy, for some offence conceived at the conduct of her son Cardinal Pole.

³ I. e. the original draft from which the engrossment was made. This circumstance, like the others, in the play, is taken from Holinshed, who follows Sir Thomas More.

⁴ I. e. seen in silence, without notice or detection.

⁵ The king had been familiar with this lady before his marriage, to obstruct which his mother alleged a precontract between them. But Elizabeth Lucy, being sworn to speak the truth, declared that the king had not been affianced to her, though she owned she had been

Divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suit would he be mov'd,
To draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke;

Tell him, myself, the mayor and aldermen,
In deep designs, in matter of great moment,
No less importing than our general good,
Are come to have some conference with his grace.
Cate. I'll signify so much unto him straight.

Buck. Ah, ha, my lord, this prince is not an Edward!

He is not lolling on a lewd day-bed,¹
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines;
Not sleeping, to engross² his idle body,
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul:
Happy were England, would this virtuous prince
Take on himself the sovereignty thereof:

But, sure, I fear, we shall ne'er win him to it.

May. Marry, God defend, his grace should say us nay!³

Buck. I fear, he will: Here Catesby comes again:—

Re-enter CATESBY.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?

Cate. He wonders to what end you have assembled

Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before.
He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am, my noble cousin should suspect me, that I mean no good to him:
By heaven, we come to him in perfect love;
And so once more return and tell his grace.

[Exit CATESBY.]

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them thence;
So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, in a Gallery above, between two Bishops. CATESBY returns.

May. See, where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen!

Buck. Two props of virtue for a christian prince,
To stay him from the fall of vanity:
And, see, a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man.—
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our request;
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion, and right-christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology;
I rather do beseech you pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Neglect the visitation of my friends.

But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure?

Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,

And all good men of this ungovern'd isle.

Glo. I do suspect, I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye;
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord; Would it might please your grace,

On our entreaties, to amend your fault!

Glo. Elsewhere breathe I in a Christian land?

Buck. Know, then, it is your fault, that you resign
The supreme seat, the throne majestic,
The sceptred office of your ancestors,

Your state of fortune, and your due of birth,
The lineal glory of your royal house,
To the corruption of a blemish'd stock:
Whilst, in the midstness of your sleepy thoughts
(Which here we waken to our country's good,)
The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her face defac'd with scars of infamy,
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants,⁴
And almost shoulder'd in the swallowing gulf
Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion.
Which to recure,⁵ we heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land:
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain:
But as successively, from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
For this, consorted with the citizens,
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace.

Glo. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speak in your reproof,
Best fitteth my degree or your condition:
If, not to answer,—you might haply think,
Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded
To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me;
If to reprove you for this suit of yours,
So season'd with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends.
Therefore,—to speak, and to avoid the first;
And, then in speaking, not to incur the last,— Definitely thus I answer you.

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert
Unmeritable, shuns your high request.
First, if all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As my ripe revenue and due of birth;
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty, and so many, my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my greatness,—
Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,—
Than in my greatness covet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my glory smother'd.
But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me;
(And much I need⁶ to help you, if need were;)
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay what you would lay on me,
The right and fortune of his happy stars,—
Which, God defend, that I should wring from him!

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace;

But the respects thereof are nice⁷ and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.

You say, that Edward is your brother's son;
So say we too, but not by Edward's wife:

For first he was contract to Lady Lucy,
Your mother lives a witness to his vow;
And afterwards by substitute betroth'd
To Bona, sister to the king of France.

These both put by, a poor petitioner,⁸
A care-craz'd mother to a many sons,
A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye,
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension and loath'd bigamy.¹⁰

⁵ Shoulder'd in has the same meaning as rudely thrust into.

⁶ Recover. The word is frequently used by Spenser; and both as a verb and a substantive by Lyly.

⁷ And I want much of the ability requisite to give you help, if help were needed.

⁸ Weak, silly.

⁹ See King Henry VI. Part III. Act III.

¹⁰ Bigamy, by a canon of the council of Lyons, A. D. 1274 (adopted by a statute in 4 Edw. I.), was made unlawful and infamous. It differed from Polygamy, or having two wives at once; as it consisted in either mar-

² Fatten, pamper.

³ This pious and courtly mayor was Edmund Shaw, brother to Doctor Shaw, whom Richard employed to prove his title to the crown from the pulpit at Paul's Cross.

⁴ Shakespeare seems to have remembered the text on which Dr. Shaw preached his remarkable sermon at St. Paul's Cross:—

'Bastard slips shall never take deep root.'

By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners call—the prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,¹
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proffer'd benefit of dignity:
If not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing time,
Unto a lineal true-derived course.

May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat you.
Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love.

Cats. O, make them joyful, grant their lawful suit.
Glo. Alas, why would you heap those cares on me?

I am unfit for state and majesty:—
I do beseech you, take it not amiss;
I cannot, nor I will not, yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it,—as in love and zeal,
Loath to depose the child; your brother's son;
As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse,²
Which we have noted in you to your kindred,
And equally, indeed, to all estates,—
Yet know, wher' you accept our suit or no,
Your brother's son shall never reign our king;
But we will plant some other in your throne;
To the disgrace and downfall of your house.
And, in this resolution, here we leave you;
Come, citizens, we will entreat no more.

[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and Citizens.]

Cats. Call them again, sweet prince, accept their suit;

If you deny them, all the land will rue it.

Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?
Well, call them again; I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties.

[Exit CATESBY.]

Albeit against my conscience and my soul.

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM and the rest.

Cousin of Buckingham,—and you sage, grave men,—
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, wher' I will, or no,
I must have patience to endure the load:
But if black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquaintance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof;
For God he knows, and you may partly see,
How far I am from the desire of this.

May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will say it.

Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title,—
Long live King Richard, England's worthy king!
All. Amen.

Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be crown'd?

Glo. Even when you please, since you will have it so.

Buck. To-morrow then we will attend your grace;
And so, most joyfully, we take our leave.

Glo. Come, let us to our holy work again.—

[To the Bishops.]

Farewell, good cousin;—farewell, gentle friends.³
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Before the Tower.

Enter on one side, QUEEN ELIZABETH, DUCHESS OF YORK, and MARQUIS OF DORSET; on the other, rying two virgins successively, or once marrying a widow. This is from Sir T. More, as copied by Hall and Holinshed.

² Phy.

³ To this act should probably be added the next scene, so will the coronation pass between the acts; and

ANNE, DUCHESS OF GLOSTER, leading LADY MARGARET PLANTAGENET, Clarence's young Daughter.*

Duch. Who meets us here?—my niece¹ Plantagenet

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster?
Now, for my life, she's wand'ring to the Tower,
On pure heart's love, to greet the tender prince.—
Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your graces both
A happy and a joyful time of day!

Q. Eliz. As much to you, good sister! Whither away?

Anne. No further than the Tower; and, as I guess,

Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.

Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks; we'll enter all together:

Enter BRAKENBURY.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes.—
Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the prince, and my young son of York?

Brak. Right well, dear madam: By your patience,

I may not suffer you to visit them;
The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary.

Q. Eliz. The king! who's that?

Brak. I mean, the lord protector.

Q. Eliz. The Lord protect him from that kingly title!

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
I am their mother, who shall bar me from them?

Duch. I am their father's mother, I will see them.

Anne. Their aunt I am in law, in love their mother:

Then bring me to their sights;² I'll bear thy blame,
And take thy office from thee, on my peril.

Brak. No, madam, no, I may not leave it so;³
I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me.

[Exit BRAKENBURY.]

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,

And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,
And reverend looker-on of two fair queens.—

Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster.

[To the DUCHESS OF GLOSTER.]

There to be crown'd Richard's royal queen.

Q. Eliz. Ah, cut my lace asunder!

That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead-killing news.

Anne. Despiteful tidings! O unpleasing news!

Dor. Be of good cheer!—Mother, how fares your grace?

Q. Eliz. O Dorset, speak not to me, get thee gone,

Death and destruction dog thee at the heels;
Thy mother's name is ominous to children:

If thou wilt outstrip death, go cross the seas,

And live with Richmond from the reach of hell.

Go, hie thee, hie thee, from this slaughter-house,

Lest thou increase the number of the dead;

And make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse,—

Nor mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.

Stan. Full of wise care is this your counsel, madam:—

Take all the swift advantage of the hours;
You shall have letters from me to my son

In your behalf, to meet you on the way:

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. O ill-dispersing wind of censure!—

there will not only be a proper interval of action, but the conclusion will be more forcible.—Johnson.

⁴ We have not seen this lady since the second scene of the first act, in which she promised to meet Richard at Crosby Place. She was married to him about the year 1473.

⁵ i. e. a grand-daughter. The words grandson or grand-daughter never occur in Shakespeare.

⁶ This is the phraseology of Shakespeare's time.

⁷ i. e. 'I may not so resign my office.'

O my accursed womb, the bed of death;
A cockatrice¹ hast thou hatch'd to the world,
Whose unavoyd'st eye is murderous!

Stan. Come, madam, come; I in all haste was sent.

Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.—

O, would to God, that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to sear² me to the brain!
Anointed let me be with deadly venom;
And die, ere men can say—God save the queen!
Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;
To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm.

Anne. No! why?—When he, that is my husband now,
Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corse;
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his hands,

Which issu'd from my other angel husband,
And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;
O, when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish,—Be thou, quoth I, accurs'd,
For making me, so young, so old a widow!
And, when thou wou'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;
And be thy wife (if any be so mad.)

More miserable by the life of thee,
Then thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!
Lo, ere I can repeat this curse again,
Even in so short a space, my woman's heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words,
And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse:
Which ever since hath held mine eyes from rest;
For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams³ was still awak'd.
Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu; I pity thy complaining.

Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours.

Dor. Farewell, thou woful welcomer of glory!

Anne. Adieu, poor soul, that tak'st thy leave of it!

Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee! [To DORSET.]

Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!— [To ANNE.]

Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee! [To Q. ELIZABETH.]

I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!
Eighty odd years⁴ of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.⁵

Q. Eliz. Stay yet; look back, with me, unto the Tower.—

Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babes,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls!
Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!
Rude ragged nurse! old sullen playfellow
For tender princes, use my babies well!
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room of State in the Palace. Flourish of Trumpets. RICHARD, as King upon his throne; BUCKINGHAM, CATESBY, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Buckingham,—

Buck. My gracious sovereign.

K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high, by thy advice,

And thy assistance, is King Richard seated:—

But shall we wear these glories for a day?

Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?

Buck. Still live they, and for ever let them last!

K. Rich. Ah, Buckingham, now do I play the touch.⁶

To try if thou be current gold, indeed:—

Young Edward lives;—Think now what I would speak.

Buck. Say on, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be king.

Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned liege.

K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'Tis so: but Edward lives.

Buck. True, noble prince.

K. Rich.

That Edward still should live,—true, noble prince!

Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull:

Shall I be plain? I wish the bastards dead;

And I would have it suddenly perform'd.

What say'st thou now? speak suddenly, be brief.

Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure.

K. Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes:

Say, have I thy consent, that they shall die?

Buck. Give me some breath, some little pause, dear lord,

Before I positively speak in this:

I will resolve your grace immediately.

[Exit BUCKINGHAM.]

Cats. The king is angry; see, he gnaws his lip.⁷

[Aside.]

K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools,

And unrespective boys:⁸ none are for me,

That look into me with considerate eyes;—
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.—

Boy,—

K. Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting gold

Would tempt unto a close exploit⁹ of death?

Page. I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty mind:

Gold were as good as twenty orators,
And will no doubt tempt him to any thing.

K. Rich. What is his name?

Page. His name, my lord, is—Tyrrel.

K. Rich. I partly know the man; Go, call him hither, boy.— [Exit Page.]

The deep-revolving witty¹⁰ Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels:

Hath he so long held out with me unmir'd,
And stops he now for breath?—well, be it so.—

Enter STANLEY.

How now, lord Stanley? what's the news?

Stan. Know, my loving lord,
The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled

To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby: rumour it abroad,
That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;

I will take order¹¹ for her keeping close.
Inquire me out some mean-born gentleman,

Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter:

[Exit.]

¹ Sorrow.

² To play the touch is to resemble the touchstone.

³ Several of our ancient historians observe that this was an accustomed action of Richard's, whether he was pensive or angry.

⁴ Unrespective, i. e. devoid of cautious and prudential consideration, inconsiderate, unregardful.

⁵ Secret act.

⁶ Witty was not at this time employed to signify a man of fancy, but was used for sagacity, wisdom, or judgment; or, as Baret defines it, 'having the senses sharp, perceiving or foreseeing quicklie.'

⁷ I. e. take measures.

¹ A serpent supposed to originate from a cock's egg.

² She seems to allude to the ancient mode of punishing a regicide, or other criminals, by placing a crown of iron heated red hot upon his head.

³ It is recorded by Polydore Virgil that Richard was frequently disturbed by terrible dreams. The veracity of that historian has been called in doubt; but Shakespeare followed the popular histories.

⁴ Shakespeare seems here to have spoken at random. The present scene is in 1483. Richard duke of York, the husband of this lady, had been then living, would have been but seventy-three years old, and we may reasonably suppose she was not older: nor did she go speedily to her grave; she lived till 1486.

The boy is foolish,¹ and I fear not him.—
Look, how thou dream'st!—I say again, give out,
That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:
About it: for it stands me much upon,²
To stop all hopes, whose growth may damage me.

[Exit CATESBY.]

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:—
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! But I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin.³
Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.—

Re-enter Page, with TYRREL.

Is thy name—Tyrrel?

Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient subject.

K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious lord.

K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?

Tyr. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies.

K. Rich. Why, then thou hast it; two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal⁴ upon:
Tyrrel, I mean those bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them,
And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.

K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come hither, Tyrrel;

Go, by this token:—Rise, and lend thine ear:

[Whispers.]

There is no more but so:—Say, it is done,

And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.⁵

Tyr. I will despatch it straight. [Exit.]

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind
The late demand that you did sound me in.

K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.

Buck. I hear the news, my lord.

K. Rich. Stanley, he's your wife's son:—Well, look to it.

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by promise,

For which your honour and your faith is pawn'd;
The earldom of Hereford, and the moveables,⁶
Which you have promised I shall possess.

K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife; if she convey Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

1 Shakespeare has here perhaps anticipated the folly of this youth. He was at this time, I believe, about ten years old, and we are not told by any historian that he had then exhibited any symptoms of folly. Being confined by King Henry VII. immediately after the battle of Bosworth, and his education being entirely neglected, he is described by Polydore Virgil, at the time of his death, in 1499, as an idiot; and his account, which is copied by Holinshed, was certainly a sufficient authority for Shakespeare's representation.

2 I. e. it is incumbent upon me.

3 I. e. in blood.

4 Step'd in so far, that should I wade no more

Returning were as tedious; &c. Macbeth.

5 "The best part of our chronicles, in all men's opinions, is that of Richard III. written as I have heard by Moore, but as most suppose by Sir Thomas More, sometime lord chancellor of England, where it is said, how the king was devising with Tyrrel to have his nephews privily murdered; and it is added, he was then sitting on a draught; a fit carpet for such a counsel." Sir James Tyrrel was executed for treason in the beginning of King Henry VII.

6 We should now say 'deal with,' but the other was the phraseology of Shakespeare's time.

7 The quarto has the following very characteristic line:—

'King. Shall we hear from thee, Tirril, ere we sleep?'

8 King Henry IV. married one of the daughters and coheirs of Humphrey Bohun, earl of Hereford; and the other was married to Thomas duke of Gloster, fifth son of King Edward III., who was created earl of Hereford.

Buck. What says your highness to my just request?

K. Rich. I do remember me,—Henry the Sixth Did prophesy, that Richmond should be king, When Richmond was a little peevish boy.

A king?—perhaps——

Buck. My lord,——

K. Rich. How chance, the prophet could not at that time,

Have told me, I being by,⁹ that I should kill him?

Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom,——

K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at Exeter,

The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle,
And call'd it—Rouge-mont:¹⁰ at which name, I started;

Because a bard of Ireland told me once,
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord,——

K. Rich. Ay, what's o'clock?

Buck. I am three bold

To put your grace in mind of what you promis'd me.

K. Rich. Well, but what is't o'clock?

Buck. Upon the stroke

Of ten.

K. Rich. Well, let it strike.

Buck. Why, let it strike?

K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack,¹¹ thou keep'st the stroke

Between thy begging and my meditation.

I am not in the giving vein to-day.

Buck. Why, then resolve me wh'er you will, or no

K. Rich. Thou troublest me; I am not in the vein.

[Exeunt KING RICHARD and TYRREL.]

Buck. And is it thus? repays he my deep service
With such contempt? made I him king for this?

O, let me think on Hastings; and be gone
To Brecknock,¹² while my fearful head is on. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. Enter TYRREL.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;

The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.

Dighton, and Forrest, whom I did suborn

To do this piece of ruthless butchery,

Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,

Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,

Wept like two children, in their death's sad story.

O thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle babes,——

Thus, thus, quoth Forrest, girdling one another

Within their alabaster innocent arms:

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk, in 1386, by King Richard II.; his only daughter Anne having married Edmund earl of Stafford. The duke of Buckingham, (who was the grandson of this Edmund and Anne,) had some pretensions to claim a new grant of the title, but he had not a shadow of right to the moiety of the estate, which, if it devolved to King Edward IV. with the crown, was now the property of his children, or otherwise belonged to the right heirs of King Henry IV. Many of our historians, however, ascribe the breach between him and Richard, to Richard's refusing to restore him the moiety of the Hereford estate; and Shakespeare has followed them.

8 The duke of Gloster, according to the former play, was not by when King Henry uttered the prophecy, but the poet does not often trouble himself about such minute points of accuracy.

9 Hooker, who wrote in Queen Elizabeth's time, in his description of Exeter, mentions this as a 'very old and ancient castle, named Rugemont; that is to say, Red Hill, taking the name of the red soil or earth wherupon it is situated.' It was first built, he adds, as some think, by Julius Cæsar, but rather, and in truth, by the Romans after him.

10 This alludes to the jack of the clock house, mentioned before in King Richard II. Act v. Sc. 3. It was a figure made in old public clocks to strike the bell on the outside; of the same kind as those still preserved at St Dunstan's church in Fleet Street. Richard compares Buckingham to one of the automaton, and bids him not to suspend the stroke on the clock bell, but strike, that the noise may be past, and himself at liberty to pursue his meditations. Jack was a term of contempt, occurring before in this play.

11 His castle in Wales

*Which, in their summer beauty, kiss'd each other.
A book of prayers on their pillow lay;
Which once, quoth Forrest, almost chang'd my mind;
But, O, the devil—there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on,—we smothered
The most replenish'd sweet work of nature,
That, from the prime creation, e'er she fram'd.—
Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse,
They could not speak; and so I left them both,
To bear this tidings to the bloody king.*

Enter KING RICHARD.

And here he comes:—All health, my sovereign lord!

K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel! am I happy in thy news?

Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Beget your happiness, be happy then,
For it is done.

K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?

Tyr. I did, my lord.

K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel?

Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them;

But where, to say the truth, I do not know.

K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, at after supper,

When thou shalt tell the process of their death.
Mean time, but think how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.
Farewell, till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.]

K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I pen'd up close;

His daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage;
The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom,
And Anne my wife hath bid the world good night.
Now, for I know the Bretagne¹ Richmond aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And, by that knot, looks proudly on the crown,
To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter CATHERINE.

Cats. My lord,—

K. Rich. Good news or bad, that thou com'st in so bluntly?

Cats. Bad news, my lord; Morton² is fled to Richmond;
And Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welshmen,

Is in the field, and still his power increaseth.

K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near,

Than Buckingham and his rash levied strength.
Come,—I have learn'd, that fearful commencing
Is leader servitor to dull delay;³
Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king!
Go, master men: My counsel is my shield;
We must be brief, when traitors brave the field.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. The same. Before the Palace. Enter QUEEN MARGARET.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.⁴
Here in these confines sily have I lurk'd,
To watch the waning of mine enemies.

1 He thus denominates Richmond, because after the battle of Tewksbury he had taken refuge in the court of Francis II. duke of Bretagne, where by the procurement of Edward IV. he was kept a long time in honourable custody.

2 Bishop of Ely.

3 Timorous thought and cautious disquisition are the dull attendants on delay.

4 ——— now is his fate grown mellow,
Instant to fall into the rotten jaws
Of chap-fall'n death.

Marston's Antonio and Melida, 1602.

King Richard III. was printed in 1597, Marston is therefore the imitator.

5 Induction is preface, introduction, or prologue.

6 In the third scene of the first act Margaret was re-

A dire induction⁵ am I witness to,
And will to France; hoping, the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret! who comes here?

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH and the DUCHESS of YORK.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!

My unblown flowers, new appearing sweets!

If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation!

Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right to: right!

Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night.

Duch. So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woo-weary'd tongue is still and mute,—
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?

Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,
Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.

Q. Eliz. Wilt thou, O God, fly from such gentle lambs,

And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?

When didst thou sleep, when such a deed was done?

Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son.

Duch. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal-living ghost,

Woe's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life usurp'd,

Brief abstract and record of tedious days,
Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth,

[Sitting down.]

Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!

Q. Eliz. Ah, that thou would'st as soon afford a grave,

As thou canst yield a melancholy seat;

Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here!

Ah, who hath any cause to mourn, but we?

[Sitting down by her.]

Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give mine the benefit of seniority,⁷
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.

If sorrow can admit society,⁸ [Sitting down with them.]

Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:—

I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;

I had a husband, till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.

Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill him;

I had a Rutland too, thou holp'st to kill him.

Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him;

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell hound, that doth hunt us all to death:

That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,

To worry lambs, and lap their gentle blood;

That foul defacer of God's handy work;

That excellent gall'd tyrant of the earth,

That reigns in gall'd eyes of weeping souls,

Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.—

O upright, just, and true disposing God,

How do I thank thee, that this carnal⁹ cur proceeded with the murder of young Rutland, and the death of her husband and son were impudently to divine vengeance roused by that wicked act. 'So just is God to right the innocent.' Margaret now, perhaps, means to say, 'The right of me, an injured mother, whose son was slain at Tewksbury, has now operated as powerfully as that right which the death of Rutland gave you to divine justice, and has destroyed your children in their turn.'

7 Seniority.

8 Vide Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 2:—

'Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts.'

Its apparent signification is cruel, sanguinary, fleshly minded.

Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
And makes her pew-fellow¹ with others' moan!

Duch. O, Harry's wife, triumph not in my woes;
God witness with me, I have wept for thine.

Q. Mar. Bear with me, I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward;
Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;
Young York he is but boot,² because both they Match not the high perfection of my loss.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward;
And the beholders of this tragic play,
The adulterate³ Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves.
Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligencer;
Only reserv'd their factor, to buy souls,
And send them thither: But at hand, at hand,
Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,
To have him suddenly convey'd from hence:—
Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray,
That I may live to say, The dog is dead!

Q. Eliz. O, thou didst prophesy, the time would come,

That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottled spider, that foul bunch-back'd toad.

Q. Mar. I call'd thee then, vain flourish of my fortune;

I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen;
The presentation of but what I was,
The flattering index⁴ of a direful pageant,
One heav'd a high, to be hurl'd down below:
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast; a garish⁵ flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou joy?
Who sues, and kneels, and says—God save the queen?

Where be the bending peers that flatter'd thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?
Decline all this,⁶ and see what now thou art.
For happy wife, a most distressed widow;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For one being sued to, one that humbly sues;
For queen, a very caulf⁷ crown'd with care;
For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;
For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one;
For one commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou wert,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art.
Thou didst usurp my place. And dost thou not Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?
Now thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;
From which even here I slip my wearied head,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.
Farewell, York's wife,—and queen of sad mis-chance,—

These English woes shall make me smile in France.

1 I. e. partaker of or participator in the grief of others. The word appears to have been used metaphorically for an equal, a companion, or old and intimate acquaintance.

2 I. e. thrown into the bargain.

3 Adulterate is stained with adultery. Adulterate, Lat.

4 See note on Hamlet, Act III. Sc. 4:—

5 what act

That roars so loud and thunders in the index?
Mr. Nares suggests that the index of a pageant was probably a painted cloth hung up before a booth where a pageant was to be exhibited.

6 Alluding to the dangerous situation of those persons to whose care the standards of armies were entrusted.

7 I. e. run through all this from first to last.

8 Fast has no connection with the preceding word forbear; the meaning being sleep not at night, and fast during the day.

9 Bettering is amplifying, magnifying thy loss.

Q. Eliz. O thou well skill'd in curses, stay a while.
And teach me how to curse mine enemies.

Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast the day;

Compare dead happiness with living woe:

Think that thy babes were fairer than they were,

And he, that slew them, fouler than he is:

Nettling¹⁰ thy loss makes the bad causer worse,

Revolving this will teach thee how to curse.

Q. Eliz. My words are dull, O, quicken them with mine!

Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like mine. [Exit Q. MARGARET.]

Duch. Why should calamity be full of words?

Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client woes,

Airy succeders of intestate joys,¹⁰

Poor breathing orators of miseries!

Let them have scope: though what they do impart

Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart.¹¹

Duch. If so, then be not tongue-ty'd: go with me,

And in the breath of bitter words let's smother

My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smother'd.

[Drum within.]

I hear his drum,—be copious in exclams.

Enter KING RICHARD, and his Train, marching

K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition?

Duch. O, she, that might have intercepted thee,

By strangling thee in her accursed womb,

From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.

Q. Eliz. Hid'st thou that forehead with a golden crown,

Where should be branded, if that right were right,

The slaughter of the prince that ow'd that crown,

And the dire death of my poor sons, and brothers?

Tell me, thou villain slave, where are my children?

Duch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother Clarence?

And little Ned Plantagenet, his son?

Q. Eliz. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan,

Grey?

Duch. Where is kind Hastings?

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets!—strike alarum,

drums!

Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women

Rail on the Lord's anointed: Strike, I say.—

[Flourish. Alarums]

Either be patient and entreat me fair,

Or with the clamorous report of war

Thus will I drown your exclamations.

Duch. Art thou my son?

K. Rich. Ay; I thank God, my father, and yourself.

Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience.

K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition.¹²

That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

Duch. O, let me speak.

K. Rich.

Do, then; but I'll not hear.

Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my words.

K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste.

Duch. Art thou so hasty? I have staid for thee,
God knows, in torment and in agony.

K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

Duch. No, by the holy rod, that know'st it well,
Thou can'st on earth to make the earth my hell.

Shakspeare employed the word for the sake of the antithesis between better and loss.

9 Thus in Venus and Adonis:—

So of concealed sorrow may be said:

Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage;

But when the heart's attorney once is mute,

The client breaks as desperate of his suit.

10 The meaning of this harsh metaphor is: The joys already possessed being all consumed and passed away, are supposed to have died intestate; that is, to have made no will, having nothing to bequeath: and more verbal complaints are their successors, but inherit no thing but misery.

11 Give sorrow words: the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.

Macbeth.

12 A spice or particle of your disposition.

A grievous burden was thy birth to me;
Tetchy¹ and wayward was thy infancy;
Thy school-days, frightful, desperate, wild, and furious;
Thy prime of manhood, daring, bold, and venturesome;
Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody,
More mid, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred:
What comfortable hour canst thou name,
That ever grac'd me in thy company?

K. Rich. 'Faith, none, but Humphrey Hour,² that call'd your grace
To breakfast once, forth of my company.
If I be so disgracious in your sight,
Let me march on, and not offend you, madam.—
Strike up the drum.

Duch. I pr'ythee, hear me speak.
K. Rich. You speak too bitterly.
Duch. Hear me a word;
For I shall never speak to thee again.

K. Rich. So.
Duch. Either thou wilt die, by God's just ordinance,
Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror;
Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish,
And never look upon thy face again.
Therefore take with thee my most heavy curse;
Which, in the day of battle, tire thee more,
Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!
My prayers on the adverse party fight;
And there the little souls of Edward's children
Whisper the spirits of thine enemies,
And promise them success and victory.
Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end;
Shame serves³ thy life, and doth thy death attend.

[Exit.]
Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse
Abides in me; I say amen to her. [Going.]

K. Rich. Stay, madam, I must speak a word with you.

Q. Eliz. I have no more sons of the royal blood
For thee to murder: for my daughters, Richard,—
They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens;
And therefore level not to hit their lives.

K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd—Elizabeth,
Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious.

Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O, let her live,
And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty?
Slander myself, as false to Edward's bed;
Throw over her the veil of infamy;
So she may live unscar'd of bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter.

K. Rich. Wrong not her birth, she is of royal blood.

Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say she is not so.

K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth.

Q. Eliz. And only in that safety died her brothers.

K. Rich. Lo, at their births, good stars were opposite.

Q. Eliz. No, to their lives bad friends were contrary.

K. Rich. All unavoided⁴ is the doom of destiny.

Q. Eliz. True, when avoided grace makes destiny:

My babes were destin'd to a fairer death,
If grace had bless'd⁵ thee with a fairer life.

K. Rich. You speak, as if that I had slain my cousins.

Q. Eliz. Cousins, indeed; and by their uncle cozen'd

Of comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life.
Whose hands soever lanc'd their tender hearts,
Thy head, all indirectly, gave direction:

No doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt,
Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart,⁶
To revel in the entrails of my lambs.
But that still⁷ use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes:
And I, in such a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.

K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprise,
And dangerous success of bloody wars,
As I intend more good to you and yours,
Than ever you or yours by me were harm'd!

Q. Eliz. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,

To be discover'd, that can do me good?

K. Rich. The advancement of your children, gentle lady.

Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads!

K. Rich. No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory.⁸

Q. Eliz. Flatter my sorrows with report of it;
Tell me, what state, what dignity, what honour,
Canst thou demise⁹ to any child of mine?

K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and all,
Will I withal endow a child of thine;
So in the Lethe of thy angry soul

Thou drown the sad remembrance of those wrongs,
Which, thou supposest, I have done to thee.

Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy kindness
Last longer telling than thy kindness' date.

K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul, I love thy daughter.

Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with her soul.

K. Rich. What do you think?

Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter, from thy soul:

So, from thy soul's love, didst thou love her brothers:
And from my heart's love, I do thank thee for it.

K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meanings:
I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter,
And do intend to make her queen of England.

Q. Eliz. Well then, who dost thou mean shall be her king?

K. Rich. Even he, that makes her queen: Who else should be?

Q. Eliz. What, thou?

K. Rich. Even so: What think you of it, madam?

Q. Eliz. How canst thou woo her?

K. Rich. That I would learn of you
As one being best acquainted with her humour.

Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me?

K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart.

Q. Eliz. Send to her, by the man that slew her brothers,

A pair of bleeding hearts; thereon engrave,
Edward, and York; then, haply, will she weep:

Therefore present to her,—as sometime Margaret
Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,—

A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain
The purple sap from her sweet brothers' body,

And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withal.
If this inducement move her not to love,

Send her a letter of thy noble deeds;
Tell her, thou mad'st away her uncle Clarence,

Her uncle Rivers; ay, and, for her sake,
Mad'st quick conveyance with her good aunt Anne.

² I know not what to make of this, unless we suppose with Steevens that it is an allusion to some affair of gallantry of which the duchess had been suspected. There is no mention of any thing of the kind in the Chronicles.

Malone conjectures that Humphrey Hour is merely used as a ludicrous periphrasis for hour, like Tom Trot, for truth, in Gabriel Harvey's Letter to Spenser.

There can hardly be any allusion to the phrase of 'dining with Duke Humphrey,' used to express those who dined upon air, or passed their dinner hour in ad-

Shakspeare.

no example of the use of the word, except in legal instruments, offers itself, I cannot help thinking we should read devise, with the second folio.

K. Rich. You mock me, madam; this is not the way

To win your daughter.

Q. Eliz. There is no other way;

Unless thou could'st put on some other shape,
And not be Richard that hath done all this.

K. Rich. Say, that I did all this for love of her?

Q. Eliz. Nay, then indeed, she cannot choose but hate thee,¹

Having bought love with such a bloody spoil.

K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now amended;

Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,

Which after hours give leisure to repent.

If I did take the kingdom from your sons,

To make amends, I'll give it to your daughter.

If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,

To quicken your increase, I will beget

Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter.

A grandam's name is little less in love,

Than is the doting title of a mother;

They are as children, but one step below,

Even of your mettle, of your very blood;

Of all one pain,—save for a night of groans

Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.²

Your children were vexation to your youth,

But mine shall be a comfort to your age.

The loss, you have, is but—a son being king,

And, by that loss, your daughter is made queen.

I cannot make you what amends I would,

Therefore accept such kindness as I can.

Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul,

Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,

This fair alliance quickly shall call home

To high promotions and great dignity:

The king, that calls your beauteous daughter,—wife,

Familiarly shall call thy Dorset—brother;

Again shall you be mother to a king,

And all the ruins of distressful times

Repair'd with double riches of content.

What! we have many goodly days to see:

The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,

Shall come again, transform'd to orient pearl:

Advantaging their loan, with interest

Of ten times double gain of happiness.

Go then, my mother, to thy daughter go;

Make bold her bashful years with your experience,

Prepare her ears to hear a wooer's tale;

Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame

Of golden sovereignty; acquaint the princess

With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys;

And when this arm of mine hath chastised

The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,

Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,

And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;

To whom I will retail³ my conquest won,

And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar.

Q. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father's

brother

Would be her lord? Or shall I say, her uncle?

Or, he that slew her brothers, and her uncles?

Under what title shall I woo for thee,

That God, the law, my honour, and her love,

Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?

K. Rich. Infer fair England's peace by this alliance.

Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still lasting war.

K. Rich. Tell her, the king, that may command, sutreats.

Q. Eliz. That at her hands, which the king's King forbids.⁴

K. Rich. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen.

Q. Eliz. To wait the title, as her mother doth.

K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlastingly.

Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title, ever, last?

K. Rich. Sweetly in force unto her fair life's end.

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last?

K. Rich. As long as heaven, and nature, lengthens it.

Q. Eliz. As long as hell, and Richard, likes of it.

K. Rich. Say, I, her sovereign, am her subject low

Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, leafless such sor'roigny.

K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her.

Q. Eliz. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.

K. Rich. Then in plain terms tell her my loving tale.

Q. Eliz. Plain, and not honest, is too harsh a style.

K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick.

Q. Eliz. O, no, my reasons are too deep and

dead;—

Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves.

K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam; that is past.

Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I, till heartstrings break.

K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown,—

Q. Eliz. Profan'd, dishonour'd, and the third usurp'd

K. Rich. I swear.

Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath.

Thy George, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

Thy garter, blenish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue;

Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory;

If something thou would'st swear to be believ'd,

Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd.

K. Rich. Now by the world,—

Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs.

K. Rich. My father's death,—

Q. Eliz. Thy life hath that dishonour'd.

K. Rich. Then, by myself,—

Q. Eliz. Thyself is self misus'd.

K. Rich. Why then, by God,—

Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.

If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,

The unity, the king thy brother made,

Had not been broken, nor my brother slain.

If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,

The imperial metal, circling now thy head,

Had grac'd the tender temples of my child;

And both the princes had been breathing here,

Which now, two tender bedfellows for dust,

Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms.

What canst thou swear by now?

K. Rich. By the time to come.

Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o'er-past;

For I myself have many tears to wash

Hereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.

The children live, whose parents thou hast slaugh-

ter'd,

Ungovern'd youth, to wait it in their age:

The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd!

Old barren plants, to wait it with their age.

Swear not by time to come; for that thou hast

Misus'd ere us'd, by times ill us'd o'er past.

K. Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repeat!

So thrive I in my dangerous attempt

Of hostile arms! myself myself confound!

Heaven, and fortune, bar me happy hours!

Day, yield me not thy light; nor, night, thy rest!

Be opposite all planets of good luck

To my proceeding, if with pure heart's love,

¹ Tyrwhitt suggested that the sense seemed to require we should read 'but love thee,' ironically. Mason proposed 'but Aene thee,' which Steevens admitted into the text. 'It is by no means evident that this is spoken ironically (says Mr. Boswell), and, if not, the old reading affords a perfectly clear meaning. A virtuous woman would hate the man who thought to purchase her love by the commission of crimes.'

² 'Endur'd of her for whom you bid like sorrow.' Of is used for by; bid is the past tense from bide.

³ i. e. recount.

⁴ She means that his crimes would render such a marriage offensive to heaven.

⁵ Young has borrowed this thought:—

'But say, my all, my mistress, and my friend,
What day next week the' eternally shall end'

Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter!
In her consists my happiness, and thine:
Without her, follows to myself, and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay:
It cannot be avoided but by this;
It will not be avoided but by this;
Therefore, dear mother (I must call you so,)
Be the attorney of my love to her.
Plead what I will be, not what I have been;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:
Urgo the necessity and state of times,
And be not peevish¹ found in great designs.

Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?

K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good.

Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself, to be myself?

K. Rich. Ay, if yourself's remembrance wrong yourself.

Q. Eliz. But thou didst kill my children.

K. Rich. But in your daughter's womb I bury them:

Where, in the nest of spicery,² they shall brood
Selves of themselves, to your recomforture.

Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.

Q. Eliz. I go.—Write to me very shortly,
And you shall understand from me her mind.

K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss, and so farewell.

[Kissing her. Exit Q. ELIZABETH.

Relenting fool, and shallow, changing—woman!³
How now? what news?

Enter RATCLIFF; CATESBY following.

Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy; to the shore
Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back;
'Tis thought, that Richmond is their admiral;
And there they hulk, expecting but the aid
Of Buckingham, to welcome them ashore.

K. Rich. Some lightfoot friand post to the duke of Norfolk:⁴

Ratcliff, thyself,—or Catesby; where is he?

Cate. Here, my good lord.

K. Rich. Catesby, fly to the duke.

Cate. I will, my Lord, with all convenient haste.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither; Post to Salisbury;

When thou com'st thither,—Dull, unmindful villain,
[To CATESBY.

Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the duke?

Cate. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness'
pleasure.

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

K. Rich. O, true, good Catesby;—Bid him levy straight

The greatest strength and power he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.

Cate. I go.

Rat. What, may it please you, shall I do at Salisbury?

K. Rich. Why, what would'st thou do there, before I go?

Rat. Your highness told me, I should post before.

Enter STANLEY.

K. Rich. My mind is chang'd.—Stanley, what news with you?

Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the hearing;

Nor none so bad, but well may be reported.

1 Foolish.

2 Alluding to the phoenix.

3 Such was the real character of this queen-dowager, who would have married her daughter to King Richard, and did all in her power to alienate the marquess of Dorset, her son, from the earl of Richmond.

4 Richard's precipitation and confusion is in this scene very happily represented by inconsistent orders and sudden variation of opinion.

5 Richard asks this question in the plenitude of power, and no one dares to answer him. But they whom he addresses, had they not been intimidated, might have

K. Rich. Heyday, a riddle! neither good nor bad!
What need'st thou run so many miles about,
When thou may'st tell thy tale the nearest way?
Once more, what news?

Stan. Richmond is on the seas.

K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him!

White-liver'd runagate, what doth he there?

Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.

K. Rich. Well, as you guess?

Stan. Sturr'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and Merton,

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.

K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword unsway'd?

Is the king dead, the empire unpossess'd?

What heir of York is there alive, but we?

And who is England's king, but great York's heir?

Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas?

Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.

K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege,

You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes.

Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear.

Stan. No, mighty liege; therefore mistrust me not.

K. Rich. Where is thy power then, to beat him back?

Where be thy tenants, and thy followers?

Are they not now upon the western shore,

Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?

Stan. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north.

K. Rich. Cold friends to me: what do they in the north,

When they should serve their sovereign in the west?

Stan. They have not been commanded, mighty
king:

Pleaseth your majesty to give me leave,

I'll muster up my friends; and meet your grace,

Where, and at what time, your majesty shall please.

K. Rich. Ay, ay, thou wouldst be gone to join with Richmond:

I will not trust you, sir.

Stan.

Most mighty sovereign,
You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful;

I never was, nor never will be false.

K. Rich. Well, go, master men. But, hear you, leave behind

Your son, George Stanley: look your heart be firm,
Or else his head's assurance is but frail.

Stan. So deal with him, as I prove true to you.
[Exit STANLEY.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire,
As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edward Courtenay, and the haughty prelate,
Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates, are in arms

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. In Kent, my liege, the Guildfords are in arms;

And every hour more competitors⁶
Flock to the rebels, and their power grows strong.

Enter another Messenger.

3 Mess. My lord, the army of great Buckingham—K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but songs of death?

[He strikes him.
There, take thou that, till thou bring better news.

3 Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty, told him that there was a male heir of the house of York alive, who had a better claim to the throne than be Edward earl of Warwick, the only son of the usurper's eldest brother, George duke of Clarence; but Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Edward IV. and all her sisters, had a better title than either of them. He had however been careful to have the issue of King Edward pronounced illegitimate; and as the duke of Clarence had been attainted of high treason, he had some colour for his bravado.

6 Competitors here means confederates.

Is,—that, by sudden floods and fall of waters,
Buckingham's army is dispers'd and scatter'd;
And he himself wander'd away alone,
No man knows whither.

K. Rich. O, I cry you mercy:
There is my purse to cure that blow of thine.
Hath any well-advised friend proclaim'd
Reward to him that brings the traitor in?

3 Mess. Such proclamation hath been made, my liege.

Enter another Messenger.

4 Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel, and lord marquis Dorset,

'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms.
But this good comfort bring I to your highness,—
The Bretagne navy is dispers'd by tempest:
Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,
If they were his assistants, yea, or no;
Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham
Upon his party: he, mistrusting them,
Hois'd sail, and made his course again for Bretagne.

K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up in arms;

If not to fight with foreign enemies,
Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. My liege, the duke of Buckingham is taken,
That is the best news; That the earl of Richmond
Is with a mighty power¹ landed at Milford,
Is colder news, but yet they² must be told.

K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury; while we reason here,

A royal battle might be won and lost:—
Some one take order, Buckingham be brought To Salisbury;—the rest march on with me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Room in Lord Stanley's House.
*Enter STANLEY and SIR CHRISTOPHER URWICK.*³

Stan. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me:—

That in the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frank'd⁴ up in hold;
If I revolt, off goes young George's head;
The fear of that withholds my present aid.
But, tell me, where is princely Richmond now?

Chris. At Pembroke, or at Ha'rford-west, in Wales.

Stan. What men of name resort to him?

Chris. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley;
Oxford, redoubt'd Pembroke, Sir James Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant crew;
And many other of great fame and worth:
And towards London do they bend their course,
If by the way they be not fought withal.

Stan. Well, hie thee to thy lord; commend me to him;

Tell him, the queen hath heartily consented

¹ The earl of Richmond embarked with about two thousand men at Harfleur, in Normandy, August 1, 1485, and landed at Milford Haven on the 7th. He directed his course to Wales, hoping the Welsh would receive him cordially as their countryman, he having been born at Pembroke, and his grandfather being Owen Tudor, who married Katharine of France, the widow of King Henry V.
² News was considered as plural by our ancient writers.
³ Sir Christopher Urwick, a priest, chaplain to the countess of Richmond, who was married to the Lord Stanley. This priest, the chronicles tell us, frequently went backwards and forwards, unsuspected, on messages between the countess of Richmond and her husband, and the young earl of Richmond, while he was preparing to make his descent on England. He was afterwards almoner to King Henry VII. and refused the bishopric of Norwich. He retired to Hackney, where he died in 1527, and his tomb he, I believe, still to be seen in the church there.

⁴ Vide note on p. 96, ante.

He shall espouse Elizabeth her daughter.
These letters will resolve him of my mind.

Farewell. [Gives papers to SIR CHRISTOPHER.]
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. *Salisbury.*⁵ An open Place. Enter the Sheriff, and Guard, with BUCKINGHAM, led to execution.

Buck. Will not King Richard let me speak with him?

Sher. No, my good lord; therefore be patient.

Buck. Hastings, and Edward's children, Rivers, Grey,

Holy King Henry, and thy fair son Edward,
Vaughan, and all that have miscarried
By underhand corrupted foul injustice;
If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction!
This is All-Souls' day, fellows, is it not?

Sher. It is, my lord.

Buck. Why, then All-Souls' day is my body's doomsday.

This is the day, which, in King Edward's time,
I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found
False to his children, or his wife's allies:
This is the day, wherein I wish'd to fall
By the false faith of him whom most I trusted;
This, this, All-Souls' day to my fearful soul,
Is the determin'd respite of my wrongs.⁶
That high All-seer which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest.
Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
To turn their own points on their masters' bosoms:
Thus Margaret's curse falls heavy on my neck,—
When he, quoth she, shall split thy heart with sorrow,
Remember Margaret was a propheteess.—

Come, sirs, convey me to the block of shame;
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.⁸
[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM, &c.]

SCENE II. Plain near Tamworth. Enter, with drum and colours, RICHMOND, OXFORD,⁹ SIR JAMES BLUNT,¹⁰ SIR WALTER HERBERT, and others, with Forces, marching.

Richm. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny,
Thus far into the bowels of the land
Have we march'd on without impediment;
And here receive we from our father Stanley
Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.
The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil'd your summer fields, and fruitful vines, Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough

In your embowell'd bosoms, this foul swine
Lies now even in the centre of this isle,
Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn:
From Tamworth thither, is but one day's march.

⁵ There is reason to think that Buckingham's execution took place at Shrewsbury, but this is not the place to discuss the question.

⁶ The reason why the duke of Buckingham solicited an interview with Richard is explained in King Henry VIII. Act I.

⁷ The time to which the punishment of his injurious practices or the wrongs done by him was respite.

⁸ Johnson thinks this scene should be added to the fourth act, which would give it a more full and striking conclusion. In the original quarto copy, 1597, this play is not divided into acts and scenes: Malone suggests that the short scene between Stanley and Sir Christopher may have been the opening of the fifth act.

⁹ John de Vere, earl of Oxford, a zealous Lancastrian, who, after a long confinement in Hammes Castle, in Picardy, escaped in 1484, and joined Richmond at Paris. He commanded the archers at the battle of Bosworth.

¹⁰ Sir James Blunt had been captain of the Castle of Hammes, and assisted Oxford in his escape.

In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

Oxf. Every man's conscience is a thousand swords.¹

To fight against that bloody homicide:

Herb. I doubt not, but his friends will turn to us.

Blunt. He hath no friends, but who are friends for fear;

Which, in his dearest need, will fly from him.

Richm. All for our vantage. Then, in God's name, march:

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings,
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Bosworth Field. Enter KING RICHARD, and Forces; the DUKE of NORFOLK, EARL of SURREY, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here is Bosworth field.—

My lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?

Sur. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.

K. Rich. My lord of Norfolk,—

Nor. Here, most gracious liege.

K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knocks: Ha! must we not?

Nor. We must both give and take, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Up with my tent: Here will I lie to-night;²

[Soldiers begin to set up the King's tent.
But where, to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that—
Who hath described the number of the traitors?

Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.

K. Rich. Why, our battalia trebles that account:³

Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,

Which they upon the adverse faction want.

Up with the tent.—Come, noble gentlemen,

Let us survey the vantage of the ground;—

Call for some men of sound direction:⁴—

Let's want no discipline, make no delay;

For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day. [Exeunt.]

Enter, on the other side of the Field, RICHMOND, SIR WILLIAM BRANDON, OXFORD, and other Lords. Some of the Soldiers pitch RICHMOND's Tent.

Richm. The weary sun hath made a golden set,

And, by the bright track of his fiery car,

Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.—

Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard.—

Give me some ink and paper in my tent;—

I'll draw the form and model of our battle,

Limit⁵ each leader to his several charge,

And part in just proportion our small power.

My lord of Oxford, you, Sir William Brandon,—

And you, Sir Walter Herbert, stay with me:

The earl of Pembroke keeps⁶ his regiment;—

Good Captain Blunt, bear my good night to him,

And by the second hour in the morning

Desire the earl to see me in my tent:

Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me,

Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?

Blunt. Unless I have mista'en his colours much

(Which, well I am assur'd, I have not done,)

His regiment lies half a mile at least

South from the mighty power of the king.

Richm. If without peril it be possible,

Sweet Blunt, make some good means⁷ to speak

with him,

And give him from me this most needful note.

Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it;

And so, God give you quiet rest to-night!

Richm. Good night, good captain Blunt. Come,

gentlemen,

Let us consult upon to-morrow's business;

In to my tent, the air is raw and cold.

[They withdraw into the Tent.]

Enter, to his Tent, KING RICHARD, NORFOLK, RATCLIFF, and CATESBY.

K. Rich. What is't o'clock?

Cate. It's supper time, my lord:

It's nine o'clock.

K. Rich. I will not sup to-night.—

Give me some ink and paper.—

What, is my beaver easier than it was?

And all my armour laid into my tent?

Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.

K. Rich. Good Norfolk, bid thee to thy charge;

Use careful watch, choose trusty sentinels.

Nor. I go, my lord.

K. Rich. Stir with the lark to-morrow, gentle

Norfolk.

Nor. I warrant you, my lord.

K. Rich. Ratcliff,— [Exit.]

Rat. My lord.

K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms

To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power

Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall

Into the blind cave of eternal night.—

Fill me a bowl of wine.—Give me a watch?⁸—

[To CATESBY.]

Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.—

Look that my staves⁹ be sound, and not too heavy.

Ratcliff,—

Rat. My lord?

K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy Lord Northumberland?¹⁰

Rat. Thomas the earl of Surrey, and himself, Much about cock-shut¹¹ time, from troop to troop, Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers.

1 Alluding to the proverb, 'Conscientie mille testes.'
2 Richard is reported not to have slept in his tent on the night before the battle, but in the town of Leicester.

3 Richmond's forces are said to have been only five thousand; and Richard's army consisted of about twelve thousand. But Lord Stanley lay at a small distance with three thousand men, and Richard may be supposed to have reckoned on them as his friends, though the event proved otherwise.

4 I. e. tried judgment, military skill.

5 Appoint.

6 Remains with.

7 I. e. contrive, take some pains or earnest measures.

8 By a watch is most probably meant a watch-light. The nature of which will appear from the following note of Sir Frances Kinaston upon Chaucer's Troilus and Cressida, in the very curious rhiming Latin Version of that poem which I possess in manuscript. 'This word [morter] doth plainly intimate Jeffery Chaucer to have been an equirer of the body in ordinary to the king, whose office it is, after he hath charged and set the watch of the guard, to carry in the mortar and to set it by the king's bed-side, for he takes from the cupboard a silver basin, and therein pourses a little water, and then sets a round cake of virgin wax in the midst of the basin, in the middle of which cake is a wick of bumstax, which being lighted burnes as a watch-light all night by the king's bed-side. It hath, as I conceive, the name of mortar for the likeness it hath when it is here consumed unto a mortar wherein you bray spices, for the flame first following the middle of the waxe cake, which is next unto it, the waxe by degrees, like the sands in a houre glasse, runs evenly from all sides to the middle to supply the wicke. This royal ceremony Chaucer wittily faines to be in Cresseld's bed-chamber, calling this kind of watch-light by the name of mortar, which very few courtiers besides equirers of the body (who only are admitted after all night is served to come into the king's bedchamber,) do understand what is meant by it.' Kinaston was himself equirer of the body to King Charles I. Barett mentions 'watching lamps, or candles; lucerna vigiles;' and watching candles are mentioned in many old plays. Steevens says that he has seen them represented in some of the pictures [qu. prints?] of Albert Durer.

9 I. e. the staves or poles of his lances. It was the custom to carry more than one into the field.

10 Richard calls him melancholy because he did not join heartily in his cause.

11 I. e. twilight. A cock shut was a large net stretched across a glade, and so suspended upon poles as easily to be drawn together, and was employed to catch woodcocks. These nets were chiefly used in the twilight of the evening, when woodcocks 'take wing to go and get water, flying generally low; and when they find any thoroughfare through a wood or range of trees, they venture through.' The artificial glade made for

K. Rich. So, I am satisfied. Give me a bowl of wine:

I have not that sacrilege of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.—
Set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?

Rat. It is, my lord.

K. Rich. Bid my guard watch; leave me.
About the mid of night, come to my tent,
And help to arm me.—Leave me, I say.

[*KING RICHARD retires into his Tent.
Enter RATCLIFF and CATESBY.*

RICHMOND'S Tent opens, and discovers him, and Officers, &c.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!

Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford,
Be to thy person, noble father-in-law!
Tell me, how fares our loving mother?

Stan. I, by attorney,¹ bless thee from thy mother,
Who prays continually for Richmond's good:
So much for that.—The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.

In brief, for so the season bids us be,
Prepare thy battle early in the morning;
And put thy fortune to the arbitrement
Of bloody strokes, and mortal-starting war,
I, as I may (that which I would, I cannot),
With best advantage will deceive the time,
And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms:
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Lest, being seen, thy brother tender George²
Be executed in his father's sight:

Farewell: The leisure³ and the fearful time
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love,
And ample interchange of sweet discourse,
Which so long sunder'd friends should dwell upon;
God give us leisure for these rites of love:
Once more, adieu!—Be valiant, and speed well!

Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment:
I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap;
Lest leaden slumber peise⁴ me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory:
Once more, good night, kind lords and gentlemen.

[Exeunt Lords, &c. with STANLEY.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye;
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory!
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping, and waking, O, defend me still. [Sleeps.

The Ghost⁵ of Prince Edward, Son to Henry the Sixth, rises between the two Tents.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To KING RICHARD.

Think, how thou stab'd'st me in my prime of youth
At Tewksbury; Despair therefore, and die!—
Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wrong'd souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.

them to pass through were called cock-roads. Hence cock-shut time and cock-shut light were used to express the evening twilight.

1 i. e. by deputation.

2 This is from Holinshed. The young nobleman, whom the poet calls George Stanley, was created Lord Strange in right of his wife by Edward IV. in 1459.

3 We have still a phrase equivalent to this, however harsh it may seem. 'I would do this if leisure would permit,' where leisure stands for want of leisure.

4 Weigh.

5 Thus in Romeo and Juliet—

'—thy eyes' windows fall

Like death.

6 The hint for this scene is furnished by Holinshed, who copies from Polydore Virgil. 'It seemed to him being asleep, that he saw diverse ymages like terrible devils which pulled and haled him, not suffering him to take any quiet or rest. The which strange vision

The Ghost of King Henry the Sixth rises.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my anointed body

[To KING RICHARD.

By thee was punch'd⁷ full of deadly holes:
Think on the Tower, and me; Despair, and die;
Harry the Sixth bids thee despair and die.—
Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror!

[To RICHMOND.

Harry, that prophesy'd thou should'st be king,⁸
Doth comfort thee in thy sleep; Live, and flourish!

The Ghost of Clarence rises.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To KING RICHARD.

I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome⁹ wine,
Poor Clarence, by thy guile betray'd to death!
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall'¹⁰ thy edgeless sword; Despair, and die!—
Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

[To RICHMOND.

The wrong'd heirs of York do pray for thee;
Good angels guard thy battle! Live, and flourish!

The Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan, rise.

Riv. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow,

[To KING RICHARD.

Rivers, that died at Peasbrot!¹¹ Despair, and die!
Grey. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!

[To KING RICHARD.

Vaugh. Think upon Vaughan; and, with guilty
fear,
Let fall thy lance! Despair, and die!—

[To KING RICHARD.

All. Awake! and think, our wrongs in Richard's bosom [To RICHMOND.

Will conquer him;—awake, and win the day!

The Ghost of Hastings rises.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake;

[To KING RICHARD.

And in a bloody battle end thy days!
Think on Lord Hastings; and despair, and die!—
Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!

[To RICHMOND.

Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!

The Ghosts of the two young Princes rise.

Ghosts. Dream on thy cousins smother'd in the Tower;

Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard,
And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and death!
Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and die.—

Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy!
Live, and beget a happy race of kings!
Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.

The Ghost of Queen Anne rises.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,

That never slept a quiet hour with thee,
Now fills thy sleep with perturbations:
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; Despair, and die!—

not so suddenly strike his heart with a sudden fear, but it stuffed his head with many busy and dreadful imaginations. And least that it might be suspected that he was abashed for fear of his enemies, and for that cause looked so piteously, he rected and declared to his familiar friends of the morning his wonderful vision and fearful dreams. The Legend of King Richard III. in the Mirror for Magistrates, and Drayton in the twenty-second Song of his Polyolbion, have passages founded upon Shakespeare's description.

7 The verb to punch, according to its etymology, was formerly used to prick or pierce with a sharp point.

8 See the prophecy in King Henry VI. Part III. Act iv. Sc. 6.

9 i. e. iseming or superabundant wine. Shakespeare seems to have forgot that Clarence was killed before he was thrown into the Malmsey butt, and consequently could not be washed to death.

10 Fall is here a verb active, signifying to drop or let fall.

Thou, quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep;

[To RICHMOND.]

Dream of success and happy victory;
Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

The Ghost of Buckingham rises.

Ghost. The first was I, that help'd thee to the crown;

[To KING RICHARD.]

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness!
Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death;
Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath!
I died for hope, ere I could lend thee aid:

[To RICHMOND.]

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd:
God, and good angels fight on Richmond's side;
And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

[The Ghosts vanish. KING RICHARD starts out of his dream.]

K. Rich. Give me another horse,—bind up my wounds,—

Have mercy, Jesu!—Soft: I did but dream.—
O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me!—
The lights burn blue.—It is now dead midnight.
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
What do I fear? myself? there's none else by:
Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.¹
Is there a murderer here? No.—Yes; I am:
Then fly,—What, from myself? Great reason:
Why?

Last I revenge. What? Myself on myself?
I love myself. Wherefore? for any good,
That I myself have done unto myself?
O, so: alas, I rather hate myself,
For hateful deeds committed by myself.
I am a villain: Yet I lie, I am not.
Fool, of thyself speak well:—Fool, do not flatter.
My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain.
Perjury, perjury, in the high'st degree,
Murder, stern murder, in the dir'st degree;
All several sins, all us'd in each degree,
Throng to the bar, crying all—Guilty! guilty!
I shall despair.—There is no creature loves me;
And, if I die, no soul will pity me:—
Nay, wherefore should they? since that I myself
Find in myself no pity to myself.
Methought, the souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent: and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter RATCLIFF.

Rat. My lord,——

K. Rich. Who's there?

Rat. Ratcliff, my lord; 'tis I. The early village cock

Hath twice done salutation to the morn:
Your friends are up, and buckle on their armour.

K. Rich. O, Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful dream!

What thinkest thou? will our friends prove all true?

Rat. No doubt, my lord.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, I fear, I fear,—

Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows.

K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows do might Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers,
Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.
It is not yet near day. Come, go with me;
Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
To hear, if any mean to shrink from me.

[Exit KING RICHARD and RATCLIFF.]

1 Buckingham's hope of aiding Richmond induced him to take up arms; he lost his life in consequence, and therefore may be said to have died for hope; hope being the cause which led to that event.

2 There is in this, as in many of the poet's speeches of passion, something very trifling, and something very striking. Richard's debate, whether he should quarrel with himself, is too long continued; but the subsequent exaggeration of his crimes is truly tragical.—Johnson.

RICHMOND wakes. Enter OXFORD and others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond.

Richm. 'Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,

That you have ta'en a tardy staggard here.

Lords. How have you slept, my lord?

Richm. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding dreams,

That ever enter'd in a drowsy head,
Have I since your departure had, my lords.
Methought, their souls, whose bodies Richard murder'd,

Came to my tent, and cried—On! victory!

I promise you, my heart is very jocund

In the remembrance of so fair a dream.

How far into the morning is it, lords?

Lords. Upon the stroke of four.

Richm. Why, then 'tis time to arm, and give direction.—

[He advances to the troops]

More than I have said, loving countrymen,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on: Yet, remember this,—
God, and our good cause, fight upon our side:
The prayers of holy saints, and wronged souls,
Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before our faces;
Richard except, those, whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win, than him they follow.
For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant, and a homicide;
One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made means³ to come by what he hath,
And slaughter'd those that were the means to help him;

A base foul stone, made precious by the fil
Of England's chair,⁴ where he is falsely set;
One that hath ever been God's enemy:
Then, if you fight against God's enemy,
God will, in justice, ward you as his soldiers;
If you do swear to put a tyrant down,
You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain;
If you do fight against your country's foes,
Your country's fit shall pay your pains the hire,
If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors;
If you do free your children from the sword,
Your children's children quit⁵ it in your age.
Then, in the name of God, and all these rights,
Advance your standards, draw your willing swords;
For me, the ransom⁶ of my bold attempt
Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face;
But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly and cheerfully;
God, and Saint George! Richmond, and victory!

[Exit.]

Re-enter KING RICHARD, RATCLIFF, Attendants, and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland, as touching Richmond?

Rat. That he was never trained up in arms.

K. Rich. He said the truth: And what said Surrey then?

Rat. He smil'd and said, the better for our purpose.

K. Rich. He was i'the right; and so, indeed, it is.

[Clock strikes.]

Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar.—

Who saw the sun to-day?

Rat. Not I, my lord.

K. Rich. Then he disdains to shine; for, by the book,

3 Made means here signifies made such interest, used such dissingenuous measures.

4 England's chair is the throne. The allusion is to the practice of setting gems of little worth, with a bright coloured foil under them.

5 Requite.

6 i. e. the fine paid by me in atonement for my rashness.

7 Saint George was the common cry of the English soldiers when they charged the enemy.

He should have brav'd! the east an hour ago:
A black day will it be to somebody.—

Ratcliff.—

Kat. My lord?

K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day;
The sky doth frown and lour upon our army.
I would, these dewy tears were from the ground.
Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me,
More than to Richmond? for the self-same heaven,
That frowns on me, looks sadly upon him.

Enter NORFOLK.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaunts in the field.

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle;—Caparison my horse;—

Call up Lord Stanley, bid him bring his power:—
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered.
My forward shall be drawn out all in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot;
Our archers shall be placed in the midst;
John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.
They thus directed, we ourself will follow
In the main battle; whose puissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
This, and Saint George to boot!—What think'st thou, Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.—
This found I on my tent this morning.

[Giving a scroll.]

K. Rich. Jacky of Norfolk, be not too bold, [Reads.]
For Dickon' thy master is bought and sold.

A thing devised by the enemy.—

Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge:
Let not our babbling dreams afflict our souls;
Conscience is but a word that cowards use,
Devil'd at first to keep the strong in awe;
Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.
March on, join bravely, let us to't pell-mell;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.—
What shall I say more than I have infer'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withal;—
A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and runaways,
A scum of Bretagne, and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and assur'd destruction.
You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest;
You having lands, and bless'd with beauteous wives,
They would restrain the one, detain the other.
And who doth lead them, but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost?

1 Stevens's notion is a strange one, that brav'd here means made it splendid or fine. The common signification of the old verb to brave was not what he states it to be—to challenge or set at defiance; but to look aloft, and go gaily, desiring to have the preeminence. This is old Baret's definition, which explains the text better than Mr. Stevens has done.

2 I. e. 'this, and superadd to this, Saint George on our side.' The phrase, like Saint George to borrow, which Holinshed puts into the mouth of Richard before the battle, is a kind of invocation to the saint to act as protector; Saint George to borrow meaning Saint George be our pledge or security.

3 Dickon is the ancient familiarization of Richard.

4 Company.

5 To restrain is to abridge, to diminish, to withhold from.

6 Thus Holinshed—'You see further, how a company of traitors, thieves, outlaws, and runagates, be aiders and partakers of this feast and enterprise. And to begin with the earl of Richmond, captain of this rebellion, he is a Welsh milk-sop, brought up by my smooth' means and mine, like a captive in a close cage in the court of Francis duke of Britaine,' p. 756. Holinshed copied this verbatim from Hall, edit. 1548, fol. 54; but his printer has given us by accident the word smoother instead of brother; as it is in the original, and ought to be in Shakespeare. In the first edition of Holinshed the word is rightly printed brother. So that this circumstance not only shows that the poet follows Holinshed, but points out the edition used by him.

7 Fright the skies with the shivers of your lances.

8 There was a large marsh in Bosworth plain between the two armies. Henry passed it, and made such a dis-

A milk-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow?
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives;
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd themselves:

If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Bretagues; whom our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, bob'd, and thump'd,
And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?
Ravish our daughters?—Hark, I hear their drum.

[Drum afar off.]

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen!
Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head!
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves!

Enter a Messenger.

What says Lord Stanley? will he bring his power?
Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off instantly with his son George's head.
Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the marsh;
After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom:

Advance our standards, set upon our foes;
Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,
Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!
Upon them! Victory sits on our helmets. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Another part of the Field. Alarum.
Excursions. Enter NORFOLK, and Forces; to him CATHERY.

Cate. Rescue, my lord of Norfolk, rescue, rescue!
The king enacts more wonders than a man,
Daring an opposite to every danger;
His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death:
Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarum. Enter KING RICHARD.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cate. Withdraw, my lord, I'll help you to a horse.
K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die:
I think, there be six Richmonds in the field;
Five have I slain to-day, instead of him:—
A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!!!

[Exeunt.]

position of his forces that it served to protect his right wing. By this movement he gained also another point, that his men should engage with the sun behind them, and in the faces of his enemies; a matter of great consequence when bows and arrows were in use.

9 I. e. daringly opposing himself, or offering himself as an opponent to every danger.

10 Shakespeare had employed this incident with historical propriety in the First Part of King Henry IV. He had here also good ground for his poetical exaggeration. Richard, according to Polydore Virgil, was determined if possible to engage with Richmond in single combat. For this purpose he rode furiously to that quarter of the field where the earl was; attacked his standard bearer, Sir William Brandon, and killed him; then assailed Sir John Cheney, whom he overthrew. Having thus at length cleared his way to his antagonist, he engaged in single combat with him, and probably would have been victorious, but at that instant Sir William Stanley with three thousand men joined Richmond's army, and the royal forces fled with great precipitation. Richard was soon afterwards overpowered by numbers, and fell, fighting bravely to the last moment.

11 In the old interlude on the subject of Richard III. which Mr. Boswell printed at the end of this play, this line stands:—

'A horse! a horse! a fresh horse!'

Burbage, the alter Roarius of Camden, appears to have been the original Richard. Bishop Corbet, in his her Boreale, introduces his host at Bosworth describing the battle, and

'— when he would have say'd King Richard died,
And call'd A horse! a horse! a horse!—he Burbage cried.'

Adram. Enter KING RICHARD and RICHMOND; and exeunt fighting. Retreat and flourish. Then enter RICHMOND, STANLEY, bearing the Crown, with divers other Lords, and Forces.

Richm. God, and your arms, be prais'd, victorious
friends;

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead.

Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquit thee!

Lo, here, this long usurped royalty,
From the dead temples of this bloody wretch
Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal;
Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say, amen, to all!—
But, tell me first, is young George Stanley living?

Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town;

Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us;

Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?

Stan. John duke of Norfolk, Walter Lord Ferrers,
Sir Robert Brakenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Enter their bodies as becomes their births.
Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled,

That in submission will return to us;

And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,

We will unite the white rose with the red:—

Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,

That long hath frown'd upon their enmity!—

What traitor hears me, and says not,—amen?

England hath long been mad, and scarr'd herself;

The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,

The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,

The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire;

All this divided York and Lancaster,

Divided, in their dire division.—

O, now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,

The true successors of each royal house,

By God's fair ordinance conjoin together!

And let their heirs (God, if they will be so),

Enrich the time to come with smooth-fac'd peace,

With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days!

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce¹ these bloody days again!
And make poor England weep in streams of blood!
Let them not live to taste this land's increase,
That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!
Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again;
That she may long live here, God say—Amen.

[Exeunt.]

THIS is one of the most celebrated of our author's performances; yet I know not whether it has not happened to him as to others, to be praised most when praise is not most deserved. That this play has scenes noble in themselves, and very well contrived to strike in the exhibition, cannot be denied. But some parts are trifling, others shocking, and some improbable.—JOHNSON.

Malone says, he 'agrees with Dr. Johnson in thinking that this play, from its first exhibition to the present hour, has been estimated greatly beyond its merits.'
He attributes (but I think erroneously) its popularity to the detestation in which Richard's character was held at the time that Shakspeare wrote, and to the patronage of Queen Elizabeth, 'who was pleased at seeing King Henry VII. placed in the only favourable light in which he could be placed on the scene.' Stevens, in the following note, has stated the true grounds of the perpetual popularity of the play, which can only be attributed to one cause—the wonderful dramatic effect produced by the character of Richard.—S. W. G.

I most cordially join with Dr. Johnson and Mr. Malone in their opinions; and yet, perhaps, they have overlooked one cause of the success of this tragedy.
The part of Richard is, perhaps beyond all others, variegated, and consequently favourable to a judicious performer. It comprehends, indeed, a trait of almost every species of character on the stage: the hero, the lover, the statesman, the buffoon, the hypocrite, the hardened and repenting sinner, &c. are to be found within its compass. No wonder, therefore, that the discriminating powers of a Burbage, a Garrick, and a Henderson, should at different periods have given it a popularity beyond other dramas of the same author.—STEEVENS.

the word, derived from its Latin original, reduco.

KING HENRY THE EIGHTH.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

IT is the opinion of Johnson, Stevens, and Malone, that this play was written a short time before the death of Queen Elizabeth, which happened on the 24th of March, 1602-3. The eulogium on King James, which is blended with the panegyric of Elizabeth in the last scene, was evidently a subsequent insertion, after the succession of the Scotch monarch to the throne; for Shakspeare was too well acquainted with courts to compliment, in the lifetime of Queen Elizabeth, her presumptive successor; of whom, history informs us, she was not a little jealous. That the prediction concerning King James was added after the death of the queen, is still more clearly evinced, as Dr. Johnson has remarked, by the awkward manner in which it is connected with the foregoing and subsequent lines.

After having lain by some years, unacted, probably on account of the coolness of its exhibition, it was revived in 1613, under the title of 'All is True,' with new decorations, and a new Prologue and Epilogue: and this revival took place on the very day, being St. Peter's, on which the Globe Theatre was burnt down. The fire was occasioned, as it is said, by the discharge of some small pieces of ordnance called chambers in the scene where King Henry is represented as arriving at Carlin-nal Wolsey's gate at Whitehall, one of which, being judiciously managed, set fire to the thatched roof of the theatre*. Dr. Johnson first suggested that Ben Jonson might have supplied the Prologue and Epilogue to the play upon the occasion of its revival. Dr. Farmer, Stevens, and Malone, support his opinion; and even attribute to him some of the passages of the play.

Mr. Gifford has controverted this opinion of Jonson having been the author of the Prologue and Epilogue of this play, and thinks the play which was performed under the title of 'All is True' was a distinct performance, and not Shakspeare's Henry the Eighth. To this it has been answered, 'That the Prologue, which has always accompanied Shakspeare's drama from its

* The circumstance is recorded by the continuator of Stowe; and in a MS. Letter of Thomas Lorkin to Sir
Thomas Puckering, dated London, this last of June, 1613, it is thus mentioned: 'No longer since than yesterday, while Bourage his company were acting at the Globe
the play of Henry VIII. and there, shooting of certayne chambers in the way of triumph, the fire caught, &c.
—MS. Harl. 7002.

So in a letter from John Chamberlaine to Sir Ralph Winwood, dated London, 5th July, 1613:—'But the burning of the Globe, or Playhouse, on the Bankside, on St. Peter's day, cannot escape you; which fell out by a peale of chambers (that I know not upon what occasion were to be used in the play), the tampion or stopple of one of them lighting in the thatch that covered the house, burn'd it to the ground in less than two hours, with a dwelling-house adjoining; and it was a great marvaile and faire grace of God that the people had so little harm, having but two narrow doors to get out at.'— Winwood's Memorials, vol. lii. p. 469.

The event is also recorded by Sir Henry Wotton, in his letter of the 2d of July, 1613, where he says, it was at 'a new play, acted by the king's players at the Bank's Side, called All is True, representing some principal pieces of the reign of Henry the Eighth.'—Reliquia Wotton, p. 425. Ed. 2d.

first publication in 1623, manifestly and repeatedly alludes to the title of the play which was represented on the 29th of June, 1612, and which we know to have been founded on the history of King Henry the Eighth, affords a strong proof of their ideazky, as appears by the following passages:—

— Such, as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too,' &c.

— Gentle readers know
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is,' &c.

'To make that only true we now intend.'

And though Sir Henry Wotton mentions it as a new play, we have Stowe and Lorkin who call it 'The play of Henry the Eighth.'

'That the Prologue and Epilogue were not written by Shakespeare is, I think, clear from internal evidence,' says Mr. Boswell; to whose opinion I have no hesitation in subscribing: but it does not follow that they were the production of Ben Jonson's pen. That gentleman has clearly shown that there was no intention of covertly sneering at Shakespeare's other works in this prologue; but that this play is opposed to a rude kind of farcical representation on the same subject by Samuel Rowley (see the first note on the Prologue). This play, or interlude, which was printed in 1606, is probably referred to in the following entry on the books of the Stationers' Company:—'Nathaniel Butts, Feb. 12, 1604,

That he got good allowance for the Enterlude of King Henry VIII. before he begin to print it; and with the wardens' hand to yt, he is to have the same for his copy.' Stowe has observed that 'Robert Greene had written somewhat on the same story'; but there is no evidence that it was in a dramatic form: it may have been something historical, and not by the dramatic poet of that name: as Stowe cites the authority of Robert Greene, with Robert Brun, Fabian, &c. in other places of his Chronicle.

This historical drama comprises a period of twelve years, commencing in the twelfth year of King Henry VIII. (1501), and ending with the christening of Elizabeth in 1533. The poet has deviated from history in placing the death of Queen Katharine before the birth of Elizabeth, for in fact Katharine did not die till 1536. In constructing his scenes he has availed himself largely of the eloquent narrative of Wolsey's faithful servant and biographer, George Cavendish, as copied by the Chronicles; and indeed the pathos of the Cardinal's dying scene is almost as effective in the simple narrative of Cavendish as in the play. The fine picture which the poet has drawn of the suffering and defenceless virtue of Queen Katharine, and the just and spirited, though softened, portrait he has exhibited of the impetuous and sensual character of Henry, are above all praise. It has been justly said that 'this play contains little action or violence of passion, yet it has considerable interest of a more mild and thoughtful cast, and some of the most striking passages that are to be found in the poet's works.'

PROLOGUE.

I COME no more to make you laugh; things now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it. Such, as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too. Those, that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree,
The play may pass; if they be still, and willing,
I'll undertake, may see away their shilling Richly in two short hours. Only they,
That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets; or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,

I. e. faced or trimmed. This long motley coat was the usual dress of a fool.

The Prologue and Epilogue to this play are apparently not by the hand of Shakespeare. They have been attributed to Ben Jonson; but this opinion is controverted by Mr. Gifford. The intention of the writer (says Mr. Boswell) was to contrast the historical truth and taste displayed in the present play with the performance of a contemporary dramatist. 'When you see me you know me, or the famous Chronicle of King Henry the Eighth, &c. by Samuel Rowley,' in which Will Summers, the jester, is a principal character. There are other incidents in this 'merry bawdy play,'

Will be deceiv'd: for, gentle hearers, know,

To rank our chosen truth with such a show

As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting

Our own brains, and the opinion² that we bring,

(To make that only true we now intend,)

Will leave us never an understanding friend,

Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known

The first and happiest³ hearers of the town,

Be sad, as we would make ye: Think, ye see

The very persons of our noble story,

As they were living; think, you see them great,

And follow'd with the general throng, and sweat,

Of thousand friends; then in a moment, see

How soon this mightiness meets misery!

And, if you can be merry then, I'll say,

A man may weep upon his wedding day.

besides the perversion of historical facts, which make it more than probable that it is here alluded to.

² Opinion seems here to mean character; as in King Henry IV. Part I. Act v. Sc. 4:—'Thou hast redeemed thy lost opinion.' To realize that opinion of character is our present object, not to forfeit it by introducing absurdities.

³ Happiest being here used in a Latin sense for propitious or favourable. 'Sis bonus o felixque tuis?' has been thought a reason for attributing this Prologue to Jonson; but we have shown that Shakespeare often uses words in a Latin sense.

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. An Antechamber in the Palace. Enter the DUKE OF NORFOLK, at one door; at the other, the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM, and the LORD ANSDEVANT.

Buckingham.

Good morrow, and well met. How have you done, Since last we saw in France?

Nor. I thank your grace: Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely ague Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when Those suns of glory,¹ those two lights of men, Met in the vale of Arde.

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde:² I was then present, saw them salute on horseback; Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung In their embracement, as³ they grew together; Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weigh'd

Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost The view of earthly glory: Men might say, Till this time, pomp was single; but now married To one above itself. Each following day Became the next day's master, till the last Made former wonders it's:⁴ To-day, the French, All clinkant,⁵ all in gold, like heathen gods, Shone down the English: and, to-morrow, they Made Britain, India: every man, that stood, Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were As cherubins, all gilt: the madams too, Not us'd to toil, did almost sweat to bear The pride upon them, that their very labour Was to them as a painting: now this mask Was cry'd incomparable; and the ensuing night Made it a fool, and beggar. The two kings, Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst, As presence did present them; him in eye, Still him in praise: and, being present both, 'Twas said, they saw but one; and no discerner Durst wag his tongue in censure.⁶ When these

(For so they phrase them) by their heralds chal- leng'd

The noble spirits to arms, they did perform Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous story,

Being now seen possible enough, got credit, That Bevis⁷ was believ'd.

Buck. O, you go far.

Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect In honour honesty, the tract of every thing

Would by a good discourser lose some life, Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal; To the disposing of it nought rebell'd, Order gave each thing view; the office did Distinctly his full function.⁸

Buck. Who did guide, I mean, who set the body and the limbs Of this great sport together, as you guess Nor. One, certes,¹⁰ that promises no element¹¹ In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord? Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion Of the right reverend cardinal of York.

Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is freed

From his ambitious finger. What had he To do in these fierce¹² vanities? I wonder, That such a keech¹³ can with his very bulk Take up the rays of the beneficial sun, And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir, There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends; For, being not propp'd by ancestry (whose grace Chalks successors their way), nor call'd upon For high feats done to the crown; neither allied To eminent assistants, but, spider-like, Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note, The force of his own merit makes his way; A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys A place next to the king.

Aber. I cannot tell What heaven hath given him, let some graver eye Pierce into that; but I can see his pride Peep through each part of him: Whence has he that?

If not from hell, the devil is a niggard; Or has given all before, and he begins A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil, Upon this French going-out, took he upon him, Without the privy of the king, to appoint Who should attend on him? He makes up the file¹⁴ Of all the gentry; for the most part such Too, whom as great a charge as little honour He meant to lay upon; and his own letter, The honourable board of council out, Must fetch him in the papers.¹⁵

Aber. I do know Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have By this so sicken'd their estates, that never They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O, many Have broke their backs with laying manors on them For this great journey.¹⁶ What did this vanity, But minister communication of A most poor issue?

Nor. Grievously I think, The peace between the French and us not values The cost that did conclude it.

1 George Nevill, who married Mary, daughter of Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham.

2 Pope has borrowed this phrase in his Imitation of Horace's Epistle to Augustus, ver. 32:—

'Those suns of glory please not till they set.'

3 Guynes then belonged to the English, and Arde (Ardes) to the French; they are towns of Picardy: the valley where Henry VIII. and Francis I. met lies between them.

4 As for as if.

5 Dies diem docet. Every day learned something from the preceding, till the concluding day collected all the splendour of all the former shows.

6 I. e. glittering, shining.

7 I. e. in judgment, which had the noblest appearance.

8 The old romantic legend of Bevis of Hampton. This Bevis (or Bevois) a Saxon, was for his prowess created earl of Southampton by William the Conqueror. See Camden's Britannia.

9 The course of these triumphs, however well related, must lose in the description part of that spirit and energy which were expressed in the real action. The commission for regulating them was well executed, and gave exactly to every particular person and action the proper place.

10 Certes, I. e. certainly, is here used as a monosyllable.

11 No imitation, no previous practice. Elements are the first principles of things, or rudiments of knowledge. The word is here applied, not without a catachresis, to a person.

12 Johnson remarks that fierce is here used, like the French fier, for proud.

13 A round lump of fat. The Prince calls Falstaff tallow-keech in the First Part of King Henry IV. Act II. Sc. 4. It has been thought that there was some allusion here to the Cardinal, being reputed the son of a butcher. We have 'Goodwife Keesch, the butcher's wife,' mentioned by Dame Quickly, in King Henry IV. Part II. Act II. Sc. 1.

14 List.

15 He papers, a verb; i. e. his own letter, by his own single authority, and without the concurrence of the council, must fetch him in whom he papers down. Wolsey published a list of the several persons whom he had appointed to attend on the king at this interview, and addressed his letters to them.

16 In the ancient Interlude of Nature, bk. I. no date, apparently printed in the reign of King Henry VIII. a similar stroke is aimed at this expensive expedition.

Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd,¹ was
A thing inspir'd : and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy.—That this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on't.

Nor. Which is bedded out ;
For France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants' goods at Bourdeaux.

Aber. Is it therefore
The ambassador is silenc'd ?²

Nor. Marry, is't.

Aber. A proper title of a peace,³ and purchas'd
At a superfluous rate !

Buck. Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.⁴

Nor. Like 't your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you (And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plementous safety,) that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potency
Together : to consider further, that
What his high hatred would effect, wants not
A minister in his power : You know his nature,
That he's revengeful ; and I know, his sword
Hath a sharp edge : it's long, and, it may be said,
It reaches far ; and where 'twill not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel, You'll find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that rock,

That I advise your shunning.

Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY (the purse borne before him), certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with papers. The CARDINAL in his passage fixes his eye on BUCKINGHAM, and BUCKINGHAM on him, both full of disdain.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham's surveyor ? ha ?
Where's his examination ?

1 Sec. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready ?

1 Sec. Ay, please your grace.

Wol. Well, we shall then know more ; and Buckingham
Shall lessen this big look.

[Exit WOLSEY and Train.]

Buck. This butcher's cur⁵ is venom-mouth'd, and I

Have not the power to muzzle him ; therefore, best
Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book
Out-worths a noble's blood.⁶

Nor. What, are you chaf'd ?
Ask God for temperance ; that's the appliance only,
Which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in his looks
Matter against me : and his eye revil'd
Me, as his object object : at this instant
He bores⁷ me with some trick : He's gone to the king ;

I'll follow, and outstare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord,
And let your reason with your choler question
What 'tis you go about : To climb steep hills,
Requires slow pace at first : Anger is like
A full-hot horse ; who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him.⁸ Not a man in England
Can advise me like you : be to yourself
As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king ;

And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence ; or proclaim,
There's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be advis'd ;
Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it doth singe yourself : We may outrun
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by overrunning. Know you not,
The fire, that mounts the liquor till it run o'er,
In seeming to augment it, wastes it ? Be advis'd :
I say again, there is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself ;
If with the sap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion.⁹

Buck. Sur,
I am thankful to you ; and I'll go along
By your prescription :—but this top-proud fellow, (Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but From sincere motions,¹⁰) by intelligence,
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel, I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not, treasonous
Buck. To the king I'll say it ; and make my vouch as strong

As shore of rock. Attend. This holy fox,
Or wolf, or both (for he is equal¹¹ ravenous,
As he is subtle ; and as prone to mischief,
As able to perform it : his mind and place
Infecting one another, yea, reciprocally,
Only to show his pomp as well in France
As here at home, suggests¹² the king our master
To this last costly treaty, the interview,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break¹³ the rinsing.

Nor. 'Faith, and so it did.

Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning cardinal

The articles¹⁴ of the combination drew,
As himself pleas'd ; and they were ratified,
As he cried, Thus let be : to as much end,
As give a crutch to the dead : But our count cardinal
Has done this, and 'tis well : for worthy Wolsey
Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows, (Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
To the old dam, treason,)—Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
(For, 'twas, indeed, his colour ; but he came To whisper Wolsey,) here makes visitation :
His fears were, that the interview, betwixt
England and France, might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice : for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him : He privily
Deals with our cardinal ; and, as I trow,
Which I do well ; for, I am sure, the emperor
Paid ere he promis'd ; whereby his suit was granted,
Ere it was ask'd ;—but when the way was made,
And pay'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd :—
That he would please to alter the king's course,
And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know
(As soon he shall by me,) that thus the cardinal
Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,¹⁵
And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry
To hear this of him ; and could wish, he were Something mistaken in't.

Buck. No, not a syllable ;
I do pronounce him in that very shape,
He shall appear in proof.

1 'Monday the xviii of June was such an Alduous storme of winde and weather, that many conjectured it did prognosticate trouble and hatred shortly after to follow between princes.'—Holinshed.

2 The French ambassador, being refused an audience, may be said to be silenc'd.

3 'A fine name of a peace' : this is ironically said.

4 Conducted.

5 The common rumour ran that Wolsey was the son of a butcher ; but his faithful biographer Cavendish says nothing of his father being in trade : he tells us that he was 'an honest poor man's son.'

6 That is, the literary qualifications of a bookish beggar are more prized than the high descent of hereditary greatness.

7 I. e. he stabs or wounds me by some artifice or fiction.

8 Thus in Massinger's Unnatural Combat :—

'Let passion work, and, like a hot-rein'd horse,
'Twill quickly tire itself.'

9 So in Hamlet :—

'Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprink'st cool patience.'

10 Honest indignation, warmth of integrity.

11 Equal for equality. 12 I. e. incites, or tempts.

13 To buy and sell was a proverbial expression for treacherously betraying.

Enter BRANDON; a Sergeant at Arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Bras. Your office, sergeant; execute it.

Ser.

Sir,

My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I Arrest thee of high treason, in the name Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo you, my lord,
The net has fall'n upon me; I shall perish
Under device and practice.¹

Bras. I am sorry
To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on
The business present.² 'Tis his highness' pleasure,
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing,
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me,
Which makes my whitest part black. The will of heaven

Be done in this and all things!—I obey.—
O my lord Abergavenny, fare you well.

Bras. Nay, he must bear you company:—The king
Is pleas'd, you shall to the Tower, till you know
How he determines further.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure
By me obey'd.

Bras. Here is a warrant from
The king, to attach Lord Montacute,³ and the bodies
Of the duke's confessor, John de la Car,⁴
One Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,—

Buck. So, so;
These are the limbs of the plot: no more, I hope.

Bras. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O, Nicholas Hopkins?⁵

Bras. He.

Buck. My surveyor is false, the o'ergreat cardinal
Hath show'd him gold; my life is spann'd⁶ already:
I am the shadow of poor Buckingham;
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts out,⁷
By dark'ning my clear sun.—My lord, farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The Council Chamber. Cornets.
Enter KING HENRY, CARDINAL WOLSEY, the Lords of the Council, SIR THOMAS LOVELL, Officers, and Attendants. The King enters, leaning on the Cardinal's shoulder.

K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart of it,
Thanks you for this great care: I stood i'the level⁸
Of a full charg'd confederacy, and give thanks
To you that chok'd it.—Let be call'd before us
That gentleman of Buckingham's: in person
I'll hear him his confessions justify;
And point by point the treasons of his master
He shall again relate.

The King takes his state. The Lords of the Council take their several places. The Cardinal places himself under the King's feet, on his right side.

A noise within, crying, Room for the Queen. Enter the Queen, ushered by the Dukes of NORFOLK and SURREY: she kneels. The King riseth from his state, takes her up, kisses, and placeth her by him.

Q. Kath. Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a sutor.

K. Hen. Arise, and take place by us:—Half your suit

Never name to us; you have half our power:
The other moiety, ere you ask, is given;
Repeat your will, and take it.

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty.
That you would love yourself; and, in that love,
Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor
The dignity of your office, is the point
Of my petition.

K. Hen. Lady mine, proceed.
Q. Kath. I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance: there have been commissions
Sent down among them, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties:—wherein, although,
My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, as putter on⁹
Of these exactions, yet the king our master (Whose honour heaven shield from soil!) even he escapes not

Language unmannerly, yea, such which breaks
The sides of loyalty, and almost appears
In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,
It doth appear; for, upon these taxations,
The clothiers all, not able to maintain
The many to them 'longing, have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who,
Unfit for other life, compell'd by hunger
And lack of other means, in desperate manner
Daring the event to the teeth, are all in uproar,
And Danger serves among them.¹⁰

K. Hen. Taxation!
Wherein? and what taxation?—My lord cardinal,
You that are blam'd for it alike with us,
Know you of this taxation?

Wol. Please you, sir,
I know but of a single part, in aught
Pertains to the state; and front but in that file.¹¹
Where others tell steps with me.

Q. Kath. No, my lord,
You know no more than others: but you frame Things, which are known alike; which are not wholesome

To those which would not know them, and yet must Performe be their acquaintance. These exactions, Whereof my sovereign would have note, they are Most pestilent to the hearing; and, to bear them,
The back is sacrifice to the load. They say,
They are devis'd by you; or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hen. Still exaction!
The nature of it? In what kind, let's know,
Is this exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturesome
In tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd
Under your promis'd pardon. The subject's grief Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his substance, to be levied
Without delay: and the pretence for this Is nam'd, your wars in France: This makes bold mouths:

Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze
Allegiance in them; their curses now
Live where their prayers did; and it's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave

⁶ I. e. measured, the duration of it determined. Man's life is said in scripture to be but a span long.

⁷ The old copy reads 'this instant sun puts on.'

⁸ To stand in the level of a gun, is to stand in a line with its mouth, so as to be hit by the shot.

⁹ I. e. promoter or instigator.

¹⁰ Warburton is full of admiration at this sudden rising of the poet 'to a height truly sublime' where by the noblest stretch of fancy Danger is personified as serving in the rebel army, and shaking the established government. Gower, Chaucer, Skelton, and Spenser have also personified Danger.

¹¹ He means to say that he is but one among many counsellors, who proceed in the same course with him in the business of the state. To this the queen replies, that he frames things, or they originate with him, which are afterwards known to the council and promulgated by them.

¹ I. e. treachery or unfair stratagem. This word has already been amply illustrated.

² I am sorry that I am obliged to be present, and an eye witness of your loss of liberty.

³ This was Henry Pole, grandson to George duke of Clarence, and eldest brother to Cardinal Pole. He had married Lord Abergavenny's daughter. Though respected for favour at this juncture, he was executed for another alleged treason in this reign.

⁴ The name of this monk of the Chartreux was John de la Car, alias de la Court. See Holinshed, p.
663.

⁵ Nicholas Hopkins, another monk of the same order, belonging to a religious house called Henton-beside-Bristow.

To each incensed will.¹ I would, your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no primer business.²

K. Hen. By my life,

This is against our pleasure.

Vol. And for me,

I have no farther gone in this, than by
A single voice; and that not pass'd me, but
By learned approbation of the judges. If I am Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither know
My faculties, nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing,—let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake;³
That virtue must go through. We must not stint
Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope⁴ malicious censurers; which ever,
As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow
That is new trimm'd; but benefit no further Than vainly longing. What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, once⁵ weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd;⁶ what worst, as oft,
Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at,
We should take root here where we sit, or sit
State statues only.

K. Hen. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from fear;
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?
A trembling contribution! Why, we take,
From every tree, lop, bark, and part o'the timber;
And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd,
The air will drink the sap. To every county,
Where this is question'd, send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied
The force of this commission; Pray, look to't;
I put it to your care.

Vol. A word with you.

[To the Secretary.

Let there be letters writ to every shire,
Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons
Hardly conceive of me; let it be nois'd,
That, through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you
Further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.⁸

Q. Kath. I am sorry, that the duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare speaker,⁹
To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for aid out of himself.¹⁰

Yet see

When these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd,¹¹ the mind growing once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd¹² amongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with ravish'd list'n'ing, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady,
Hath into monstrous habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black
As if besmear'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear

1 The meaning (says Malone) appears to be, things are now in such a situation that resentment and indignation predominate in every man's breast over duty and allegiance.

2 The old copy reads 'There is no primer business.' Warburton made the alteration, which Stevens seems to think unnecessary, though he has retained it in his text.

3 Thicket of thorns.

4 To stint is to stop or retard.

5 I. e. to engage with, to encounter.

6 Once is not unfrequently used for sometimes or at one time or other.

7 I. e. approved.

8 Hollinshed says that this surveyor's name was Charles Knyvet.

(This was his gentleman in trust) of him
Things to strike honour sad.—Bid him recount
The fore-recited practices; whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much
Vol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what
you,

Most like a careful subject, have collected
Out of the Duke of Buckingham.

K. Henry.

Speak freely.

Surv. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would infect his speech, That if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry¹³ it so
To make the sceptre his: These very words
I have heard him utter to his son-in-law,
Lord Abergarny; to whom by oath he menac'd
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Vol.

Please your highness, note

This dangerous conception in this point.

Not friended by his wish, to your high person
His will is most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you, to your friends.

Q. Kath.

My learn'd lord cardinal,
Deliver all with charity.

K. Hen.

Speak on:

How grounded he his title to the crown,
Upon our fail? to this point hast thou heard him
At any time speak aught?

Surv.

He was brought to this

By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. Hen.

What was that Hopkins?

Surv.

Sir, a Chartreux friar,
His confessor; who fed him every minute
With words of sovereignty.

K. Hen.

How know'st thou this?

Surv. Not long before your highness sped to France,

The duke being at the Rose,¹⁴ within the parish
Saint Lawrence Pountney, did of me demand
What was the speech amongst the Londoners
Concerning the French journey: I replied,
Men fear'd the French would prove perfidious,
To the king's danger. Presently the duke
Said, 'Twas the fear indeed; and that he doubted,

'Twould prove the verity of certain words
Spoke by a holy monk: *That oft, says he,
Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour
To hear from him a matter of some moment:*

*Whom after under the confessor's seal¹⁵
He solemnly had sworn, that, what he spoke,
My chaplain to no creature living, but
To me, should utter, with demure confidence
This piously ensued,—Neither the king, nor his heirs*

*(Tell you the duke,) shall prosper: bid him strive
To gain the love of the commonalty; the duke Shall govern England.*

Q. Kath.

If I know you well,

You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
On the complaint o' the tenants: Take good heed
You charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul! I say, take heed;
Yes, heartily beseech you.

K. Hen.

Let him on:—

Go forward.

Surv.

On my soul, I'll speak but truth.

I told my lord the duke, By the devil's illusions
The monk might be deceiv'd; and that 'twas dang'rous for him

9 It appears from the prologue to the Romance of the Knight of the Swanne, that it was translated from the French at the request of this unfortunate nobleman. The duke was executed on Friday the 17th of May, 1531. The book has no date.

10 I. e. beyond the treasures of his own mind.

11 Great gifts of nature and education not joined with good dispositions.

12 Conduct, manage.

13 This house was purchased about the year 1551, by Richard Hill, sometime master of the merchant tailors' company, and is now the merchant tailors' school, in Suffolk Lane.

14 The old copy has 'commission's seal.'

To ruminate on this so far, until
It forg'd him some design, which, being believ'd,
It was much like to do: He answer'd, Tush!
It costs me no damage: adding further,
That, had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
The cardinal's and Sir Thomas Lovell's heads
Should have gone off.

K. Hen. Ha! what, so rank? Ah, ah!
There's mischief in this man:—Canst thou say further?

Surv. I can, my liege.

K. Hen. Proceed.

Surv. Being at Greenwich,
After your highness had reprov'd the duke
About Sir William Blomer,²—

K. Hen. I remember,
Of such a time:—Being my servant sworn,
The duke retain'd him his.—But on? What hence?
Surv. If, quoth he, I for this had been committed,
As, to the Tower, I thought,—I would have play'd
The part my father meant to act upon
The usurper Richard: who, being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come in his presence; which if granted,
As he made semblance of his duty, would
Have put his knife into him.³

K. Hen. A giant traitor!

Vol. Now, madam, may his highness live in freedom,
And this man out of prison?

Q. Kath. God mend all!

K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee? What say'st?

Surv. After—the duke his father,—with the knife,—

He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
Another spread on his breast, mounting his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenour
Was,—Were he evil us'd, he would outgo
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose.

K. Hen. There's his period,

To sheath his knife in us. He is attach'd;
Call him to present trial: if he may Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not seek't of us: By day and night!⁴
He's traitor to the height. [Exit.

SCENE III. A Room in the Palace. Enter the Lord Chamberlain, and Lord Sands.⁵

Cham. Is it possible, the spells of France should juggle
Men into such strange mysteries?⁶

Sands. New customs,
Though they be never so ridiculous,
Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd.

Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English

Have got by the late voyage, is but merely
A fit or two o' the face; but they are shrewd ones;
For when they hold them, you would swear directly,
Their very noses had been counsellors
To Pepin, or Clotharius, they keep state so.

Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones;
one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the spavin,
A springhalt⁷ reign'd among them.

Cham. Death! my lord,
Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too,
That, sure, they have worn out christendom. How
now?

What news, Sir Thomas Lovell?

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell.

Lov. 'Faith, my lord,
I hear of none, but the new proclamation
That's clapp'd upon the court gate.

Cham. What is't for?
Lov. The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.

Cham. I am glad, 'tis there: now I would pray our monsieurs

To think an English courtier may be wise,
And never see the Louvre.

Lov. They must either
(For so run the conditions) leave these remnants
Of fool and feather,⁸ that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance,
Pertaining thereunto (as fights, and fireworks;
Abusing better men than they can be,
Out of a foreign wisdom,) renouncing clean
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short blister'd breeches,⁹ and those types of travel,
And understand again like honest men;
Or pack to their old playfellows: there, I take it,
They may, cum privilegio, wear away
The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.

Sands. 'Tis time to give them physic, their diseases

Are grown so catching.

Cham. What a loss our ladies
Will have of these trim vanities!

Lov. Ay, marry,
There will be woe indeed, lords; the sly whoresons
Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
A French song, and a fiddle, has no fellow.

Sands. The devil fiddle them! I am glad, they're going,

(For, sure, there's no converting of them:) now
An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song,
And have an hour of hearing; and, by'r lady,
Held¹¹ current music too.

Cham. Well said, Lord Sands;
Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.

1 Rank weeds are weeds grown up to great height and strength. 'What, (says the king,) was he advanced to this pitch?'

2 Sir William Blomer (Hollinshed calls him Bulmer) was reprimanded by the king in the Star Chamber, for that, being his sworn servant, he had left the king's service for the duke of Buckingham's.

3 The accuracy of Hollinshed, from whom Shakespeare took his account of the accusations and punishment, together with the qualities of the duke of Buckingham, is proved in the most authentic manner by a very curious report of his case in East. Term. 13 Hen. VIII. in the year books published by authority, edit. 1597, f. 11, 12.

4 Steevens takes unnecessary pains to explain this phrase. I wonder he could doubt that it was an adjuration.

5 Shakespeare has placed this scene in 1531. Charles earl of Worcester was then lord chamberlain, and continued in the office until his death, in 1536. But Cavendish, from whom this was originally taken, places this event at a later period, when Lord Sands himself was chamberlain. Sir William Sands, of the Vine, near Basingstoke, Hants, was created a peer in 1534. He succeeded the earl of Worcester as chamberlain.

6 Mysteries are arts, and here artificial fashions.

7 A fit of the face seems to be a grimace, an artificial cast of the countenance.

8 The springhalt or stringhalt is a disease incident to horses, which makes them limp in their paces. It is a humorous comparison of the mincing gait of the Frenchified courtiers to this convulsive motion. Ben Jonson, in his Bartholomew Fair, uses it:—

'Poor soul, she has had a stringhalt.'

9 The text may receive illustration from Nashe's Life of Jacke Wilton, 1604:—'At that time (viz. in the court of King Henry VIII.) I was no common squire, no underrotten torchbearer, I had my feather in my cap as big as a flag in the foretop, my French doublet gellie in the belly, as though, (lyke a pig ready to be spited,) all my guts had bene plucked out, a paire of side paned hose that hung down like two scales filled with Holland cheeses, my long stock that sate close to my dock,—my rapier pendant, like a round stick, &c. my blacke cloake of cloth, overspredding my backe lyke a thorn backe or an elephant's eare; and in consumption of my curiositie, my handes without gloves, all a more French,' &c. Mr. Douce justly observes that Sir Thomas Lovell's is an allusion to the feathers which were formerly worn by fools in their caps, as may be seen in a print of Jordan's after Voert; and which is alluded to in the Ballad of News and No News:—

'And feathers wagging in a fool's cap.'

10 I. e. breeches puffed or swelled out like bladders.
11 The late edition of Mr. Boswell reads hold, noticing that held is the reading of the first folio.

Sanda. No, my lord;
Nortshall not, while I have a stamp.
Cham. Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a going?
Lov. To the cardinal's;
Your lordship is a guest too.
Cham. O, 'tis true;
This night he makes a supper, and a great one,
To many lords and ladies; there will be
The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.
Lov. That churchman bears a bounteous mind indeed,
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dews fall every where.
Cham. No doubt, he's noble;
He had a black mouth, that said other of him.
Sanda. He may, my lord, he has wherewithal;
in him,
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine:
Men of his way should be most liberal,
They are set here for examples.
Cham. True, they are so:
But few now give so great ones. My barge stays;
Your lordship shall along:—Come, good Sir Thomas,
We shall be late else: which I would not be,
For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guildford,
This night to be comptrollers.
Sanda. I am your lordship's.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The Presence Chamber in York Place. Hautboys. A small table under a state for the Cardinal, a longer table for the guests. Enter at one door ANNE BULLEN, and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen, as guests; at another door, enter SIR HENRY GUILDFORD.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace Salutes ye all: This night he dedicates To fair content, and you: none here, he hopes, In all this noble bevy,¹ has brought with her One care abroad: he would have all as merry As first-good company, good wine, good welcome, Can make good people.—O, my lord, you are tardy;

Enter Lord Chamberlain, LORD SANDS, and SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

The very thought of this fair company
Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, Sir Harry Guildford.
Sanda. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested, I think, would better please them: By my life, They are a sweet society of fair ones.

Lov. O, that your lordship were but now confessor

To one or two of these!

Sanda. I would, I were;
They should find easy penance.

Lov. 'Faith, how easy?

Sanda. As easy as a down bed would afford it.
Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir Harry,

Place you that aide, I'll take the charge of this:
His grace is ent'ring.—Nay, you must not freeze;
Two women plac'd together makes cold weather:—
My Lord Sands, you are one will keep them waking;
Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sanda. By my faith,
And thank your lordship.—By your leave, sweet ladies:

[Sits himself between ANNE BULLEN and another Lady.]

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;
I had it from my father.

Anna. Was he mad, sir?
Sanda. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love too:
But he would bite none; just as I do now,
He would kiss you twenty with a beech.

[Kisses her.]

Cham. Well said, my lord.—
So, now you are fairly seated:—Gentlemen,
The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies
Pass away frowning.

Sanda. For my little cure,
Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY, attended; and takes his state.

Wol. You are welcome, my fair guests; that noble lady,
Or gentleman, that is not freely merry,
Is not my friend: This, to confirm my welcome;
And to you all good health. [Drinks.]

Sanda. Your grace is noble;—
Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,
And save me so much talking.

Wol. My Lord Sands,
I am beholden to you: cheer your neighbours.—
Ladies, you are not merry;—Gentlemen,
Whose fault is this?

Sanda. The red wine first must rise
In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have them

Talk us to silence.

Anna. You are a merry gamester, my Lord Sands.
Sanda. Yes, if I make my play:—

Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam,

For 'tis to such a thing,—

Anna. You cannot show me.

Sanda. I told your grace, they would talk anon.

[Drum and trumpets within: Chambers² discharged.]

Wol. What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of you.

[Exit a Servant.]

Wol. What warlike voice?

And to what end is this?—Nay, ladies, fear not;

By all the laws of war you are privileged.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now? what is't?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers;

For so they seem: they have left their barge, and landed:

And hither make, as great ambassadors

From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain,

Go, give them welcome, you can speak the French

tongue;

And, pray, receive them nobly, and conduct them

Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty

Shall shine at full upon them:—Some attend him.—

[Exit Chamberlain, attended. All cries, and Tables removed.]

You have now a broken banquet; but we'll mend it.

A good digestion to you all: and, once more,

I shower a welcome on you;—Welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the King, and twelve others, as Masters, habited like Shepherds, with eastern

Torchbearers: ushered by the Lord Chamberlain.

They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures?

Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd charges, and make a loud report. They had their names from being little more than mere chambers to lodge powder; that being the technical name for that cavity

in a gun which contains the powder or combustible matter.

Cavendish, describing this scene as it really occurred, says that against the king's coming 'were laid charged many chambers, and as his landing they were all shot off, which made such a rumble in the air that it was like thunder.'

¹ The speaker is now in the king's palace at Bridewell, from whence he is proceeding by water to York Place (Cardinal Wolsey's house), now Whitehall.

² A bery is a company.

³ I.e. if I may choose my game.

⁴ Chambers are short pieces of ordnance, standing almost erect upon their breechings, chiefly used upon festive occasions, being so contrived as to carry great

To tell your grace;—That, having heard by fame
Of this so noble and so fair assembly
This night to meet here, they could do no less,
Out of the great respect they bear to beauty,
But leave their flocks; and under your fair conduct,
Crave leave to view these ladies, and outlast
An hour of revels with them.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain,
They have done my poor house grace; for which I pay them
A thousand thanks, and pray them take their pleasures.

[Ladies chosen for the dance. The King chooses ANNE BULLEN.]

K. Hen. The fairest hand I ever touch'd! O,
beauty,
Till now I never knew thee. [Music. Dance.]

Wol. My lord, —
Cham. Your grace?
Wol. Pray, tell them thus much from me:
There should be one amongst them, by his person,
More worthy this place than myself; to whom,
If I but knew him, with my love and duty
I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.
[Cham. goes to the company, and returns.]
Wol. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess,
There is, indeed; which they would have your grace
Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see, then.—
[Comes from his state.]

By all your good leaves, gentlemen;—Here I'll make
My royal choice.

K. Hen. You have found him, cardinal:¹
[Unmasking.]

You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord:
You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal, should judge now unhappily.²

Wol. I am glad,
Your grace is grown so pleasant.

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain,
Pr'ythee, come hither: What fair lady's that?

Cham. An't please your grace, Sir Thomas Bullen's daughter,
The Viscount Rochford, one of her highness' wo-
men.

K. Hen. By heaven, she is a dainty one.—Sweet-
heart,

I were unmannerly, to take you out,
And not to kiss you.³—A health, gentlemen,
Let it go round.

Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready
In the privy chamber?

Lov. Yes, my lord.
Wol. Your grace,

I fear, with dancing is a little heated.⁴
K. Hen. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's fresher air, my lord,
In the next chamber.

K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one.—Sweet partner,

I must not yet forsake you.—Let's be merry;—
Good my lord cardinal, I have half a dozen healths

To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure
To lead them once again; and then let's dream
Who's best in favour.—Let the music knock it.⁵
[Exeunt, with trumpets.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Street. Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast?
2 Gent. O,—God save you!

Even to the hall to hear what shall become
Of the great duke of Buckingham.

1 Gent. I'll save you
That labour, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony
Of bringing back the prisoner.

2 Gent. Were you there?
1 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.

2 Gent. Pray, speak, what has happen'd?
1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.

2 Gent. Is he found guilty?
1 Gent. Yes, truly he is, and condemn'd upon it.

2 Gent. I am sorry for't.
1 Gent. So are a number more.

2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?
1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke

Came to the bar; where, to his accusations,
He pleaded still, not guilty, and alleg'd

Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.
The king's attorney, on the contrary,

Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions
Of divers witnesses; which the duke desir'd

To have brought, utro voce, to his face:
At which appear'd against him, his surveyor;

Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor; and John Court,
Confessor to him; with that devil-monk,

Hopkins, that made this mischief.
2 Gent. That was he,

That fed him with his prophecies?
1 Gent. The same.

All these accus'd him strongly; which he fain
Would have shung from him, but, indeed, he could not:

And so his peers, upon this evidence,

Have found him guilty of high treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life: but all

Was either pitied in him, or forgotten.⁶
2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?

1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar,— to hear

His knell rung out, his judgment,—he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely,

And something spoke in choleric, ill, and hasty:
But he fell to himself again, and, sweetly,

In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.
2 Gent. I do not think, he fears death.

1 Gent. Sure, he does not,
He never was so womanish; the cause

He may a little grieve at.
2 Gent. Certainly,

The cardinal is the end of this.
1 Gent. 'Tis likely,

By all conjectures: First, Kildare's attainer,
Then deputy of Ireland; who remov'd,

1 Cavendish, from whom Stowe and Holinshed copied their account, says that the cardinal pitched upon 'Sir Edward Neville, a comely knight of a goodly personage, that much more resembled the king's person in that mask than any other; upon which the king plucked down his visor and Master Neville's also, and dashed out with such a pleasant cheer and countenance, that all noble estates there assembled, seeing the king to be there amongst them, rejoiced very much.'

2 I.e. waggishly, mischievously.

3 A kiss was anciently the established fee of a lady's partner. The custom is still prevalent among country people in many parts of the kingdom.

4 According to Cavendish, the king, on discovering himself, being desired by Wolsey to take his place under the state or seat of honour, said 'that he would go first and shift his apparel, and so departed, and went straight into my lord's bedchamber, where a great fire was made and prepared for him, and there new apparelled him with rich and princely garments. And in the time of the king's absence the dishes of the banquet were cleane taken up, and the tables spread with new and sweet perfumed cloths.—Then the king took his seat under the cloth of estate, commanding no man to remove, but set still as they did before. Then in came a new banquet before the king's majesty, and to all the rest through the tables, wherein, I suppose, were served two hundred dishes or above. Thus passed they forth the whole night with banquetting.' &c.

5 Thus in Antonio and Melinda:—

'Fla. Faith, the song will seem to come off hardly.

Cats. Troth, not a whit, if you seem to come off quickly.

Fla. Pert Cuzzo, knock it, then.'

6 Either produced no effect, or produced only ineffictual pky.

Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,
Lest he should help his father.

2 Gent. That trick of state
Was a deep envious one.

1 Gent. At his return,
No doubt, he will requite it. This is noted,
And generally : whoever the king favours,
The cardinal instantly will find employment,
And far enough from court too.

2 Gent. All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and, o' my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep : this duke as much
They love and dote on ; call him, bounteous Buckingham,
The mirror of all courtesy ;¹—

1 Gent. Stay there, sir,
And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

*Enter BUCKINGHAM from his arraignment ; Tipstaves before him, the axe with the edge towards him ; halberds on each side : with him SIR THOMAS LOVELL, SIR NICHOLAS VAUX, SIR WILLIAM
SANDS,² and common People.*

2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.
Buck. All good people,

You that thus far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.
I have this day receiv'd a traitor's judgment,
And by that name must die ; Yet, heaven bear witness,

And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful !
The law I bear no malice for my death,
It has done, upon the premises, but justice :
But those, that sought it, I could wish more christians :

Be what they will, I heartily forgive them :
Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils³ on the graves of great men ;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them.
For further life in this world I ne'er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies
More than I dare make faults. You few that lov'd⁴
me,

And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends, and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to him, only dying,
Go with me, like good angels, to my end ;
And, as the long divorce⁵ of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heaven.⁶—Lead on, o' God's name.

Loe. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven : I forgive all ;
There cannot be those numberless offences⁷
'Gainst me, I can't take peace with : no black envy
Shall make⁸ my grave.—Commend me to his grace :
And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him
You met him half in heaven : my vows and prayers
Yet are the king's ; and, till my soul forsake me,

Shall cry for blessings on him : May he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years !
Ever belov'd, and loving, may his rule be !
And, when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument !

Loe. To the water side I must conduct your
grace ;

Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux.
Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there,
The duke is coming : see, the barge be ready ;
And fit it with such furniture, as suits
The greatness of him person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone ; my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham ; now, poor Edward Bon-hun :⁹

Yet I am richer than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant : I now seal it ;¹⁰
And with that blood will make them one day groan
for't.

My noble father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his servant Banister,
Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd,
And without trial fell ; God's peace be with him !
Henry the Seventh, succeeding, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd me to my honours, and, out of ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Now his son,
Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name, and all
That made me happy, at one stroke has taken
For ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one ; which makes me
A little happier than my wretched father :
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes.—Both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most ;
A most unnatural and faithless service !
Heaven has an end in all : Yet, you that hear me,
This from a dying man receive as certain :
Where you are liberal of your loves, and counsels,
Be sure, you be not loose ;¹¹ for those you make
friends,

And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But where they mean to sink ye. All good people,
Pray for me ! I must now forsake ye ; the last hour
Of my long weary life is come upon me.
Farewell !

And when you would say something that is sad,¹²
Speak how I fell.—I have done ; and God forgive me ! [Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and Train.]

1 Gent. O, this is full of pity !—Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads,
That were the authors.

2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'Tis full of woe : yet I can give you inkling
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.

1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us !
Where may it be ? You do not doubt my faith, sir ?

close my life. Envy is elsewhere used by Shakespeare for malice or hatred. Unless with Warburton we read 'mark my grave' ; a very plausible emendation of an error easily made ; and which has indeed happened in an instance in King Henry V. Act II. Sc. 2, where the old copy erroneously reads :—

'To make the full fraught man and best endued
With some suspicion.'

7 The name of the duke of Buckingham most generally known was Stafford ; it is said that he affected the surname of Bonhun, because he was lord high constable of England by inheritance of tenure from the Bohuns Shakespeare follows Holinshed.

8 I now seal my truth, my loyalty, with blood, which blood shall one day make them groan.

9 This expression occurs again in Othello :—

'There are a kind of men so loose of soul,
That in their sleep' will mutter their affairs.'

10 Thus also in King Richard II. :—

'Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.'

1 The report in the Old Year Book, referred to above, thus describes him.—'Car il fut tres noble prince et prudent, et miror de tout courtoisie.'

2 The old copy reads 'Sir Walter.' The correction is justified by Holinshed. Sir William Sands was at this time (May, 1521) only a knight, not being created Lord Sands till April 27, 1527. Shakespeare probably did not know that he was the same person whom he has already introduced with that title. The error arose by placing the king's visit to Wolsey (at which time Sir William was Lord Sands) and Buckingham's condemnation in the same year ; whereas the visit was made some years afterwards.

3 Evils are forcible.

4 Thus in Lord Sterling's Darius :—

'Scarce was the lasting last divorcement made Betwixt the bodie and the soule.'

5 Johnson observes, with great truth, that these lines are remarkably tender and pathetic.

6 Shakespeare, by this expression, probably meant to make the duke say, No action expressive of malice shall

2 Genl. This secret is so weighty, 'twill require
A strong faith¹ to conceal it.

1 Genl. Let me have it ;
I do not talk much.

2 Genl. I am confident :
You shall, sir : Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing, of a separation
Between the king and Katharine ?

1 Genl. Yes, but it held² not :
For when the king once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the lord mayor, straight
To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues .
That durst disperse it.

2 Genl. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now ; for it grows again
Fresher than e'er it was ; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal,
Or some about him near, have, out of malice
To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple
That will undo her : To confirm this too,
Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately ;
As all think, for this business.

1 Genl. 'Tis the cardinal ;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

2 Genl. I think, you have hit the mark : But is't not cruel,

That she should feel the smart of this ? The cardinal
Will have his will, and she must fall.

1 Genl. 'Tis woful.
We are too open here to argue this ;
Let's think in private more. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. An Antechamber in the Palace. Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a Letter.

Cham. My lord,—The horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young, and handsome ; and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission, and main power, took 'em from me ;
with this reason,—His master would be served before a subject, if not before the king : which stopp'd our mouths, sir.

I fear, he will, indeed : Well, let him have them :
He will have all, I think.

Enter the Dukes of NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.

Nor. Well met, my good lord chamberlain.

Cham. Good day to both your graces.

Suf. How is the king employ'd ?

Cham. I left him private,

Full of sad thoughts and roubles.

Nor. What is the cause ?

Cham. It seems, the marriage with his brother's wife

Has crept too near his conscience.

Suf. No, his conscience
Has crept too near another lady.

Nor. 'Tis so ;
This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal :
That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune, Turns what he hat. The king will know him one day.

Suf. Pray God, he do ! he'll never know himself else.

Nor. How holily he works in all his business !

1 Great fidelity.

2 Stevens erroneously explains this passage, saying to hold is to believe : 'it held not' here rather means 'it did not sustain itself,' the rumour did not prove true.
So in King Richard III. Act II. Sc. 2—

'Doth the news hold of good King Edward's death ?'

3 See The Winter's Tale, Act I. Sc. 2. note 8.

4 It was the main end or object of Wolsey to bring about a marriage between Henry and the French king's sister, the duchess of Alençon.

5 The meaning is, that the cardinal can, as he pleases, make high or low.

6 The stage direction in the old copy is singular—
'Exit Lord Chamberlain, and the king draws the curtain, and sits reading pensively.'—This was calculated

And with what zeal ! For, now he has crack'd the league

Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew,

He dives into the king's soul ; and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience,
Fears, and despair, and all these for his marriage :
And, out of all these to restore the king,

He counsels a divorce ; a loss of her,
That, like a jewel,³ has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre ;
Of her, that loves him with that excellence
That angels love good men with ; even of her
That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless the king : And is not this course pious ?

Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel ! 'Tis most true,

These news are every where ; every tongue speaks
them,

And every true heart weeps for't : All, that dare
Look into these affairs, see this main end,—

The French king's sister :⁴ Heaven will one day open

The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold bad man.

Suf. And free us from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance ;

Or this imperious man will work us all
From princes into pages : all men's honours

Lie in one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.⁵

Suf. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him ; there's my creed ;

As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please ; his curses and his blessings

Touch me alike, they are breath I not believe in,
I knew him, and I know him ; so I leave him

To him, that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in ;
And, with some other business, put the king

From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon
him :—

My lord, you'll bear us company ?

Cham. Excuse me ;
The king hath sent me other-where : besides,
You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him :

Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain.]

NORFOLK opens a folding-door. The King is discovered sitting, and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks ! sure, he is much afflicted.

K. Hen. Who is there ? ha ?

Nor. 'Pray God, he be not angry.

K. Hen. Who's there, I say ? How dare you thrust yourselves

Into my private meditations ?

Who am I ? ha ?

Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences
Malice e'er meant ; our breach of duty, this way,
Is business of estate ; in which, we come
To know your royal pleasure.

K. Hen. You are too bold :
Go to ; I'll make ye know your times of business :

Is this an hour for temporal affairs ? ha ?—

for the state of the theatre in Shakspeare's time. When a person was to be discovered in a different apartment from that in which the original speakers in the scene are exhibited, the artless mode of that time was, to place such person in the back part of the stage, behind the curtains which were occasionally suspended across it. These the person who was to be discovered (as Henry in the present case), drew back just at the proper time. Norfolk has just said 'Let's in ;' and therefore should himself do some act in order to visit the king.
This, indeed, in the simple state of the old stage, was not attended to ; the king very civilly discovering himself. See Malone's account of the Old Theatres, in Mr.
Bowdler's edition, vol. II.

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal?—O, my Wolsey,

The quiet of my wounded conscience,
Thou art a cure fit for a king.—You're welcome,
[To CAMPEIUS.]

Meet learned reverend sir, into our kingdom;
Use us, and it:—My good lord, have great care
I be not found a talker. [To WOLSEY.]

Wol. Sir, you cannot.
I would, your grace would give us but an hour
Of private conference.

K. Hen. We are busy: go.
[To NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.]

Nor. This priest has no pride in him?

Suf. Not to speak of;

I would not be so sick though, for his place:

But this cannot continue.

Nor. If it do,

I'll venture one have at him.³

Suf. I another. [Aside.]

[Exit NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.]

Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom

Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christendom:
Who can be angry now? what envy reach you?
The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her,
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble. All the clerks,
I mean, the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms,
Have their free voices; Rome, the nurse of judgment,

Invited by your noble self, hath sent

One general tongue unto us, this good man,
This just and learned priest, Cardinal Campeius;
Whom, once more, I present unto your highness.

K. Hen. And, once more, in mine arms I bid him welcome,

And thank the holy conclave for their loves;
They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for.

Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers' loves,

You are so noble: To your highness' hand
I tender my commission; by whose virtue,
[The court of Rome commanding,]—you, my lord
Cardinal of York, are join'd with me, their servant,
In the impartial judging of this business.

K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted

Forthwith, for what you come:—Where's Gardiner?

Wol. I know, your majesty has always lov'd her

So dear in heart, not to deny her that
A woman of less place might ask by law,
Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her.

K. Hen. Ay, and the best, she shall have; and my favour

To him that does best; God forbid else. Cardinal,
Pr'ythee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary;
I find him a fit fellow. [Exit WOLSEY.]

1 The meaning appears to be, 'Let care be taken that my promise be performed, that my professions of welcome be not found empty talk.'

2 I. e. so sick as he is proud.

3 Stevens reads 'one Accae at him;' but surely without necessity. To Accae at any thing or person meant to attack it, in ancient phraseology. Surrey afterwards says:—

—Accae at you,

First that without the king, &c.

The phrase is derived (like many other old popular phrases) from gaming: 'to Accae at all,' was to throw for all that was staked on the board, adventuring on the cast or equal stake.

4 I. e. kept him out of the king's presence, employed in foreign embassies.

5 'About this time the king received into favour Doctor Stephen Gardiner, whose service he used in matters of great secrecy and weight, admitting him in the room of Dr Pace, the which being continually abroad in am-

Re-enter WOLSEY, with GARDINER.

Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favour to you;

You are the king's now.

Gard. But to be commanded
For ever by your grace, whose hand has rais'd me. [Aside.]

K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.

[They converse apart.]

Cam. My lord of York, was not one Doctor
Pace

In this man's place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes, surely.

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread then

Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

Wol. How! of me?

Cam. They will not stick to say, you envied him;
And, fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man⁴ still; which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad, and died.⁵

Wol. Heaven's peace be with him!

That's Christian care enough: for living marmozers,
There's places of rebuke. He was a fool;
For he would needs be virtuous: That good fellow,
If I command him, follows my appointment;
I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,
We live not to be gripp'd by meaner persons.

K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen.

[Exit GARDINER.]
The most convenient place that I can think of,
For such receipt of learning, is Black-Friars;
There ye shall meet it about this weighty business:—
My Wolsey, see it furnish'd.—O, my lord,
Would it not grieve an able man, to leave
So sweet a bedfellow? But, conscience, conscience,—

O, 'tis a tender place, and I must leave her.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. In Antechamber in the Queen's Apartments. Enter ANNE BULLEN, and an old Lady.

Anna. Not for that neither;—Here's the pang that pinches:

His highness having lived so long with her: and she
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her,—by my life,
She never knew harm-doing;—O now, after
So many courses of the sun eastward,
Still growing in a majesty and pomp,—the which
To leave is a thousand-fold more bitter, than
'Tis sweet at first to acquire,—after this process,
To give her the avast⁶ it is a pity
Would move a monster.

Old L. Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her.

Anna. O, God's will! much better
She ne'er had known pomp: though it be temerous.
Yet, if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce⁷
It from the bearer, 'tis a sunderance, panging
As soul and body's severing.⁸

besides, and the same oftentimes not much necessary by the Cardinal's appointment, at length he took such griefs therewith, that he fell out of his right wits.—
Holinshed.

6 To send her away contemptuously; to pronounce against her a sentence of ejection.

7 I think with Stevens that we should read:—

'Yet if that quarrel, fortune do divorce

It from the bearer,' &c.

I. e. if any quarrel happen or chance to divorce it from the bearer. To fortune is a verb, used by Shakespeare in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

—'Pill tell you as we pass along

That you will wonder what hath fortune'd.'

8 Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'The soul and body rive not more at parting

Than greatness going off.'

To pang is used as a verb active by Shalton, in h book of Philip Sparrow, 1808, sig. R v.—
'What heaviness did me pange.'

Old L. Alas, poor lady!
She's a stranger now again!

Anne. So much the more
Must pity drop upon her. Verily,
I swear, 'tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content
Is our best having.

Anne. By my troth, and maidenhead,
I would not be a queen.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would,
And venture maidenhead for't; and so would you,
For all this spice of your hypocrisy:
You, that have so fair parts of woman on you,
Have too a woman's heart; which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty;
Which, to say sooth, are blessings: and which gifts
(Savouring your mincing) the capacity
Of your soft cheveril¹ scotchens would receive,
If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth,— Old L. Yes, troth, and troth.—You would not be a queen?

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange; a threepence bowed would hire me,

Old as I am, to queen it: But, I pray you,
What think you of a duchess? have you limbs
To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in troth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made: Pluck off a little;

I would not be a young count in your way,
For more than blushing comes to: if your back
Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak
Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How you do talk!
I swear again, I would not be a queen
For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England
You'd venture an emballing:² I myself
Would for Carnarvonshire, although there 'long'd
No more to the crown but that. Lo, who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What wren't worth to know

The secret of your conference?

Anne. My good lord,
Not your demand; it values not your asking:
Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming
The action of good women: there is hope,
All will be well.

Anne. Now I pray God, amen!

Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings

Fellow such creatures. That you may, fair lady, Perceive I speak sincerely, and high note's
T'een of your many virtues, the king's majesty

1 The revocation of her husband's love has reduced her to the condition of an unfriended stranger.

2 Our best possession.

3 Cheveril is kid leather, which, being of a soft yielding nature, is often alluded to in comparisons for any thing pliant or flexible.

4 Anne Bullen declining to be either a queen or a duchess, the old lady says, 'pluck off a little'; let us descend a little lower, and so diminish the glare of preferment by bringing it nearer your own quality.

5 I.e. you would venture to be distinguished by the half, the ensign of royalty, used with the sceptre at coronations.—Johnson.

6 I cannot but be surprised that Malone should have made any difficulty about the reading of the text:—
the king's majesty

Commends his good opinion to you.

It is one of the most common forms of epistolary and colloquial compliment of our ancestors, whose letters frequently terminate with 'and so I commend me to you,' or begin with 'After my hearty commendations to you.' &c. The instances cited by Stevens from Lear

Commends his good opinion to you,⁶ and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing
Than marchioness of Pembroke; to which title
A thousand pound a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know,
What kind of my obedience I should tender;
More than my all is nothing:⁷ nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers, and wishes,

Are all I can return. 'Beseech your lordship,
Vouchsafe to speak my thanks, and my obedience,
As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness;
Whose health, and royalty, I pray for.

Cham. Lady,
I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit,⁸
The king hath of you.—I have perus'd her well;
[Aside.

Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king: and who knows yet,
But from this lady may proceed a gem,
To lighten all this isle?⁹—I'll to the king,
And say, I spoke with you.

Anne. My honour'd lord.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain.

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see!
I have been begging sixteen years in court (Am yet a courtier beggarly,) nor could Come pat betwixt too early and too late,
For any suit of pounds: and you, (O fate!)
A very fresh-fish here, (fye, fye upon
This compell'd fortune!) have your mouth fill'd up,
Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me.
Old L. How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence,¹⁰
no.

There was a lady once ('tis an old story,)
That would not be a queen, that would she not,
For all the mud in Egypt:¹¹—Have you heard it?
Anne. Come, you are pleasant.

Old L. With your theme, I could O'ermount the lark. The marchioness of Pembroke
A thousand pounds a year! for pure respect;
No other obligation: By my life,
That promises more thousands: Honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time,
I know, your back will bear a duchess;—Say,
Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady,
Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on't. 'Would I had no being,
If this salute my blood a jot; it faints me,
To think what follows.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence: Pray, do not deliver
What here you have heard, to her.

Old L. What do you think me?
[Exit.

SCENE IV. A Hall in Black-Friars. Trumpets sennet,¹² and cornets. Enter two Vergers, with and Antony and Cleopatra are not exactly in point; for the word commend, in both those instances, signifies committ.

7 Not only my all is nothing: but if my all were more than it is, it were still nothing.

8 To approve is not, as Johnson explains it, here, to strengthen by commendation, but to confirm (by the report he shall make) the good opinion the king has formed.

9 The carbuncle was supposed by our ancestors to have intrinsic light, and to shine in the dark: any other gem may reflect light, but cannot give it.

10 Forty pence was in those days the proverbial expression of a small wager. Money was then reckoned by pounds, marks, and nobles. Forty pence, or three and fourpence, is half a noble, and is still an established legal fee.

11 The fertility of Egypt is derived from the mud and alluvium of the Nile.

12 This word sennet, about which there has been so much discussion to little purpose, is nothing more than the sennet of the old French, or the segno or segnato of the Italians, a signal given by sound of trumpet.—sig-num dare buccina.

short silver wands; next them, two Scribes, in the habits of doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury alone; after him the Bishops of Lincoln, Ely, Rochester, and Saint Asaph; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the purse, with the great seal, and a cardinal's hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver cross; then a Gentleman Usher bareheaded, accompanied with a Sergeant at Arms, bearing a silver mace; then two Gentlemen, bearing two great silver pillars; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals, WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS; two Noblemen with the sword and mace. Then enter the King and Queen, and their Trains. The King takes place under the cloth of state; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The Queen takes place at some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court in manner of a consistory; between them, the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The Crier and the rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read, Let silence be commanded.

K. Hen. What's the need?

It hath already publicly been read,
And on all sides the authority allow'd;
You may then spare that time.

Wol. Be't so:—Proceed.

Scribe. Say, Henry king of England, come into the court.

Crier. Henry king of England, &c.

K. Hen. Here.

Scribe. Say, Katharine queen of England, come into court.

Crier. Katharine queen of England, &c.

[The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.]

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you, do me right and justice;¹

And to bestow your pity on me: for I am a most poor woman, and a stranger, Born out of your dominions; having here No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir, In what have I offended you? what cause Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure, That thus you should proceed to put me off, And take your good grace from me? Heaven witness,

I have been to you a true and humble wife, At all times to your will conformable: Ever in fear to kindle your dislike, Yea, subject to your countenance; glad, or sorry, As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour, I ever contradicted your desire, Or made it not mine too? Or which of your friends Have I not strove to love, although I knew He were mine enemy? what friend of mine That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice He was from thence discharg'd? Sir, call to mind That I have been your wife, in this obedience, Upward of twenty years, and have been blest

² Because she could not come directly to the king for the distance which severed them, she took pain to go about unto the king, kneeling down at his feet, &c.—Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, vol. i. p. 149, ed. 1825.

³ This speech is taken from Holinshed (who copies from Cavendish) with the most trifling variations. Hall has given a different report of the queen's speech, which, he says, was made in French, and translated by him from notes taken by Campeggio's secretary.

⁴ That is, 'If you can report and prove aught against mine honour, my love and duty, or aught against your sacred person,' &c.

With many children by you: If, in the course And process of this time, you can report, And prove it too, against mine honour aught, My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty, Against your sacred person,* in God's name, Turn me away; and let the foul'st contempt Shut door upon me, and so give me up To the sharpest kind of justice. Please you, sir, The king, your father, was reputed for A prince most prudent, of an excellent And unmatched wit and judgment: Ferdinand, My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many A year before: It is not to be question'd That they had gather'd a wise council to them Of every realm, that did debate this business, Who deem'd our marriage lawful: Wherefore I humbly Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may Be by my friends in Spain advis'd; whose counsel I will implore: if not; if the name of God, Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

Wol.

You have here, lady, (And of your choice,) these reverend fathers; men Of singular integrity and learning, Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled To plead your cause: It shall be therefore bootless, That longer you desire the court;* as well For your own quiet, as to rectify What is unsettled in the king.

Cam.

His grace Hath spoken well, and justly: Therefore, madam, It's fit this royal session do proceed; And that, without delay, their arguments Be now produc'd, and heard.

Q. Kath.

Lord cardinal,— To you I speak.

Wol.

Your pleasure, madam?

Q. Kath.

Sir, I am about to weep; but, thinking that We are a queen (or long have dream'd so,) certain, The daughter of a king, my drops of tears I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol.

Be patient yet. Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble; nay, before,

Or God will punish me. I do believe, Induc'd by potent circumstances, that You are mine enemy; and make my challenge,* You shall not be my judge: for it is you Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me, Which God's dew quench!—Therefore, I say again, I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul, Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more, I hold my most malicious foe, and think not At all a friend to truth.

Wol.

I do profess, You speak not like yourself; who ever yet Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom O'ertopping woman's power. Madam, you do me wrong:

I have no spleen against you; nor injustice For you, or any: how far I have proceeded, Or how far further shall, is warrant'd By a commission from the consistory, Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge me, parted from thence. Many supposed that she would have resorted again to her former place; but she took her way straight out of the house, leaning (as she was wont always to do) upon the arm of her general receiver Master Griffiths.—Life of Wolsey, p. 132.

⁶ That you desire to protract the business of the court. 'To pray for a longer day,' i. e. a more distant one, is yet the language of the bar in criminal trials.

⁷ Challenge here (says Johnson) is a law term. The criminal, when he refuses a jurymen, says 'I challenge him.'

⁸ These are not the mere words of passion, but technical terms of the canon law: detector and recusa. The former, in the language of canonists, signifies no more than I protest against.—Blackstone.

That I have blown this coal: I do deny it:
The king is present: if it be known to him,
That I gainsay¹ my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood? yea, as much
As you have done my truth. But if he know
That I am free of your report, he knows,
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies, to cure me; and the cure is, to Remove these thoughts from you: The which before
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking,
And to say so no more.

Q. Kath. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. You are meek, and humble mouth'd;

You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,²
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune, and his highness' favours,
Gone slightly o'er low steps; and now are mounted Where powers are your retainers: and your wards,³

Domesticks to you, serve your will, as't please
Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than
Your high profession spiritual: That again
I do refuse you for my judge; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,
And to be judg'd by him.

[She curtsies to the King, and offers to depart.

Cam. The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by it; 'tis not well.
She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again.

Crier. Katharine queen of England, come into the court.

Grif. Madam, you are call'd back.

Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray you,
keep your way:

When you are call'd, return.—Now the Lord help,
They vex me past my patience!—pray you, pass on:
I will not tarry: no, nor ever more,
Upon this business, my appearance make
In any of their courts.

[*Exeunt Queen, GRIFFITH, and other
Attendants.*

K. Hen. Go thy ways, Kate;
That man it's the world, who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that: Thou art, alone,
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government,—
Obeying in commanding,—and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out,)⁴
The queen of earthly queens:—She is noble born;
And, like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.

Vol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears (for where I am robb'd and bound,
There must I be unloos'd; although not there
At once and fully satisfied,⁵) whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness; or Laid any scruple in your way, which might

Induce you to the question on't? or ever
Have to you,—but with thanks to God for such A royal lady,—spake one the least word, might
Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?

K. Hen. My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village curs,
Bark when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You are excus'd:
But will you be more justified? you ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business; never Desir'd it to be stirr'd; but oft have hinder'd, oft,
The passages made toward it:—on my honour,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,⁶
And thus far clear him. Now, what mov'd me to't,—

I will be bold with time, and your attention:—
Then mark the inducement. Thus it came;—give heed to't:—

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Scruple, and prick,⁷ on certain speeches utter'd
By the bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador;

Who had been hither sent on the debating
A marriage, 'twixt the duke of Orleans and Our daughter Mary: I' the progress of this business,

Ere a determinate resolution, he
(I mean, the bishop) did require a respite;
Wherein he call'd the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometimes our brother's wife. This respite shook
The bosom of my conscience,⁸ enter'd me,
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast; which forc'd such way,
That many max'd considerings did throng,
And press'd in with this caution. First methought,
I stood not in the smile of heaven; who had Commanded nature, that my lady's womb,
If it conceiv'd a male child by me, should Do no more offices of life to't, than
The grave does to the dead: for her male issue
Or died where they were made, or shortly after
This world had air'd them: Hence I took a thought,
This was a judgment on me; that my kingdom,
Well worthy the best heir o' the world, should not Be gladdened in't by me: Then follows, that I weigh'd the danger which my realms stood in
By this my issue's fail; and that gave to me
Many a groaning throe. Thus hulling⁹ in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together: that's to say
I meant to rectify my conscience,—which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn'd.—First, I began in private
With you, my lord of Lincoln; you remember
How under my oppression I did reek,¹⁰
When I first mov'd you.

Lin. Very well, my liege.

K. Hen. I have spoke long; be pleas'd yourself to say
How far you satisfied me.

Lin. So please your highness,

1 Deny.

2 You show in appearance meekness and humility, as a token or outward sign of your place and calling;
but your heart is cramm'd with arrogance, &c.

3 The old copy reads:—

Where powers are your retainers; and your words,
Domesticks to you, &c.

4 If thy several qualities had tongues capable of speaking out thy merits, i. e. of doing them extensive justice.

5 The sense, which is encumbered with words, is no more than this:—I must be loosed, though when so loosed I shall not be satisfied fully and at once; that is,
I shall not be immediately satisfied.

8

6 The king, having first addressed Wolsey, breaks off, and declares upon his honour to the whole court, that he speaks the cardinal's sentiments upon the point in question; and clears him from any attempt or wish to stir that business.

7 The words of Cavendish are,—The special cause that moved me hereunto was a scrupulosity that pricked my conscience.—See also Holinshed, p. 907.

8 Theobald thought we should read 'The bottom of his conscience.'

9 The phrase belongs to navigation. A ship is said to hull when she is dismasted, and only her hull or hulls is left at the direction and mercy of the waves.

10 Waste, or wear away.

The question did at first so stagger me,—
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't,
And consequence of dread,—that I committed
The daring'st counsel which I had, to doubt;
And did entreat your highness to this course,
Which you are running here.

K. Hen. I then mov'd you,
My lord of Canterbury; and got your leave
To make this present summons:—Unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded,
Under your hands and seals. Therefore, go on:
For no dislike I' the world against the person
Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points
Of my alleged reasons, drive this forward:
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life,
And kingly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come, with her,
Katharine our queen, before the primest creature
That's paragon'd¹ o' the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 'tis a needful stress
That we adjourn this court till further day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness. [They rise to depart.]

K. Hen. I may perceive, [Aside.]
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.
My learn'd and well-beloved servant, Crammer,
Pr'ythee return² with thy approach, I know,
My comfort comes along. Break up the court:
I say, set on. [Exeunt, in manner as they entered.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Palace at Bridewell. A Room in the Queen's Apartment. The Queen, and some of her Women, at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles;
Sing, and disperse them, if thou canst: leave working.

SONG.

*Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bew themselves, when he did sing
To his music, plants, and flowers,
Ever sprung; as sun, and showers,
There had been a lasting spring.*

*Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art;
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.*

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now?

Gent. An't please your grace, the two great cardinals

Wait in the presence.⁴

¹ Shakespeare uses the verb to paragon both in Antony and Cleopatra and Othello—

'If thou with Cæsar paragon again
My man of men.'

² A maid

That paragon description and wild fame.'

³ This is only an apostrophe to the absent bishop of that name.

⁴ Cavendish, who appears to have been present at this interview of the cardinals with the queen, says—'She came out of her privy chamber with a skein of white thread about her neck into the chamber of presence.' A subsequent speech of the queen's is nearly conformable to what is related in Cavendish, and copied by Hollinshed.

⁵ Presence chamber.

⁶ 'Being churchmen they should be virtuous, and every business they undertake as righteous as their sacred office: but all hoods make not monks.' In situ-

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?

Gent. They will'd me say so, madam.

Q. Kath. Pray their graces
To come near. [Exit Gent.] What can be their business

With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?
I do not like their coming, now I think on't.
They should be good men; their affairs⁶ as rightteous:

But all hoods make not monks.

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Wol. Peace to your highness!
Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife;

I would be all, against the worst may happen.

What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords?

Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw

Into your private chamber, we shall give you

The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here;
There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,
Deserves a corner: 'Would, all other women
Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!
My lords, I care not, (so much I am happy Above a number,) if my actions

Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw them,

Envy and base opinion set against them,⁷

I know my life no even: If your business

Seek me out, and that way I am wife in,⁸

Out with it boldly: Truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est ergo te mentis integritas, regine serenissima.

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin;⁹

I am not such a truant since my coming,

As not to know the language I have liv'd in:

A strange tongue makes my cause more strange,
suspicious;

Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank you,
If you speak truth, for their poor mistress' sake;
Believe me, she has had much wrong: Lord cardinal,

The willing'st sin I ever yet committed,
May be absolv'd in English.

Wol. Noble lady,

I am sorry, my integrity should breed
(And service to his majesty and you),¹⁰

So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.

We come not by the way of accusation,

To taint that honour every good tongue blesses;

Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;

You have too much, good lady: but to know

How you stand minded in the weighty difference

Between the king and you; and to deliver,

Like free and honest men, our just opinions,

And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour'd madam,

My lord of York,—out of his noble nature,

Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace;

Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure

Both of his truth and him (which was too far),— sion to the Latin proverb—Cucullus non facit monachum, to which Chaucer also alludes—

Habite ne maketh monk ne frere;

But a cense life and devotion,
Maketh gode men of religion.'

⁶ I would be glad that my conduct were in some public trial confronted with mine enemies, that malice and corrupt judgment might try their utmost power against
me.

⁷ This is obscurely expressed, but seems to mean,
'If your business is with me, and relates to the question of my marriage, out with it boldly.'

⁸ Then began my lord to speak to her in Latin—
'Way, good my lord (quoth she,) speak to me in English. I beseech you, though I understand Latin.'

⁹ This line stands as awkwardly, and out of its place, that Mr. Edwards's proposition to transpose it, should be adopted, thus:—

'I am sorry my integrity should breed
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant,
And service to his majesty and you.'

Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace,
His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. To betray me. [Aside.
My lords, I thank you both for your good wills,
Ye speak like honest men, (pray God, ye prove so!)
But how to make you suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
(More near my life, I fear,) with my weak wit,
And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth, I know not. I was set at work
Among my maids, full little, God knows, looking Either for such men, or such business.
For her sake that I have been¹ (for I feel
The last fit of my greatness,) good your graces,
Let me have time, and counsel, for my cause;
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these fears;

Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Q. Kath. In England,
But little for my profit: Can you think, lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness' pleasure
(Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,)
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They that must weigh out² my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

Cam. I would, your grace
Would leave your grief, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir?
Cam. Put your main cause into the king's protection;

He's loving, and most gracious; 'twill be much
Beth for your honour better, and your cause;
For, if the trial of the law o'ertake you,
You'll part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tells you rightly.

Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruin:

Is this your Christian counsel? out upon ye!
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a judge,
That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.
Q. Kath. The more shame for ye; ³ holy men I thought ye,

Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues:
But cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye:
Mend them for shame, my lords. Is this your comfort?

The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd?
I will not wish ye half my miseries,
I have more charity: But say, I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at once
The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing: Woe upon ye,
And all such false professors! Would ye have me
(If you have any justice, any pity,
If ye be any thing but churchmen's habits,)
Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me?
Alas! he has banish'd me his bed already;
His love too long ago: I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him,
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me, above this wretchedness? all your studies
Make me a curse like this.

¹ For the sake of that royalty which I have heretofore possessed.

² Weigh out for out-weigh. In Macbeth we have overcome for come over.

³ If I mistake you, it is by your fault, not mine; for
I thought you good.

⁴ Served him with superstitious attention.

⁵ This is an allusion to the old jingle of Angell and Angell. Thus Nashe in his Anatomy of Absurdity, 1593:—"For my part I meane to suspend my sentence, and let an author of late memorie be my speaker; who affirmeth that they carry angels in their faces, and devils in their devices."

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I lived thus long—(let me speak myself,

Since virtue finds no friends,)—a wife, a true one?
A woman (I dare say, without vain-glory,)
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven? obey'd
him?

Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him?⁴
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'tis not well, lords.
Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure;
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.

Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Wol. 'Pray, hear me.

Q. Kath. 'Would I had never trod this English
earth,

Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Ye have angels' faces,⁵ but heaven knows your hearts.

What will become of me now, wretched lady?
I am the most unhappy woman living.—
Alas! poor wench, where are now your fortunes?

[To her Women.
Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me,
Almost, no grave allow'd me:—Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field,⁶ and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish.

Wol. If your grace
Could but be brought to know, our ends are honest,
You'd feel more comfort: why should we, good lady,
Upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places,
The way of our profession is against it;
We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow them.
For goodness' sake, consider what you do;
How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly
Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell, and grow as terrible as storms.⁷
I know, you have a gentle, noble temper,
A soul as even as a calm; Pray, think us
Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and servants.

Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues

With these weak women's fears. A noble spirit,
As yours was put into you, ever casts
Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves
you;

Beware, you lose it not: For us, if you please
To trust us in your business, we are ready
To use our utmost studies in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: And, pray, forgive me,

If I have us'd⁸ myself unmannerly;
You know, I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons.
Pray, do my service to his majesty:
He has my heart yet; and shall have my prayers,
While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers,
Bestow your counsels on me: she now begs,

⁶ 'The lily, lady of the flowering field.'

Spenser, F. Q. b. ii. c. vi. st. 16.

⁷ It was one of the charges brought against Lord Essex, in the year before this play was written, by his ungrateful kinsman Sir Francis Bacon, when that nobleman, to the disgrace of humanity, was obliged by a junta of his enemies to kneel at the end of the council table for several hours, that in a letter written during his retirement in 1596 to the lord keeper, he had said, 'There is no temper to the passionate indignation of a prince'

⁸ Behaved.

That little thought, when she set footing here,
She should have bought her dignities so dear.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Antechamber to the King's Apartment. Enter the DUKE of NORFOLK, the DUKE of SUFFOLK, the EARL of SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force¹ them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them: If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful
To meet the least occasion, that may give me
Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke,
To be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the peers
Have uncounten'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected?² when did he regard
The stamp of nobleness in any person,
Out of himself?

Cham. My lord, you speak your pleasures:
What he deserves of you and me, I know;
What we can do to him (though now the time Gives way to us,) I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him; for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in his tongue.

Nor. O, fear him not;
His spell in that is out: the king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. No, he's settled,
Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur. Sir,
I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true.
In the divorce, his contrary proceedings³
Are all unfolded; wherein he appears,
As I could wish mine enemy.

Sur. How came
His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Sur. O, how, how?

Suf. The cardinal's letter to the pope miscarried,
And came to the eye o' the king: wherein was read,
How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness
To stay the judgment o' the divorce: For if
It did take place, I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, Lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it.

Sur. Will this work?

Cham. The king in this perceives him, how he coasts.

And hedges, his own way.⁴ But in this point
All his tricks founder, and he brings his physis
After his patient's death; the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Sur. 'Would he had!

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord!
For, I profess, you have it.

Sur. Now all my joy

Trace⁵ the conjunction!

Suf. My amen to't!

Nor. All men's.

Suf. There's order given for her coronation:
Marry, this is yet but young,⁶ and may be left
To some ears unrecoun'd.—But, my lords,
She is a gallant creature, and complete
In mind and feature: I persuade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall
In it be memoris'd.⁷

Sur. But, will the king
Digest this letter of the cardinal's?
The Lord forbid!

Nor. Marry, amen!

Suf. No, no;
There be more wasps that buzz about his nose,
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius
Is stolen away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave;
Has left the cause o' the king unhanded; and
Is posted, as the agent of our cardinal,
To second all this plot. I do assure you
The king cry'd, ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him;
And let him cry ha, louder!

Nor. But, my lord,
When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd, in his opinions; which
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Together with all famous colleges
Almost in Christendom:⁸ shortly, I believe,
His second marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her coronation. Katharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain
In the king's business.

Suf. He has: and we shall see him
For it, an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear.

Suf. 'Tis so.
The cardinal—

Enter WOLSEY and CROMWELL.

Nor. Observe, observe, he's moody.
Wol. The packet, Cromwell, gave it you the king?
Crom. To his own hand, in his bedchamber.

Wol. Look'd he o' the inside of the paper?
Crom. Presently

He did unseal them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance: You, he bade
Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready

To come abroad?

Crom. I think, by this he is.

Wol. Leave me a while.— [Exit CROMWELL.]

It shall be to the duchess of Alençon,
The French king's sister: he shall marry her.

Anne Bullen! No; I'll no Anne Bullens for him:
There is more in it than fair visage.—Bullen!

No, we'll no Bullens.—Speedily I wish
To hear from Rome.—The marchioness of Pembroke!

Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be, he hears the king
Does whet his anger to him.

Sur. Sharp enough,

Lord, for thy justice!

Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman; a knight's daughter,

To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen!—
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it;
Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous,
And well deserving? yet I know her for

² Which of the peers has not gone by him counten'd or neglected? When did he regard the stamp of nobleness in any person, though attentive to his own dignity?

³ I. e. his secret endeavours to counteract the divorce.

⁴ To coast is to hover about, to pursue a sidelong course about a thing. To hedge is to creep along by the hedge, not to take the direct and open path, but to steal covertly through circumnutations.

⁵ To trace is to follow.

⁶ This same phrase occurs again in Romeo and Juliet, Act I. Sc. 1:—

'Good morrow, cousin.

Is the day so young?

⁷ To memorize is to make memorable.

⁸ Suffolk means to say Cranmer is returned in his opinions, i. e. with the same sentiments which he entertained before he went abroad, which (sentiments) have satisfied the king, together with all the famous colleges referred to on the occasion. Or perhaps the passage (as Mr. Tyrwhit observes) may mean, He is returned in effect, having sent his opinions, i. e. the opinions of divines, &c. collected by him.

A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of Our hard-rail'd king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one
Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Suf. I would 'twere something that would fret
the string,
'The master-cord of his heart!

Enter the King, reading a Schedule;¹ and Lovell.

Suf. The king, the king.

K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his own portion! and what expense by the hour
Seems to flow from him! How, i' the name of thrift,
Does he rake this together?—Now, my lords;
Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have Stood here observing him: Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight,
Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again,²
Strikes his breast hard; and anon, he casts
His eye against the moon: in most strange postures
We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be;
There is a mutiny in his mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I requir'd: And, wot'st you what I found
There; on my conscience, put unwittingly?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,—
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which
I find at such proud rate, that it outspeaks
Possession of a subject.

Nor. It's heaven's will;
Some spirit put this paper in the packet,
To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings: but, I am afraid,
His thinkings are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

[He takes his seat, and whispers Lovell, who goes to Wolsey.

Wol. Heaven forgive me!
Ever God bless your highness!

K. Hen. Good my lord,
You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inventory
Of your best graces in your mind; the which
You were now running o'er; you have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit: Sure, in that
I deem you an ill husband; and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol. Sir,
For holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business, which I bear i' the state; and nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I, her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendance to.

1 That the cardinal gave the king an inventory of his own private wealth, by mistake, and thereby ruined himself, is a known variation from the truth of history. Shakespeare, however, has not injudiciously represented the fall of that great man as owing to an incident which he had once improved to the destruction of another. See the story related of Thomas Ruthall, bishop of Durham, in Holinshed, p. 796 and 797.

2 Sallust, describing the disturbed state of Catiline's mind, takes notice of the same circumstance:—'Citius modo, modo tardus incessum.'

3 Know.

4 So in Macbeth:—

'To crown my thoughts with acts.'

5 Your royal benefits, showered upon me daily, have been more than all my studied purpose could do to requite, for they went beyond all that man could effect in

K. Hen. You have said well.

Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,
As I will lend you cause, my doing well
With my well saying!

K. Hen. 'Tis well said again;
And 'tis a kind of good deed, to say well:
And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd you:
He said, he did; and with his deed did crown
His word upon you.⁴ Since I had my office,
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home,
But par'd my present havings, to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol. What should this mean?

Suf. The Lord increase this business! [Aside.

K. Hen. Have I not made you
The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you have found true:
And, if you may confess it, say withal,
If you are bound to us or no. What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess, your royal graces, Shower'd on me daily, have been more than could
My studied purposes requite; which went Beyond all man's endeavours;—my endeavours
Have ever come too short of my desires,
Yet, fil'd with my abilities: Mine own ends
Have been mine so, that evermore they pointed To the good of your most sacred person, and
The profit of the state. For your great graces Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks;
My prayers to heaven for you; my loyalty,
Which ever has, and ever shall be growing,
Till death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen. Fairly answer'd;
A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated: The honour of it
Does pay the act of it: as, i' the contrary,
The foulness is the punishment. I presume,
That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour,
more

On you,⁵ than any; so your hand and heart,
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in love's particular, be more
To me, your friend, than any.⁶

Wol. I do profess,
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own; that am, have, and will be.⁷
Though all the world should crack their duty to you,
And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound, as thick as thought could make them, and Appear in forms more horrid; yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.⁸

K. Hen. 'Tis nobly spoken.
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast;
For you have seen him open't.—Read o'er this;
[Giving him papers.

the way of gratitude. My endeavours have ever come too short of my desires, though they have fil'd, i. e. equalled or kept pace with my abilities.

6 Severens says, as Jonson is supposed to have made some alterations in this play, it may not be amiss to compare the passage before us with another on the same subject in The New Inn:—

'He gave me my first breeding, I acknowledge;
Then shower'd his bounties on me like the hours
That open-handed sit upon the clouds,
And press the liberality of heaven
Down to the laps of thankful men.'

7 Beside your bond of duty as a loyal and obedient servant, you owe a particular devotion to me as your especial benefactor.

8 This is expressed with great obscurity; but seems to mean, 'that or such a man I am, have been, and will ever be.'

9 'Ille velut pelagi rupes remota, resistit.'

JEn. vii. 836.

The chiding flood is the resounding flood. To chide, to babble, and to brawl, were synonymous

And, after, this : and then to breakfast, with What appetite you have.

[Exit King, frowning upon CARDINAL WOLSEY : the Nobles throng after him, smiling, and whispering.]

Wol. What should this mean ?
What sudden anger's this ? how have I reap'd it ?
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes : So looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him ;
Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper ;
I fear, the story of his anger. 'Tis so ;
This paper has undone me :—'Tis the account
Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together
For mine own ends ; indeed, to gain the popedom,
And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence,
Fit for a fool to fall by ! What cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king ? Is there no way to cure this ?
No new device to beat this from his brains ?
I know, 'twill stir him strongly : Yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune
Will bring me off again. What's this ? To the Pope ?
The letter, as I live, with all the business
I writ to his holiness. Nay then, farewell !
I have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness ;
And, from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting : I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.

Re-enter the DUKES of NORFOLK¹ and SUFFOLK,
the EARL of SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal : who commands you

To render up the great seal presently
Into our hands ; and to confine yourself
To Asher-house,² my lord of Winchester's,
Till you hear further from his highness.

Wol. Stay,
Where's your commission, lords ? words cannot carry Authority so weighty.

Suf. Who dare cross them ?
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly ?

Wol. Till I find more than will, or words to do it,⁴
(I mean your malice,) know, officious lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded,—envy.
How eagerly ye follow my disgraces,
As if it fed ye ! and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin !
Follow your envious courses, men of malice ;
You have Christian warrant for them, and, no doubt,
In time will find their fit rewards. That seal
You ask with such a violence, the king
(Mine, and your master) with his own hand gave me:
Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours,
During my life ; and, to confirm his goodness,
Tied it by letters patents : Now, who'll take it ?

Suf. The king that gave it.

1 Thus in Marlowe's King Edward II :—

'Base fortune, now I see that in thy wheel
There is a point to which when men aspire,
They tumble headlong down. That point I touch'd ;
And seeing there was no place to mount up higher,
Why should I grieve at my declining fall ?'

2 The time of this play is from 1521, just before the duke of Buckingham's commitment, to 1533, when Elizabeth was born and christened. The duke of Norfolk, therefore, who is introduced in the first scene of the first act, or in 1522, is not the same person who here, or in 1529, demands the great seal from Wolsey ; for the former died in 1525. Having thus made two persons into one, so the poet has on the contrary made one person into two. The earl of Surrey here is the same who married the duke of Buckingham's daughter, as he himself tells us : but Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey, who married the duke of Buckingham's daughter, was at this time the individual above mentioned, duke of Norfolk.
Cavendish, and the chroniclers who copied from him, mention only the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk being sent to demand the great seal. The reason for adding a third and fourth person is not very apparent.

3 Asher was the ancient name of Esher, in Surrey.
Shakespeare forgot that Wolsey was himself Bishop of

Wol. It must be himself then.

Suf. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.

Wol. Proud lord, thou liest ;
Within these forty hours Surrey durst better
Have burnt that tongue, than said so.

Suf. Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law :
The heads of all thy brother cardinals
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy !
You sent me deputy for Ireland ;
Far from his succour, from the king, from all
That might have mercy on the fault thou gav'st him ;
Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an are.

Wol. This, and all else
This talking lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The duke by law Found his deserts : how innocent I was
From any private malice in his end,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.
If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell you,
You have as little honesty as honour ;
That I, in the way of loyalty and truth
Toward the king, my ever royal master,
Dare mate⁵ a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies.

Suf. By my soul,
Your long coat, priest, protects you ; those should'st feel

My sword if the life-blood of thee, else.—My lords,
Can ye endure to bear this arrogance ?
And from this fellow ? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded⁶ by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility ; let his grace go forward,
And dare us with his cap, like larks.⁷

Wol. All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

Suf. Yes, that goodness
Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion ;
The goodness of your intercepted packets,
You writ to the pope, against the king : your good-
ness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.—
My lord of Norfolk, as you are truly noble,
As you respect the common good, the state
Of our despised nobility, our issues,
Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen,—
Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles
Collected from his life :—I'll startle you
Worse than the sacring bell,⁸ when the brown wench
Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal.⁹

Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise this man,

But that I am bound in charity against it !

Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand :

But, thus much, they are foul ones.

Wol. So much fairer,

Winchester, having succeeded Bishop Fox in 1533, holding the see in commendam. Esher was one of the episcopal palaces belonging to that see.

4 That is, 'Till I find more than (your malicious) will and words to do it, I dare and must deny it.'

5 i. e. equal.

6 i. e. overpowered, overmastered. The force of this term may be best understood from a proverb given by Cograve, in v. Rosse, a jade. 'Il n'est si bon cheval qui n'en devindroit rose : It would anger a saint, or crestfall the best man living, to be so used.'

7 A cardinal's hat is scarlet, and the method of darning larks is by small mirrors on scarlet cloth, which engages the attention of the birds while the fowler draws his net over them.

8 The little bell which is rang to give notice of the elevation of the Host, and other offices of the Romish church, is called the sacring or consecration bell.

9 The amorous propensities of Cardinal Wolsey are much dwelt upon in Roy's Satire against him, printed in the Supplement to Mr. Park's edition of the Harleian Miscellany. But it was a common topic of invective against the clergy ; all came under the censure, and many no doubt richly deserved it.

And spotless, shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.

Sur. This cannot save you ;
I thank my memory, I yet remember
Some of these articles ; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty, cardinal,
You'll show a little honesty.

Vol. Speak on, sir :
I dare your worst objection : if I blush,
It is, to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I'd rather want those, than my head. Have at you.

First, that without the king's assent, or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate ; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that, in all you writ to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, Ego et Res meae
Was still inscrib'd ; in which you brought the king
To be your servant.

Sur. Then, that, without the knowledge
Either of king or council, when you went
Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,
Without the king's will, or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Sur. That, out of mere ambition, you have caus'd
Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin,¹

Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance

(By what means got, I leave to your own conscience,)

To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities ; to the more undoing
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are ;
Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord,
Press not a falling man too far ; 'tis virtue :
His faults lie open to the laws ; let them,
Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him
So little of his great self.

Sur. I forgive him.
Sur. Lord cardinal, the king's further pleasure is,—

Because of those things, you have done of late
By your power legatine² within this kingdom,
Fall into the compass of a præmunire.³—
That therefore such a writ be sued against you ;
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection :—This is my charge.

Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations
How to live better. For your stubborn answer,
About the giving back the great seal to us,
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank
you.

So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.
[Exeunt all but Wolsey.]

Vol. So farewell to the little good you bear me.
Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness !
This is the state of man ; To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,

And bears his blushing honours thick upon him ;
The third day, comes a frost, a killing frost ;
And,—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening,—nips his root,
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory ;
But far beyond my depth ; my high-blown pride
At length broke under me ; and now has left me,
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.
Vain pomp, and glory of this world, I hate ye ;
I feel my heart new open'd : O, how wretched
Is that poor man, that hangs on princes' favours !
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin,⁴
More pangs and fears than wars or women have ;
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.'—

Enter CROMWELL, amazedly.

Why, how now, Cromwell ?
Crom. I have no power to speak, sir.

Vol. What, amaz'd
At my misfortunes ? can thy spirit wonder,
A great man should decline ? Nay, an you weep,
I am fallen indeed.

Crom. How does your grace ?
Vol. Why, well ;

Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.
I know myself now ; and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd me,
I humbly thank his grace ; and from these shoulders,
These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken
A load would sink a navy, too much honour :
O, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden,
Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven.

Crom. I am glad, your grace has made that right use of it.

Vol. I hope, I have : I am able now, methinks,
(Out of a fortitude of soul I feel,)
To endure more miseries, and greater far,
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.⁵

What news abroad ?

Crom. The heaviest, and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the king.

Vol. God bless him !

Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas More is chosen
Lord chancellor in your place.

Vol. That's somewhat sudden :
But he's a learned man. May he continue
Long in his highness' favour, and do justice
For truth's sake, and his conscience ; that his bones,
When he has run his course, and sleeps in blessings,
May have a tomb of orphans' tears⁶ wept on 'em !
What more ?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury.

Vol. That's news, indeed.

Crom. Last, that the Lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open,⁷ as his queen,

6 Their ruin is 'their displeasure,' producing the downfall and ruin of him on whom it lights.

7 Thomas Storer, in his Metrical Life of Wolsey, 1696, has a similar image :—

'If once we fall, we fall Colossus-like,
We fall at once, like pillars of the sunne'

8 So in King Henry VI. Part 3 :—

'More can I bear, than you dare execute.'

9 The chancellor is the general guardian of orphans
'A tomb of tears (says Johnson) is very harsh.' Steevens has adduced an Epigram of Martial, in which the Heliades are said to 'weep a tomb of tears,' over a viper.

V. lib. iv. Epig. 69. Drummond, in 'his Tears for the Death of Moechades, has the same conceit :—

'The Muses, Phœbus, Love, have rais'd of their tearæ
A crystal tomb to him, through which his worth appears.'

There is a similar conceit in King Richard II. Act iii
Sc. 2.

10 In open is a Latinism. 'Et castris in aperto positi-tis,' Liv. l. 33 ; i. e. in a place exposed on all sides to view.

1 'This was one of the articles exhibited against Wolsey, but rather with a view to swell the catalogue than from any serious cause of accusation ; inasmuch as the Archbishops Cranmer, Bainbridge, and Warham were indulged with the same privileges. See Snelling's View of the Silver Coin of England.'—Douce.

2 Absolute.

3 As the pope's legate.
4 The judgment in a writ of præmunire (a barbarous word used instead of præmonere) is, that the defendant shall be out of the king's protection ; and his lands and tenements, goods and chattels forfeited to the king ; and that his body shall remain in prison at the king's pleasure. The old copy reads, erroneously, castles, instead of cattels, the old word for chattels, as it is found in Holinshed, p. 900.

5 Thus in Shakespeare's twenty-fifth Sonnet :—

'Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread,
But as the marigold in the sun's eye ;
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown they in their glory die.'

Going to chapel; and the voice is now
Only about her coronation.

Vol. There was the weight that pull'd me down.

O Cromwell,
The king has gone beyond me, all my glories
In that one woman I have lost for ever:
No sun shall ever usher forth mine honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited
Upon my smiles.¹ Go, get thee from me, Cromwell:
I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now
To be thy lord and master: Seek the king;
That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told him
What, and how true thou art: he will advance thee;
Some little memory of me will stir him
(I know his noble nature) not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too: Good Cromwell, Neglect him not; make use² now, and provide
For thine own future safety.

Crom. O, my lord,
Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master?
Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.—
The king shall have my service; but my prayers
For ever, and for ever, shall be yours.

Vol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me
Out of thy honest truth to play the woman.
Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me, Crom-
well;

And,—when I am forgotten, as I shall be;
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me more must be heard of,—say, I taught thee;
Say, Wolsey,—that once trod the ways of glory,
And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour,— Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;³
By that sin fell the angels; how can man, then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by't?
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate
thee;

Corruption wins not more than honesty;⁴
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:
Let all the ends thou aim'st at, be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's; then if thou fall'st, O

Cromwell,
Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Serve the king:

And,—Prythee, lead me in:
There take an inventory of all I have,⁵
To the last penny: 'tis the king's: my robe,
And my integrity to heaven, is all
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Crom-
well,

Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal

1 The number of persons who composed Cardinal Wolsey's household, according to the authentic copy of Cavendish, was five hundred. Cavendish's work, though written soon after the death of Wolsey, was not printed till 1641, and then in a most unfaithful and garbled manner, the object of the publication having been to render Laud odious, by showing how far church power had been extended by Wolsey, and how dangerous that prelate was, who, in the opinion of many, followed his example. In that spurious copy we read that the number of the household was eight hundred persons. In other MSS. and in Dr. Wordsworth's edition, we find it stated at one hundred and eighty persons.

2 i. e. interest.

3 Ambition here means a criminal and inordinate ambition, that endeavours to obtain honours unsuited to the state of a subject. Wolsey does not mean to condemn every kind of ambition, for in the preceding line he says he will instruct Cromwell how to rise.

4 Wolsey speaks here not as a statesman but as a Christian. Nothing makes the hour of disgrace more irksome than the reflection that we have been deaf to offers of reconciliation, and perpetuated that enmity which we might have converted into friendship.

5 This inventory is still to be seen among the Harleian MSS. No. 509. Some of the particulars may be seen in Stowe's Chronicle, p. 648. ed. 1631. See also Mr. El. He's Historical Letters, vol. ii. p. 16.

I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.⁶

Crom. Godd sir, have patience.

Vol. So I have. Farewell
The hopes of court! my hopes in heaven do dwell.
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. A Street in Westminster. Enter Two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You are well met once again.

2 Gent. And so are you.

1 Gent. You come to take your stand here, and behold

The Lady Anne pass from her coronation?

2 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter,

The duke of Buckingham came from his trial.

1 Gent. 'Tis very true: but that time offer'd sorrow;

This, general joy.

2 Gent. 'Tis well: The citizens, I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds,⁷ (As, let them have their rights, they are ever forward)

In celebration of this day with shows,
Pageants and sights of honour.

1 Gent. Never greater,
Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains,
That paper in your hand?

1 Gent. Yes; 'tis the list
Of those, that claim their offices this day,

By custom of the coronation.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims

To be high steward; next, the duke of Norfolk,

He to be earl marshal: you may read the rest.

2 Gent. I thank you, sir; had I not known those customs,

I should have been beholden to your paper.

But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine,

The princess dowager? how goes her business?

1 Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other

Learned and reverend fathers of his order,

Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off

From Ampthill, where the princess lay; to which

She oft was cited by them, but appear'd not:

And, to be short, for not appearance, and

The king's late scruple, by the main assent

Of all these learned men she was divorc'd,

And the late marriage⁸ made of none effect:

6 This was actually said by the cardinal when on his death-bed, in a conversation with Sir William Kingston; the whole of which is very interesting:—"Well, well, Master Kingston," quoth he, "I see the matter against me how it is framed, but if I had serv'd my God as diligently as I have serv'd my king, he would not have given me over in my grey hairs." Howbeit this is the just reward that I must receive for my worldly diligence and pains that I have had to do him service; only to satisfy his vain pleasure, not regarding my godly duty."

7 When Samrah, deputy governor of Bassorah, was deposed by Moawryah, the sixth caliph, he is reported to have expressed himself in the same manner:—"If I had serv'd God so well as I serv'd him, he would never have condemn'd me to all eternity." A similar sentiment also occurs in The Earle of Murrion's Tragedie, by Churchyard, 1593. Antonio Perez, the disgraced favourite, made the same complaint. Mr. Douce has also pointed out a remarkable passage in Pittscottie's History of Scotland, p. 261, edit. 1789, in which there is a great resemblance to these pathetic words of the cardinal. James V. imagined that Sir James Hamilton addressed him thus in a dream:—"Though I was a sinner against God, I failed not to thee. Had I been as good a servant to the Lord my God as I was to thee, I had not died that death."

8 Malone's explanation of this passage is entirely erroneous: royal minds are high minds, or as we still say, princely dispositions. "To avaint himself royally: Magnificence effere."—Baret.

6 i. e. the marriage lately considered as valid

Since which, she was removed to Kimbolton,
Where she remains now, sick.

2 Gent. Alas, good lady!— [Trumpets.
The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

THE ORDER OF THE PROCESSION.

A lively flourish of Trumpets: then enter

1. Two Judges.

2. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before him.

3. Choristers singing. [Music.

4. Mayor of London, bearing the mace. Then Garter, in his coat-of-arms,¹ and on his head a gilt copper crown.

5. Marquis Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-coronel of gold. With him the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.

6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.

7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports; under it, the Queen in her robe; her hair richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side of her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.

2 Gent. A royal train, believe me.—These I know:—

Who's that, that bears the sceptre?

1 Gent. Marquis Dorset:
And that the earl of Surrey with the rod.

2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman: and that should be

The duke of Suffolk.

1 Gent. 'Tis the same; high steward.
2 Gent. And that may lord of Norfolk?

1 Gent. Yes.
3 Gent. Heaven bless thee!

[Looking on the Queen.

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.—
Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel;
Our king has all the ladies in his arms,
And more and richer, when he strains² that lady;
I cannot blame his conscience.

1 Gent. They, that bear
The cloth of honour over her, are four barons
Of the Cinque-ports.

2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all are near her.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, duchess of Norfolk.

1 Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.
2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars,
indeed;

And, sometimes, falling ones.
1 Gent. No more of that.

[Exit Procession, with a great flourish of Trumpets.

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! Where have you been broiling?

2 Gent. Among the crowd of the abbey; where a finger

Could not be wedg'd in more; I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy.

2 Gent. You saw

The ceremony?

3 Gent. That I did.

1 i. e. in his coat of office, emblazoned with the royal arms.

2 Strain is here used in the sense of the Latin comprimere: 'Virgo ex eo compressu grvida facta est.' So Chapman in his version of the Twenty-first Illiad: 'Bright Peribona, whom the flood, &c. Compress'd.'

1 Gent. How was it?

3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.

2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

3 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream³

Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her; while her grace sat down
To rest awhile, some half an hour, or so,
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people.
Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noise arose
As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks,
(Doublets, I think,) flew up; and had their faces
Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great bellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams⁴
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make them reel before them. No man Could say, This is my wife, there; all were woken
So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But what follow'd?

3 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest paces

Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and, saintlike,
Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly
Then rose again, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the archbishop of Canterbury
She had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems,
Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung Tu Deus. So she parted,
And with the same full state pac'd back again
To York Place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. Sir, you
Must no more call it York Place, that is past:
For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost;

'Tis now the king's, and call'd—Whitehall.

3 Gent. I know it;
But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name

Is fresh about me.

2 Gent. What two reverend bishops
Were those that went on each side of the queen?

3 Gent. Stokesly and Gardiner; the one, of Winchester, (Newly prefer'd from the king's secretary,)

The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,
The virtuous Cranmer.

3 Gent. All the land knows that:
However, yet there's no great breach; when it comes,

Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell:
A man in much esteem with the king, and truly

A worthy friend.—The king
Has made him master of the jewel-house,

And one, already, of the privy council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.

3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which

Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests;
Something I can command. As I walk thither,
I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.^b Kimbolton. Enter KATHARINE,
Dowager, sick; led between GRIFFITH and PATIENCE.

Grif. How does your grace?
Kath. O, Griffith, sick to death.

3 ——— ingentem foribus domus alta superbis
Mans saluantium totis vomit edibus undam.
Virg. Georg. ii. 461.

4 i. e. battering rams.
6 This scene is above any other part of Shakespeare's

My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the earth,
Willing to leave their burden: Reach a chair;—
So,—now, methinks, I feel a little ease.
Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,
That the great child of honour, cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?

Grif. Yes, madam; but, I think, your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to't.

Kath. Pr'ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:

If well, he stepp'd before me, happily,¹

For my example.

Grif. Well, the voice goes, madam:
For after the stout Earl Northumberland
Arrested him at York, and brought him forward
(As a man sorely tainted) to his answer,
He felt sick suddenly, and grew so ill,
He could not sit his mule.²

Kath. Alas! poor man!

Grif. At last, with easy roads,³ he came to Leicester,

Lodg'd in the abbey; where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him;
To whom he gave these words,—*O, father abbot,
An old man, broken with the storms of state,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye;
Give him a little earth for charity!*

So went to bed: where eagerly his sickness
Pursu'd him still; and, three nights after this,
About the hour of eight, (which he himself Foretold, should be his last,) full of repentance,
Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows,
He gave his honours to the world again,
His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest; his faults lie gently on him!
Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him,
And yet with charity,—He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach,⁴ ever ranking
Himself with princes; one, that by suggestion
Ty'd all the kingdom:⁵ simony was fair play;
His own opinion was his law: 'T the presence
He would say untruths; and be ever double,
Both in his words and meaning: He was never,
But where he meant to ruin, pitiful:
His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he is now, nothing.
Of his own body he was ill,⁶ and gave
The clergy ill example.

Grif. Noble madam,
Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues

We write in water. May it please your highness
To hear me speak his good now?

Kath. Yes, good Griffith;
I were malicious else.

Grif. This cardinal,
Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly,
Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle.
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one;
Exceeding wise, fair spoken, and persuading.
Lofly, and sour, to them that lov'd him not;
But, to those men that sought him, sweet as summer.

And though he were unsatisfied in getting,
(Which was a sin,) yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely: Ever witness for him
Those twins of learning, that he rais'd in you,
Ipswich, and Oxford: one of which fell with him,
Unwilling to outlive the good that did it;⁷
The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being true:
And, to add greater honours to his age
Than man could give him, he died, fearing God.

Kath. After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me,
With thy religious truth and modesty,
Now in his ashes honour: Peace be with him! —
Patience, be near me still; and set me lower;
I have not long to trouble thee.—Good Griffith,
Cause the musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to.

Sad and solemn Music.

Grif. She is asleep: Good weach, let's sit down
quiet,

For fear we wake her;—Softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages, clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of bay, and golden vizards on their faces; branches of bay, or palm, in their hands. They first congee unto her, then dance; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head; at which, the two other four make reverend courtesies; then the two

Was fashion'd to much honour. From his cradle
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one.

² Unwilling to outlive the good that did it.

³ Good appears here to be put for goodness, as in the passage just above:—

'May it please your highness
To hear me speak his good now?'

⁴ This speech is formed on the following passage in Holinshed:—'This cardinal (as Edmund Campion in his Historie of Ireland described him,) was a man undoubtedly born to honour; I think (saith he) some prince's bastard, no butcher's sonne; exceeding wise, faire-spoken, high-minded, full of revenge, virtuous of his body, loffie to his enemies, were they never so bigge, to those that accepted and sought his friendship wonderful courteous; a ripe schoolman, thrall to affectiones, brought a bed with flatterie; insaciable to get, and more princelie in bestowing, as appeareth by his two colleges at Ipswich and Oxenford, the one overthrowen with his fall, the other unfinished, and yet as it lyeth, for an house of studentes (considering all the appurtenances) incomparable throughout Christendom.—He held and injoied at once the bishopricks of Yorke, Duresme, and Winchester, the dignities of lord cardinall, legat, and chancellor, the abbey of St. Albans, diverse priories, sundrie fat benefices in commendam; a great preferrer of his servants, an advancer of learning, scute in every quarrel, never happy till this his overthrow; wherein he shewed such moderation, and ended so perfectlie, that the houre of his death did him more honour than all the pomp of his life passed.' We have a similar thought in Macbeth:—
'—nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it.'

tragedies, and perhaps above any scene of any other poet, tender and pathetic, without gods, or furies, or poisons, or precipices, without the help of romantic circumstances, without improbable sallies of poetical lamentation, and without any throes of tumultuous misery.—Johnson.

py, peradventure; but it here more probably means opportunity.

² Cardinals generally rode on mules, as a mark perhaps of humility. Cavendish says that Wolsey 'rode like a cardinal sumptuously upon his mule, trapped altogether in crimson velvet and gilt stirrups.'

³ Roads, or rode, here, is the same as courses, stages, or journeyes. From whence also was formed out-roads, in-roads, &c.

⁴ I. e. of unbounded pride or haughtiness. Thus Hol-inshed:—'This cardinal was of a great stomach, for he computed himself equal with princes, and by crafty suggestions got into his hands innumerable treasure:
he forced little on simony, and was not pitifull, and stood affectionate in his own opinion: In open presence he would lie and seie untruth, and was double both in speech and meaning: he would promise much and perform little: he was vicious of his body, and gave the clergie evil example.' Ed. 1587, p. 922.

⁵ Suggestion here, I think, means wicked prompting.
It is used in this sense in The Tempest. I have no doubt that we should read tyth'd instead of ty'd, as Dr. Farmer proposed, and as the passage quoted from Holinshed warrants. The word tythes was not exclusively used to signify the emoluments of the clergy.

⁶ To be ill, evil, or naught of body, was to be addicted to women: to be lewd in life and manners.

⁷ This passage has been absurdly pointed in all the modern editions:—

that held the garland, deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head: which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order; at which (as it were by inspiration) she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven: and so in their dancing they vanish, carrying the garland with them. The music continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?

And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye?

Grif. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for:

Saw ye none enter, since I slept?

Grif. None, madam.

Kath. No? Saw you not, even now, a blessed troop

Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun?
They promis'd me eternal happiness;
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall,
Assuredly.

Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good dreams
Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave,
They are harsh and heavy to me. [Music ceases.]

Pat. Do you note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?
How long her face is drawn? How pale she looks,
And of an earthly cold? Mark you her eyes?

Grif. She is going, wench; pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. An't like your grace,—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow:
Deserve we no more reverence?

Grif. You are to blame,
Knowing, she will not lose her wonted greatness,
To use so rude behaviour: go to, kneel.¹

Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon;

My haste made me unmannerly: There is staying
A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: But this fellow

Let me ne'er see again.

[Exeunt GRIFFITH and Messenger.]

Re-enter GRIFFITH, with CAPUCIUS.

If my sight fail not,
You should be lord ambassador from the emperor,
My royal nephew, and your name Capucius.

Cap. Madam, the same, your servant.

Kath. O my lord,
The times, and titles, now are alter'd strangely
With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray you,
What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble lady,
First, mine own service to your grace; the next,
The king's request that I would visit you;
Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me

Sends you his princely commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O my good lord, that comfort comes too late;

'Tis like a pardon after execution:
That gentle physic given in time, had cur'd me;
But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.
How does his highness?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do! and ever flourish,
When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name
Banish'd the kingdom!—Patience, is that letter,
I caus'd you write, yet sent away?

Pat. No, madam. [Giving it to KATHARINE.]

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my lord the king.²

Cap. Most willing, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness
The model³ of our chaste loves, his young daughter:⁴

The dew of heaven fall thick in blessings on her!—
Beseeching him, to give her virtuous breeding,
(She is young, and of a noble modest nature;
I hope, she will deserve well;) and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him,
Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long
Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully:
Of which there is not one, I dare avow,
(And now I should not lie,) but will deserve,
For virtue and true beauty of the soul,
For honesty, and decent carriage,
A right good husband, let him be a noble;
And, sure, those men are happy that shall have
them.

The last is, for my men: they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me;—
That they may have their wages duly paid them
And something over to remember me by;
If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life,
And able means, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole contents:—And, good my
lord,

By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish christian peace to souls departed,
Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king
To do me this last right.

Cap. By heaven, I will;
Or let me lose the fashion of a man!

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his highness;
Say, his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world: tell him, in death I bless'd him,
For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell,
My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet. I must to bed;
Call in more women.—When I am dead, good wench,

Let me be us'd with honour; strow me over
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm me,
Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
I can no more.—

[Exeunt, leading KATHARINE.]

¹ Gray had probably this passage in his mind when he made his Bard exclaim on a similar occasion:—

'Stay, O stay! nor thus forlorn

Leave me unbles'd, unpitied, here to mourn.'

² Queen Katharine's servants, after the divorce at Dunstable, and the Pope's curse stuck up at Dunkirk, were directed to be sworn to serve her not as queen but as princess dowager. Some refused to take the oath, and so were forced to leave her service; and as for those who took it and stayed, she would not be served by them, by which means she was almost destitute of attendants. See Hall's Chronicle, fol. 219. Bishop Burnet says that all the women about her still called her queen. Hist. of the Reformation, p. 162.

³ '—perceiving himself to waxe verie weake and feeble, and to feele death approaching at hand, caus'd one of his gentlewomen to write a letter to the king,

commending to him his daughter and his, beseeching him to stand good father unto him; and further desired him to have consideration of his gentlewomen that had served him, and to see them bestowed in marriage. Further, that it would please him to appoint that his servants might have their due wages, and a yeares wages beside.' Hollinshed, p. 939. This letter probably fell into the hands of Polydore Virgil, who was then in England, and has preserved it in the twenty-seventh book of his history. Lord Herbert has given a translation of it in his History of King Henry VIII.

⁴ Model, it has been already observed, signified, in the language of our ancestors, a representation or image. Thus in The London Prodigal, 1609:—

'Dear copy of my husband! O let me kiss thee!'

[Kissing a picture.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. A Gallery in the Palace. Enter GARDINER, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a Torch before him, met by Sir THOMAS LOVELL.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy, is't not?

Boy. It hath struck.

Gar. These should be hours for necessities, Not for delights: 'times to repair our nature With comforting repose, and not for us To waste these times.—Good hour of night, Sir Thomas!

Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord?

Gar. I did, Sir Thomas; and left him at primo²

With the duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too, Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gar. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovell. What's the matter?

It seems, you are in haste: an if there be No great offence belongs to't, give your friend Some touch³ of your late business: Affairs, that walk

(As they say, spirits do) at midnight, have In them a wilder nature, than the business That seeks despatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you; And durst command a secret to your ear Much weightier than this work. The queen's in labour,

They say, in great extremity; and fear'd She'll with the labour end.

Gar. The fruit, she goes with, I pray for heartily; that it may find Good time, and live; but for the stock, Sir Thomas,

I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks, I could Cry the amen; and yet my conscience says She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does Deserve our better wishes.

Gar. But, sir, sir,— Hear me, Sir Thomas: You are a gentleman Of mine own way;⁴ I know you wise, religious; And, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well,— 'Twill not, Sir Thomas Lovell, take't of me, Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she, Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two The most remark'd i' the kingdom. As for Cromwell,—

Beside that of the jewel-house, he's made master O' the rolls, and the king's secretary: further, sir, Stands in the gap and trade⁵ of more prebends, With which the time will load him: The archbishop

Is the king's hand and tongue; And who dare speak One syllable against him?

Gar. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas, There are that dare; and I myself have ventur'd To speak my mind of him: and, indeed, this day, Sir, (I may tell it you), I think, I have Incens'd⁶ the lords o' the council, that he is (For so I know he is, they know he is)

Gardiner himself is not much delighted. The delights at which he hints seem to be the king's diversions, which keep him in attendance.

² Primo, prime, or primavista. A game at cards, said by some writers to be one of the oldest known in England. It is described by Duchat in his notes on Rabelais, Mr. Daines Barrington in the Archeologia, vol. viii. p. 132, and more fully by Mr. Nares in his Glossary, and in an Essay on the Origin of Playing Cards, 1816, to which our limits oblige us to refer the reader desirous of further information.

³ I. e. some hint of the business that keeps you awake so late.

⁴ Of mine own opinion in religion.

⁵ I. e. course or way. 'Iter pro incepto et insituto, a way, trade or course.'—Cooper.

⁶ Incens'd or incensed in this instance, and in some

A most arch heretic, a pestilence That does infect the land: with which they moved, Have broken⁷ with the king; who hath so far Given ear to our complaint (of his great grace And princely care; for foreseeing those fell mischiefs Our reasons laid before him,) he hath commanded To-morrow morning to the council board He be convented.⁸ He's a rank weed, Sir Thomas, And we must root him out. From your affairs, I hinder you too long: good night, Sir Thomas.

Lov. Many good nights, my lord: I rest your servant. [Exeunt GARDINER and Page.]

As LOVELL is going out, enter the King, and the DUKE of SUFFOLK.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-night; My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.

Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before.

K. Hen. But little, Charles; Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play. Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her What you commanded me, but by her woman I sent your message: who return'd her thanks In the greatest humbleness, and desir'd your high ness Most heartily to pray for her.

K. Hen. What say'st thou? ha! To pray for her? what, is she crying out?

Lov. So said her woman; and that her sufferance made Almost each pang a death.⁹

K. Hen. Alas, good lady!

Suf. God safely quit her of her burden, and With gentle travail, to the gladdening of Your highness with as her!

K. Hen. 'Tis midnight, Charles, Pr'ythee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember The estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone; For I must think of that, which company Would not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your highness A quiet night, and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

K. Hen. Charles, good night.— [Exit SUFFOLK.]

Enter SIR ANTHONY DENEY.¹⁰

Well, sir, what follows?

Den. I have brought my lord the archbishop, As you commanded me.

K. Hen. Ha! Canterbury?

Den. Ay, my good lord.

K. Hen. 'Tis true: Where is he, Denny?

Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Bring him to us. [Exit DENEY.]

Lov. This is about that which the bishop spake: I am happily¹¹ come hither. [And.]

Re-enter DENEY, with CRANMER.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery. [LOVELL seems to slay.]

Ha!—I have said.—Be gone.

What!— [Exeunt LOVELL and DENEY.]

Cran. I am fearful:—Wherefore frowns he thus? 'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well.

others, only means instructed, informed: still in use in Staffordshire. It properly signifies to infuse into the mind, to prompt or instigate. 'Invidia atrodo menseme Patrum fodit Saturnia: Juno incenseth the senators' minds with secret envy against,' &c.—Cooper.

⁷ That is, have broken silence; told their minds to the king.

⁸ I. e. summoned, convened.

⁹ We have almost the same sentiment before in Act ii. Sc. 2:—

—It is a sufferance panging

As soul and body's severing.

¹⁰ The substance of this and the two following scenes is taken from Fox's Acts and Monuments of the Christian Martyrs, &c. 1533

¹¹ I. e. luckily, opportunely. Vitis nova i, p. 148.

K. Hen. How now, my lord? You do desire to know
Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. It is my duty
To attend your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. 'Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious b'rd of Canterbury.
Come, you and I must walk a turn together;
I have news to tell you: Come, come, give me your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And am right sorry to repeat what follows:
I have, and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord,
Grievous complaints of you: which, being consid-
er'd,

Have mov'd us and our council, that you shall
This morning come before us; where, I know,
You cannot with such freedom purge yourself,
But that, till further trial, in those charges
Which will require your answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your house our Tower: You a brother of us!

It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness;
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder: for, I know,
There's none stands under more calumnious tongues,
Than I myself, poor man.

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury;
Thy truth, and thy integrity, is rooted
In us, thy friend: Give me thy hand, stand up;
Er'thence, let's walk. Now, by my holy dame,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd
You would have given me your petition, that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you Without intercession^a further.

Cran. Most dread liege,
The good I stand on is my truth, and honesty;
If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies,
Will triumph o'er my person; which I weigh^b not,
Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing
What can be said against me.

K. Hen. Knew you not how
Your state stands i' the world, with the whole world?
Your enemies are many, and not small: their practices

Must bear the same proportion: and not ever^c
The justice and the truth o' the question carries
The due o' the verdict with it: At what ease
Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? such things have been done.
You are powerfully opposed; and with a malice
Of as great size. Ween^d you of better luck,
I mean, in perjur'd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, whiles here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to;
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And see your own destruction.

Cran. God, and your majesty,
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me!

K. Hen. Be of good cheer;
They shall no more prevail, than we give way to.
Keep comfort to you; and this morning see
You do appear before them; if they shall chance,
In charging you with matters, to commit you,
The best persuasions to the contrary
Fail not to use, and with what vehemency

1 You being one of the council, it necessary to imprison you, that the witnesses against you may not be deser'd.

2 Indurance, which Shakespeare found in Fox's narrative, means here imprisonment; 'one or two of the chiefest of the council, making their excuse, declared, that in requesting his indurance, it was rather meant for his trial and his purgation—than for any malice conceived against him.'

3 I. e. have no value for.

The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties
Will render you no remedy, this ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us
There make before them.—Look, the good man weeps!

He's honest, on mine honour. God's blest mother!
I swear, he is true hearted; and a soul
None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you.—[Exit CRANMER.]
He has strangled

His language in his tears.

Enter an old Lady.^a

Genl. [Within.] Come back; What mean you?
Lady. I'll not come back: the tidings that I bring
Will make my beldness manners.—Now, good angels
Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person
Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen. Now, by thy looks
I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd?
Say, ay; and of a boy.

Lady. Ay, ay, my liege;
And of a lovely boy: The God of heaven
Both now and ever bless her!—'tis a girl,
Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen
Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you,
As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen. Lovell,—

Enter LOVELL.

Lov. Sir.
K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks. I'll to the queen. [Exit King.]

Lady. An hundred marks! By this light I'll have more.

An ordinary groom is for such payment,
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the girl is like to him?
I will have more, or else unsay't: and now
While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue. [Exit]

SCENE II. Lobby before the Council Chamber.

Enter CHAMBER; Servants, Door-keeper, &c. attending.

Cran. I hope, I am not too late; and yet the gentleman,

That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me
To make great haste. All fast? what means this?—
How!

Who waits there?—Sure you know me?

D. Keep. Yes, my lord;
But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?

D. Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd for.

Enter DOCTOR BUTTS.

Cran. So.
Butts. This is a piece of malice. I am glad,
I came this way so happily. The king
Shall understand it presently. [Exit BUTTS.]

Cran. [Aside.] 'Tis Butts,
The king's physician: As he past along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me!
Pray heaven, he sound not my disgrace! For certain,
This is of purpose lay'd by some that hate me,
(God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice,)
To quench mine honour: they would shame to make me

Wait else at door; a fellow counsellor,
Among boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures
Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

4 Not ever is an uncommon expression, and here means not always.

5 To ween is to think or imagine. Though now obsolete, the word was common to all our ancient writers.
Overweening, its derivative, is still retained in the modern vocabulary.

6 This, says Steevens, is I suppose the same old cast that appears with Anne Boleyn in a former scene.

7 The humour of this passage consists in the talkative old lady, who in her hurry said it was a boy, adding bless her, before she corrects her mistake.

Enter, at a Window above, the King and Butts.

Butts. I'll show your grace the strangest sight,—

K. Hen. What's that, Butts?

Butts. I think your highness saw this mearly a day.

K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it?

Butts.

There, my lord : The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury ; Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants, Pages, and footboys.

K. Hen. Ha ! 'Tis he, indeed :

Is this the honour they do another ?
'Tis well, there's one above them yet. I had thought They had parted* so much honesty among them (At least, good manners) as not thus to suffer A man of his place, and so near our favour, To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures, And at the door too, like a post with packets. By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery : Let them alone, and draw the curtain close :² We shall hear more anon.— [Exeunt.]

THE COUNCIL CHAMBER.

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk, Earl of Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Gardiner, and Cromwell. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand ; a seat being left void above him, as for the Archbishop of Canterbury. The rest seat themselves in order on each side. Cromwell at the lower end, as Secretary.

Chan. Speak to the business, master secretary : Why are we met in council ?

Crom. Please your honours, The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gar. Has he had knowledge of it ?

Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there ?

D. Keep. Without, my noble lords ?

Gar. Yes.

D. Keep. My lord archbishop ; And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now.⁴

[CROMWELL approaches the Council-table.]
Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry To sit here at this present, and behold That chair stand empty : But we all are men, In our own natures frail, and capable⁵ Of our flesh, few are angels : out of which frailty, And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us, Have misdeem'd yourself, and not a little, Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling The whole realm, by your teaching, and your chaplains (For so we are inform'd,) with new opinions, Divers, and dangerous ; which are heresies, And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gar. Which reformation must be sudden too, My noble lords : for those that tame wild horses, Pace them in their hands to make them gentle ; But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur them,

Till they obey the manage. If we suffer (Out of our easiness, and childish pity

To one man's honour) this contagious sickness, Farewell, all physic : And what follows then ? Commotions, uproars, with a general taint Of the whole state : as of late days, our neighbours, The upper Germany,⁶ can dearly witness, Yet freshly pitied in our memories.

Crom. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress Both of my life and office, I have labour'd, And with no little study, that my teaching, And the strong course of my authority, Might go one way, and safely ; and the end Was ever, to do well : nor is there living (I speak it with a single heart,⁷ my lords,) A man, that more detests, more stirs against, Both in his private conscience, and his place, Defacers of a public peace, than I do. 'Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart With less allegiance in it ! Men, that make Envy and crooked malice, nourishment, Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships, That, in this case of justice, my accusers, Be what they will, may stand forth face to face, And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord, That cannot be ; you are a counsellor, And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment, We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness' pleasure,

And our consent, for better trial of you, From hence you be committed to the Tower ; Where, being but a private man again, You shall know many dare accuse you boldly, More than, I fear, you are provided for.

Crom. Ah, my good lord of Winchester, I thank you,

You are always my good friend ; if your will pass, I shall both find your lordship judge and juror, You are so merciful : I see your end, 'Tis my undoing : Love, and meekness, lord, Become a churchman better than ambition ; Win straying souls with modesty again, Cast none away. That I shall clear myself, Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience, I make as little doubt, as you do conscience, In doing daily wrongs. I could say more, But reverence to your callin' makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary, That's the plain truth ; your painted gloss discovers, To men that understand you, words and weakness.⁸

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little, By your good favour, too sharp ; men so noble, However faulty, yet should find respect For what they have been : 'tis a cruelty, To load a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary, I cry your honour mercy ; you may, worst Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord ?

Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer Of this new sect ? ye are not sound.

Crom.

Not sound ?

Gar. Not sound, I say.

1 The suspicious vigilance of our ancestors contrived windows which overlooked the insides of chapels, halls, kitchens, passages, &c. Some of these convenient peepholes may still be seen in colleges, and such ancient houses as have not suffered from the reformations of modern architecture. In a letter from Matthew Parker, archbishop of Canterbury, 1573, printed in Seward's Anecdotes, vol. iv. p. 370, ed. 1796 :—'And if it please her majesty, she may come in through my galleries, and see the disposition of the hall in dynner time, at a window opening thereinto.' Without a previous knowledge of this custom Shakespeare's scenery in the present instance would be obscure.

2 i. e. shared, possessed.

3 That is, the curtain of the balcony or upper stage, wherethe king now is. See Malone's Account of the early English Stage, vol. iii. of the late edition by Mr. Boswell.

4 The old stage direction at the commencement of this scene is 'A council table brought in with chayres and stools and placed under the state.' Our ancestors were counted to be told that the same spot, without any change of its appearance (except perhaps the drawing back of a curtain) was at once the outside and the inside of the council chamber. The modern reader will easily conceive how this scene might now be represented on the stage, who has witnessed some of the ingenious and prompt scenes of metamorphoses by that admirable comedian Matthew.

5 'Capable of our flesh,' probably means 'susceptible of the failings inherent in humanity.'

6 Alluding to the heresy of Thomas Muntzer, which sprung up in Saxony in the years 1521 and 1522.

7 i. e. without duplicity or guile. Thus in Asa, II. 46, 'In singleness of heart.' I have before had occasion to observe that single and simple were synonymous.

8 Those that understand you, under this painted gloss, this fair outside, discover your empty talk and your false reasoning.

Crom. 'Would you were half so honest;
Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

Gar. I shall remember this bold language.

Crom. Do.
Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;

Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. And I.

Chan. Then thus for you, my lord,—It stands agreed,

I take it, by all voices, that forthwith
You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner;
There to remain, till the king's further pleasure
Be known unto us: Are you all agreed, lords?

All. We are.

Crom. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other
Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome!
Let some of the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

For me?

Must I go like a traitor thither?

Gar. Receive him,
And see him safe to the Tower.

Crom. Stay, good my lords,
I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords;
By virtue of that ring, I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Chan. This is the king's ring.

Suf. 'Tis no counterfeit.

Suf. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven: I told ye all,
When we first put this dangerous stone a rolling,
'T would fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords,
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Chan. 'Tis now too certain:
How much more is his life in value with him?
'Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales, and informations,
Against this man (whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at.)
Ye blew the fire that burns ye: Now have at ye.

Enter the King, frowning on them; takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince;
Not only good and wise, but most religious:
One that, in all obedience, makes the church
The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen
That holy duty, out of dear respect,

1 It seems to have been a custom, began probably in the dark ages, before literature was generally diffused, and before the regal power experienced the restraints of law, for every monarch to have a ring, the temporary possession of which invested the holder with the same authority as the owner himself could exercise. The production of it was sufficient to suspend the execution of the law; it procured indemnity for offences committed, and imposed acquiescence and submission to whatever was done under its authority. See Procopius de Bell. Vandal. l. i. p. 15. The traditional story of the earl of Essex, Queen Elizabeth, and the countess of Nottingham, long considered as an incident of a romance, is generally known, and now as generally credited. See Birch's Negotiations, p. 206.

2 i. e. the commendations above mentioned are too thin and bare, the intention of them is too palpably seen through. The old copy reads, 'thin and bare;' the emendation was suggested by Malone.

3 Who dares to suppose that the place or situation in which he is, is not suitable to thee also? Who supposes that thou art not as fit for the office of a privy councillor as he is?

4 i. e. 'You must be godfather [to] and answer for her.' Our prelates formerly were often employed on office occasions. Cranmer was godfather to Edward VI. See Hall, fo. 232. Archbishop Warham to Henry's election by Queen Katharine; and the bishop of Winchester to Henry himself. See Sandford, 479, 486.

His royal self in judgment comes to bear
The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations,

Bishop of Winchester. But know, I come not
To hear such flattery now, and in my presence;

They are too thin and bare to hide offences.²
To me you cannot reach, you play the spaniel;

And think with wagging of your tongue to win me;
But, whatsoever thou tak'st me for, I am sure,

Thou hast a cruel nature, and a bloody.—
Good man, [To CRANMER,] sit down. Now let me see the proudest

He, that dares most, but wag his finger at thee:

By all that's holy, he had better starve,

Than but once think his place becomes thee not.³

Suf. May it please your grace,—

K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me.

I had thought, I had had men of some understanding

And wisdom of my council; but I find none.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,

This good man (few of you deserve that title,)

This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy

At chamber door? and one as great as you are?

Why, what a shame was this? Did my commission

Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye

Power as he was a counsellor to try him,

Not as a groom; There's some of ye, I see,

More out of malice than integrity,

Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean;

Which ye shall never have, while I live.

Chan. Thus far,

My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace

To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpos'd

Concerning his imprisonment, was rather

(If there be faith in men) meant for his trial,

And fair purgation to the world, than malice;

I am sure, in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him;

Take him, and use him well, he's worthy of it.

I will say thus much for him,—If a prince

May be beholden to a subject, I

Am, for his love and service, so to him.

Make me no more ado, but all embrace him:

Be friends, for shame, my lords.—My lord of Canterbury,

I have a suit which you must not deny me;

That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism,

You must be godfather, and answer for her.⁴

Crom. The greatest monarch now alive may glory

In such an honour; how may I deserve it,

That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spoons; you shall have

5 It was an ancient custom (which is not yet quite out of use) for the sponsors at christenings to offer silver or silver gilt spoons as a present to the child. The ancient offerings upon such occasions were called Apostle-spoons, because the extremity of the handle was formed into the figure of one or other of the apostles. Such as were opulent and generous gave the whole twelve; those who were more moderately rich or liberal, escaped at the expense of the four evangelists; or even some times contented themselves with presenting one spoon only, which exhibited the figure of any saint, in honour of whom the child received its name. Thus, in Middleton's Chaste Maid of Cheapside:—

'2 Goss. What has he given her?—what is it, gossip?

'3 Goss. A fair high standing cup, and two great poete spoons, one of them gilt.'

The following story is related of Shakespeare and Ben Jonson in a collection of anecdotes, entitled Merry Pinnacles and Jests. MSS. Harl. 6365:—

'Shakespeare was godfather to one of Ben Jonson's children; and after the christening, being in deep study, Jonson came to cheer him up, and ask'd him why he was so melancholy? No fakh, Ben, says he, not I; but I have been considering a great while what should be the fittest gift for me to bestow upon my godchild, and I have resolv'd at last. I prythee what? says he. P' faith, Ben, I'll give him a dozen good latten [Latin] spoons, and thou shalt translate them.' The collector of these anecdotes appears to have been a nephew of Sir Roger L'Estrange. He names Donne as the relator of this story.

Two noble partners with you; the old duchess of Norfolk,
And lady marquis Dorset; Will these please you?
Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you,
Embrace, and love this man.

Gar. With a true heart,
And brother-love, I do it.

Cran. And let heaven
Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation.

K. Hen. Good man, those joyful tears show thy true heart.

The common voice, I see, is verified
Of thee, which says thus, *Do my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turn, and he is your friend forever.*—
Come lords, we trifle time away; I long
To have this young one made a Christian.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The Palace Yard. Noise and Tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals:
Do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.¹

[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you rogue: Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches to them.—I'll scratch your heads:
You must be seeing christenings? Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Man. Pray, sir, be patient; 'tis as much impossible (Unless we sweep them from the door with cannons,)

To scatter them, as 'tis to make them sleep
On May-day morning; which will never be.²
We may as well push against Paul's, as stir them.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?
Man. Alas, I know not; how gets the tide in?
As much as one sound cudgel of four foot
(You see the poor remainder) could distribute,
I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.
Man. I am not Samson, nor Sir Guy, nor Col-brand,⁴ to mow them down before me: but, if I spared any, that had a head to it, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, let me never hope to see a chine again; and that I would not for a cow, God save her.

[Within.] Do you hear, master Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy.—Keep the door close, airrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock them down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in?⁵
or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a fry of fornication is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand; here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier⁶ by his face, for, of my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in his nose: all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: That fire-drake⁷ did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me: he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pink'd porringers⁸ fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I mine'd the meteor⁹ once, and hit that woman, who cried out, *clab!*¹⁰ when I might see from far some fiery trucheons draw to her succour, which were the hops of the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on; I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff with me, I defied them still;
when suddenly a file of boys behind them, loose shot,¹¹ delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let them win the work.¹² The devil was amongst them, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and fight for bitten apples; that no an-dience, but the tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Limehouse,¹³ their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of them in Limbo Patrum,¹⁴ and there they are like to dance these three days;

7 'Fire-drake'; a fire sometimes seen flying in the night like a dragon. Common people think it a spirit that keepeth some treasure hid; but philosophers affirm it to be a great unequal exhalation inflamed between two clouds, the one hot, the other cold, which is the reason that it also smoketh; the middle part where of, according to the proportion of the hot cloud, being greater than the rest, maketh it seeme like a bellie, and both ends like unto a head and taile.—Bulwer's Expositor, 1616. A fire-drake appears to have been also an artificial firework. Thus in Your Five Gallies, by Middleton:—

—but like fire-drakes

Mounted a little, gave a crack, and fell.

8 Her pink'd cap, which looked as if it had been moulded on a porringer. So in The Taming of the Shrew:—

'Hob. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.

Pat. Why, this was moulded on a porringer.'

9 The brazier.

Sc. 3; and As You Like It, Act 1. Sc. 2

11 I. e. loose or random shooters. See King Henry
IV. Part II. Act III. Sc. 2.

12 I. e. the forties: it is a term in fornication.

13 By the tribulation of Tower-hill and the limbs of Limehouse it is evident that Shakespeare meant noisy rabble frequenting the theatres, supposed to come from those places. It appears from Stowe that the inhabitants of Tower-hill were remarkably turbulent. The word limb, in the sense of a turbulent person, is not uncommon in London even at this day. A mischievous unruly boy is called 'a limb of the devil.' That the pe-nitents were aimed at under these appellations seems to me doubtful.

14 I. e. in confinement. In Auto continues to be a cant phrase in the same sense to this day. The Limbo-Patrum is, properly, the place where the old fathers and patriarchs are supposed to be waiting for the resurrection. See Titus Andronicus, Act III. Sc. 1.

1 This celebrated bear garden, on the Bankside, was so called from Robert de Paris, who had a house and garden there in the time of King Richard II. The Globe Theatre, in which Shakespeare was a performer, stood on the southern side of the river Thames, and was contiguous to this noted place of tumul and disorder. St.
Mary Overy's church is not far from London Bridge, and almost opposite to Fishmongers' Hall; Winchester House was over against Cole Harbour; Paris Garden was in a line with Bridewell; and the Globe playhouse faced Blackfriars, Fleet Ditch, or St. Paul's. It was an hexagonal building of stone or brick. Its roof was of rushes, with a flag on the top. In the preliminary remarks is a representation of it, from an old View of London, as it appeared in 1699.

2 I. e. shouting or roaring; a sense the word has now lost. Littleton, in his Dictionary, has 'To gape or bawl:
vociferor.' So in Roscommon's Essay on Translation:—

'That noisy, nauseous gaping foot was ho.'

3 Our ancestors, young and old, rich and poor, all concurrent, as Shakespeare in another place says:—
'To do observance to a morn of May.'

Stowe says that 'in the month of May, namely on May-day in the morning, every man would walk into the sweet meadows and savour of sweet flowers, and with the noise (i. e. music) of birds, praising God in their kind.' It is upon record that King Henry VIII.
and Queen Katharine partook of this diversion. See Brand's Popular Antiquities, by Ellis.

vey warmth. Both these senses are understood.

besides the running banquet of two beadles,¹ that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still too, from all parts they are coming. As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters, These lazy knaves?—Ye have made a fine band, fellows.

There's a trim rabble let in: Are all these Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour, We are but men; and what so many may do, Not being torn a pieces, we have done: An army cannot rule them.

Cham. As I live, If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round fines, for neglect: You are lazy knaves; And here ye lie bailing of bumpards,² when Ye should do service. Hark, the trumpets sound; They are come already from the christening: Go, break among the press, and find a way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marshalsea, shall hold you play these two months.

Port. Make way there for the princess.

Man. You great fellow, stand close up, or I'll make your head ake.

Port. You i' the camblet, get up o' the rail; I'll pick³ you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The Palace. Enter Trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, CRANMER, DUKE OF NORFOLK, with his Marshal's staff, DUKE OF SUFFOLK, two Noblemen bearing great standing-bowls⁴ for the christening gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the DUCHESS OF NORFOLK, godmother, bearing the Child richly habited in a mantle, &c. Train borne by a Lady; then follows the MARCHIONESS OF DORSET, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth.

Flourish. Enter King and Train.

Cran. [Kneeling.] And to your royal grace, and the good queen,

My noble partners, and myself, thus pray;— All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady, Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy, May hourly fall upon ye!

K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop; What is her name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

K. Hen. Stand up, lord.—

[The King kisses the Child.]

With this kiss take my blessing: God protect thee! Into whose hands I give thy life.

Cran. Amen.

K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal:

I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady, When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir, For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter Let none think flattery, for they'll find them truth This royal infant (heaven still move about her!) Though in her cradle, yet now promises Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings, Which time shall bring to ripeness: She shall be (But few now living can behold that goodness,) A pattern to all princes living with her, And all that shall succeed: Sheba was never More covetous of wisdom, and fair virtue, Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces, That mould up such a mighty piece as this is, With all the virtues that attend the good, Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse her, Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her: She shall be lov'd, and fear'd; Her own shall bless her:

Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn, And hang their heads with sorrow: Good grows with her:

In her days, every man shall eat in safety Under his own vine,⁵ what he plants; and sing The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours: God shall be truly known; and those about her From her shall read the perfect ways of honour, And by those claim their greatness, not by blood, [Nor] shall this peace sleep with her: But as when The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix, Her ashes new create another heir, As great in admiration as herself: So shall she leave her blessedness to one, (When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness,)

Who, from the sacred ashes of her honour, Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was, And so stand fix'd: Peace, plenty, love, truth, terror,

That were the servants to this chosen infant, Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him; Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine, His honour and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations: He shall flourish, And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches To all the plains about him;—Our children's children

Shall see this, and bless heaven.

K. Hen. Thou speakest wonders.]

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England, An aged princess; many days shall see her, And yet no day without a deed to crown it. 'Would I had known no more! but she must die, She must, the saints must have her; yet a virgin, A most unspotted lily shall she pass To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her.

K. Hen. O lord archbishop, Thou hast made me now a man; never, before This happy child, did I get any thing: This oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me, That, when I am in heaven, I shall desire To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.— I thank ye all.—To you, my good lord mayor, And your good brethren, I am much beholden; I have received much honour by your presence, And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way, lords;

Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye,

Beaumont and Fletcher; where Orator Higgin is making his congratulatory speech to the new king of the beggars;

¹ Each man shall eat his stolen eggs and butter In his own shade, or sunshine, &c.

² Some of the commentators think that this and the following seventeen lines were probably written by Ben Jonson, after the accession of King James. We have before observed Mr. Gifford is of opinion that Ben Jonson had no hand in the additions to this play.

¹ A public whipping. A banquet here is used figuratively, for a desert. To the confinement of these rioters a whipping was to be the desert.

² It has already been observed that a bumpard was a large black jack of leather (Tempest, Act ii. Sc. 2,) used to carry beer to soldiers upon duty, or upon any occasion where a quantity was required. See note on King Henry IV. Part i. Act ii. Sc. 4.

³ To pick is to pick, cast, or throw.

⁴ At Greenwich, where this procession was made from the church of the Friars.—Hall, fo. 317.

⁵ Standing-bowls were bowls elevated on feet or pedestals.

⁶ The thought is borrowed from Scripture. See Micah, iv. 4. 1 Kings, c. iv. The first part of the prophecy is apparently burlesqued in the Beggar's Bush of

She will be sick else. This day, no man think
He has business at his house; for all shall stay,
This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.]

EPILOGUE.

'Tis ten to one, this play can never please
All that are here: Some come to take their ease,
And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,
We have frighted with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear,
They'll say, 'tis naught: others, to hear the city
Abus'd extremely, and to cry,—that's witty!
Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,
All the expected good we are like to hear
For this play at this time, is only in
The merciful construction of good women;¹
For such a one we show'd them; If they smile,
And say, 'twill do, I know, within a while
All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap,
If they hold, when their ladies bid them clasp.

THE play of Henry VIII. is one of those which still keeps possession of the stage by the splendour of its pageantry. The coronation, about forty years ago, drew the people together in multitudes for a great part

1 A verse with an unmusical close may be found in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Part III. sect. ii.:—
'Rose the pleasure of fine women.'

In Ben Jonson's Alchemist there is also a line in which the word woman is accented on the last syllable:—
'And then your red man, and your white woman.'

of the winter. Yet pomp is not the only merit of this play. The meek sorrows and virtuous distress of Katharine have furnished some scenes which may be justly numbered among the greatest efforts of tragedy. But the genius of Shakespeare comes in and goes out with Katharine. Every other part may be easily conceived and easily written.

The historical dramas are now concluded, of which the two parts of Henry IV. and Henry V. are among the happiest of our author's compositions; and King John, Richard III. and Henry VIII. deservedly stand in the second class. Those whose curiosity would refer the historical scenes to their original, may consult Holinshed, and sometimes Hall. From Holinshed, Shakespeare has often inserted whole speeches with no more alteration than was necessary to the numbers of his verse. To transcribe them into the margin was unnecessary, because the original is easily examined, and they are seldom less perspicuous in the poet than in the historian.

To play histories, or to exhibit a succession of events by action and dialogue, was a common entertainment among our rude ancestors upon great festivities.* The parish clerks once performed at Clerkenwell a play which lasted three days, containing the History of the World. JOHNSTON.

* It appears that the tradesmen of Chester were three days employed in the representation of twenty-four Whitsun plays or mysteries. See Mr. Markland's Disquisition, prefixed to his very elegant and interesting selection from the Chester Mysteries, printed for private distribution; which may be consulted in the third volume of the late edition of Malone's Shakespeare, by Mr. Boswell. The Coventry Mysteries must have taken up a longer time, as they were no less than forty in number.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

MR. Stevens informs us that Shakespeare received the greater part of the materials that were used in the construction of this play from the Troy Book of Lydgate. It is presumed that the learned commentator would have been nearer the fact had he substituted the Troy Book, or Recueil, translated by Caxton from Raoul Le Fevre; which together with a translation of Homer, supplied the incidents of the Trojan war. Lydgate's work was becoming obsolete, whilst the other was at this time in the prime of its vigour. From its first publication, to the year 1619, it had passed through six editions, and continued to be popular even in the eighteenth century. Mr. Stevens is still less accurate in stating Le Fevre's work to be a translation from Guido of Colonna; for it is only in the latter part that he has made any use of him. Yet Guido actually had a French translation before the time of Raoul; which translation, though never printed, is remaining in MS. under the whimsical title of "La Vie de la pitieuse Destruction de la noble et superlative Cite de Troye le grant. Translatée en Francois l'an MCCCCLXXX." Such part of the present play as relates to the loves of Troilus and Cressida was most probably taken from Chaucer, as no other work, accessible to Shakespeare, could have supplied him with what was necessary.¹ This account is by Mr. Douce, from whom also what follows on this subject is abstracted.

Chaucer, in his Troilus and Cressida, asserts that he followed Lollius, and that he translated from the Latin; but who Lollius was, and when he lived, we have no certain indication, though Dryden boldly asserts that he was an historiographer of Urybino, in Italy, and wrote in Latin verse. Nothing can be more apparent than that the Filostrato of Boccaccio afforded Chaucer the fable and characters of his poem, and even numerous passages appear to be mere literal translations; but there are large additions in Chaucer's work, so that it is possible he may have followed a free Latin version, which may have had for its author Lollius.

Boccaccio does not give his poem as a translation, and we must therefore suppose him to have been the inventor of the fable, until we have more certain indications respecting Lollius. So much of it as relates to the departure of Cressida from Troy, and her subsequent amour with Diomedes, is to be found in the Troy Book of Guido of Colonna, composed in 1297, and, as he states, from Dares Phrygius, and Dicty's Cretensis, neither of whom mention the name of Cressida. Mr. Tyrwhitt conjectured, and Mr. Douce confirmed the conjecture, that Guido's Dares was in reality an old Norman poet, named Benoit de Saint More, who wrote in the reign of our Henry the Second, and who himself made use of Dares. Guido is said to have come into England, where he found the Metrical Romance of Benoit, and translated it into Latin prose; and, following a practice too prevalent in the middle ages, he dishonestly suppressed the mention of his real original. Benoit's work exists also in a prose French version. And there is a compilation also in French prose, by Pierre de Beauvais, from the Filostato.

Lydgate professedly followed Guido of Colonna, occasionally making use of and citing other authorities. In a short time after Raoul le Fevre compiled from various materials his Recueil des Histoires de Troye, which was translated into English and published by Caxton: but neither of these authors have given any more of the story of Troilus and Cressida than any of the other romances on the war of Troy; Lydgate containing himself with referring to Chaucer.

Chaucer having made the loves of Troilus and Cressida famous, Shakespeare was induced to try their fortunes on the stage. Lydgate's Troy Book was printed by Pynson in 1619. In the books of the Stationers' Company, anno 1591, is entered, 'A proper Ballad dialoguewise between Troilus and Cressida.' Again, by J. Roberts, Feb. 7, 1603: 'The Booke of Troilus and Cressida, as it is acted by my Lord Chamberlain's men.' And in Jan. 28, 1608, entered by Richard Bonian and Hen. Whalley: 'A Booke called the History of Troilus and Cressida.' This last entry is made by the booksellers, who published this play in 4to. in 1609. To this edition is prefixed a preface, showing that the play was printed before it had been acted; and that it was published, without the author's knowledge, from a copy that had fallen into the booksellers' hands. This preface, as bestowing just praises on Shakespeare, and showing that the original proprietors of his plays thought it their interest to keep them unprinted, is prefixed to the play in the present edition. It appears from some entries in the accounts of Henslowe the player, that a drama on this subject, by Decker and Chettle, at first called Troyellus and Cressida, but, before its production, altered in its title to The Tragedy of Agamemnon, was in existence anterior to Shakespeare's play, and that it was licensed by the Master of the Revels on the 3d of June, 1599. Malone places the date of the composition of Shakespeare's play in 1602; Mr. Chalmers in 1600; and Dr. Drake in 1601. They have been led to this conclusion by the supposed ridicule of the circumstance of Cressid receiving the sleeve of Troilus and giving him her glove in the comedy of Histiomastix, 1610. I think that the satire was pointed at the older drama of Decker and Chettle; and should certainly give a later date to the play of Shakespeare than that which has been assigned to it. If we may credit the preface to the 4to. of 1609, this play had not then appeared on the stage, and could not therefore have been ridiculed in a piece written previous to the death of Queen Elizabeth (see note on Act iv. Sc. 4.) Malone says, 'Were it not for the entry in the Stationers' books [of which there is no proof that it relates to this play;] I should have been led, both by the colour of the style, and from this preface, to class it in the year 1608.'

There is no reason for concluding with Schlegel that Shakespeare intended his drama as 'one continued irony of the crown of all heroic tales—the tale of Troy.' The poet abandoned the classic and followed the gothic or romantic authorities; and this influenced the colour of his performance. The fact probably is, that he pursued the manner in which parts of the story had been before dramatised. There is an interlude on the subject of Thersites, * resembling the Old Mysteries in its structure, but full of the lowest buffoonery. If the drama of Decker and Chettle were now to be found, I doubt not we should see that the present play was at least founded on it, if not a mere refacimento.

* The whole catalogue of the Dramatis Personæ in the play of Troilus and Cressida (says Mr. Godwin,) so far as they depend upon a rich and original vein of humour in the author, are drawn with a felicity which never was surpassed. The genius of Homer has been a topic of admiration to almost every generation of men since the period in which he wrote. But his characters will not bear the slightest comparison with the delineation of the same characters as they stand in Shakespeare. This is a species of honour which ought by no means to be forgotten when we are making the eulogium of our immortal bard, a sort of illustration of his greatness which cannot fail to place it in a very conspicuous light. The dispositions of men, perhaps, had not been sufficiently unfolded in the very early period of intellectual refinement when Homer wrote; the rays of humour had not been dissected by the glass, or rendered perdurable by the rays of the poet. Homer's characters are drawn with a laudable portion of variety and consistency; but his Achilles, his Ajax, and his Nestor are, each of them, rather a species than an individual, and can boast more of the propriety of abstraction than of the vivacity of the moving scene of absolute life. The Achilles, Ajax, and the various Grecian heroes of Shakespeare, on the other hand, are absolutely men deficient in nothing which can tend to individualise them, and already touched with the Promethean fire that might infuse a soul into what, without it, were lifeless forms. From the rest, perhaps, the character of Thersites deserves to be selected (how cold and schoolboy a sketch in Homer,) as exhibiting an appropriate vein of sarcastic humour amidst his cowardice, and a profoundness and truth in his mode of laying open the foibles of those about him, impossible to be excelled.

* This interlude, together with another not less curious, called Jack Juggler, was reprinted from a unique copy by Mr. Haslewood for the Roxburgh club. I owe to the friendly kindness of that gentleman the marked distinction of possessing one of four additional copies printed for friends not members of that society. These rude dramas are not mere literary curiosities, they form a prominent feature in the history of the progress of the stage, and are otherwise valuable as illustrating the state of manners and language in the reign of Henry Shakespeare possessed, no man in a higher perfection, the true dignity and loftiness of the poetical affatus, which he had displayed in many of the finest passages of his works with miraculous success. But he knew that no man ever was, or ever can be always dignified. He knew that those subtler traits of character which identify a man are familiar and relaxed, pervaded with passion, and not played off with an eye to external decorum. In this respect the peculiarities of Shakespeare's genius are no where more forcibly illustrated than in the play we are here considering.

The champions of Greece and Troy, from the hour in which their names were first recorded, had always worn a certain formality of attire, and marched with a slow and measured step. No poet, till this time, had ever ventured to force them out of the manner which their epic creator had given them. Shakespeare still supplied their limbs, took from them the classic stiffness of their gait, and enriched them with an entire set of those attributes which might render them completely beings of the same species with ourselves.†

PREFACE

TO THE QUARTO EDITION OF THIS PLAY, 1609.

A never writer, to an ever reader. Newses.

ETERNAL reader, you have heere a new play, never stal'd with the stage, never clapper-claw'd with the palmes of the vulgar, and yet passing full of the palme comick; for it is a birth of your braine, that never under-tooke any thing comickall, vainly: and were but the vaine names of commedies change for the titles of commodities, or of playes for pleas; you should see all those grand censors, that now sille them such vanities, flock to them for the maine grace of their gravities; especially this authours commedies, that are so fram'd to the life, that they serve for the most common commentaries of all the actions of our lives, shewing such a dexterite and power of witte, that the most displeased with playes, are pleased with his commedies. And all such dull and heavy witted worldlings, as were never capable of the witte of a commedie, coming by report of them to his representations, have found that witte there, that they never found in them-selves, and have parted better-witted than they came: feeling an edge of witte set upon them, more than ever they dream'd they had braine to grind it on. So much and such savored salt of witte is in his commedies, that they seem (for their height of pleasure) to be borne in that sea that brought forth Venus. Amongst all there is none more witty than this: and had I time I would comment upon it, though I know it needs not (for so much as will make you think your teesens well bestowed,) but for so much worth, as even poore I know to be stuf in it. It deserves such a labour, as well as the best comedy in Terence or Plautus. And beleve this, that when hee is gone, and his commedies out of sale, you will scramble for them, and set up a new English inquisition. Take this for a warning, and at the perill of your pleasures loose, and judgements, refuse not, nor like this lesse, for not being sullied with the smoky breath of the multitude; but thank fortune for the escape it hath made amongst you. Since by the grand possessors wills I believe you should have prayd for them rather then bee prayd. And so I leave all such to bee prayd for (for the states of their wits healths) that will not praise it.—Vale.

the Eighth. I have found colloquial phrases and words explained by them, of which it would be vain to seek illustrations elsewhere.

† Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed that there are more hard bombastical phrases in this play than can be picked out of any other six plays of Shakespeare. Would not this be an additional argument in favour of what I have here advanced, that it may be a mere alteration of the older play above mentioned?

PROLOGUE.¹

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous,² their high blood chaf'd,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: Sixty and nine, that wore
Their crowns' regal, from the Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia: and their vow is made,
To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; And that's the quarrel.
To Tenedos they come;
And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage:³ Now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Ilios, Chetas, Trojan,
And Antenorides, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr⁴ up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard: And hither am I come,
A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
Of author's pen, or actor's voice; but suited
In like conditions as our argument,—
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o'er the vauit⁵ and firstlings of those broils,
'Ginning in the middle; starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.
Like or find fault; 'as do your pleasures are;
Now, good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Troy. Before Priam's Palace. Enter
TROILUS armed, and PANDARUS.

Troilus.

CALL here my varlet,⁶ I'll unarm again:
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,

¹ This prologue is wanting in the quarto editions. Steevens thinks that it is not by Shakspeare; and that perhaps the drama itself is not entirely of his construction. It appears to have escaped Heminges and Condell, the editors of the first folio, until the volume was almost printed off; and is thrust in between the tragedies and histories without any enumeration of pages, except on one leaf. There seems to have been a previous play on the same subject by Henry Chettle and Thomas Decker. Entries appear in the accounts of Henslowe of money advanced to them in earnest of Troilus and Cressida, in April and May, 1599.

² Orgulous, proud, disdainful; orgueilleux, Fr.

³ Freight.

⁴ Sperr or sparr, to close, fasten, or bar up.

⁵ i. e. the avant, what went before. Thus in Lear:—
'Vauit couriers to oak-clearing thunderbolts.'

What is now called the van of an army was formerly called the vauit-guard.

That find such cruel battle here within?
Each Trojan, that is master of his heart,
Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength.

Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;
But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder⁷ than ignorance;
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skill-less as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part I'll not meddle nor make no further. He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening: but here's yet in the word—hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be, doth lesser blench⁸ at sufferance than I do.

At Priam's royal table do I sit;

And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So, traitor!—when she comes!—When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—When my heart, As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain, Lost Hector or my father should perceive me, I have (as when the sun doth light a storm,) Bury'd this sigh in wrinkle of a smile:

⁶ This word which we have from the old French varlet or vadlet, anciently signified a groom, a sergent of the meaner sort. Hollinshed, speaking of the battle of Agincourt, says, 'Diverse were received by their varlets and conveyed out of the field.' Coggrave says, 'In old time it was a more honourable title; for all young gentlemen until they came to be eighteen years of age were so termed.' He says, the term came into disuse in the reign of Francis I. till when the gentlemen of the king's chamber were called valets de chambre. In one of our old statutes, 1 Henry IV. c. 7, anno 1399, are these words:—'Et que nulle valette appelle yoman preigne ne use nulle livree du roi ne de null autre seigneur sur peine de deprisement.'

⁷ i. e. in addition to. This kind of phraseology occurs in Macbeth, Act i. Sc. ii.; see note there.

⁸ i. e. more weak or foolish. Dryden has taken this speech as it stands in his alteration of this play, except that he has changed skill-less, in the last line, to ardless, which, as Johnson observes, is no improvement.

⁹ To blench is to shrink, start, or fly off. See Hamlet, Act ii. Sc. 2.

But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladness,
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Par. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's (well, go to), there were no more comparison between the women.—But, for my part,
she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term
it, praise her,—But I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit; but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tell thee, There my hopes lie drown'd,
Reply not in how many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressid's love: Thou answer'st, She is fair;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice,
Handlest in thy discourse;—O, that her hand!¹
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach; To whose soft seizure
The cygnet down is harsh, and spirit of sense²
Hard as the palm of ploughman! This thou tell'st me,
As true thou tell'st me, when I say—I love her;
But, saying, thus, instead of oil and balm,
Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me
The knife that made it.

Par. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Par. 'Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is; if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.³

Tro. Good Pandarus! How now, Pandarus?

Par. I have had my labour for my travel; ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you; gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what,
with me?

Par. Because she is kin to me, therefore, she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not, an she were a black-a-moor; 'twas all one to me.

Tro. Say I, she is not fair?

Par. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father;⁴ let her go to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—

Par. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Par. Pray you, speak no more to me; I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit PANDARUS. An Alarum.

1 Handlest is here used metaphorically, with an allusion, at the same time, to its literal meaning. The same play on the words is in Titus Andronicus:—

'O handle not the theme, to talk of hands,
Lest we remember still that we have none!'

Steevens remarks that the beauty of a female hand seems to have had a strong impression on the poet's mind. Antony cannot endure that the hand of Cleopatra should be touched.

2 Warburton rashly altered this to '—spite of sense.'—Hammer reads: '—to the spirit of sense.' Which is considered right and necessary by Mason. Johnson does not rightly understand the passage, and therefore erroneously explains it. It appears to me to mean 'The spirit of sense (i. e. sensation,) in touching the cygnet's down, is harsh and hard as the palm of a ploughman, compared to the sensation of softness in pressing Cressid's hand.'

3 'She has the mends in her own hands' is a proverbial phrase common in our old writers, which probably signifies 'It is her own fault; or the remedy lies with herself.'

4 Calchas, according to the Old Troy Book, was 'a great learned bishop of Troy,' who was sent by Priam to consult the oracle of Delphi concerning the event of the war which threatened Agamemnon. As soon as he had made 'his oblations and demands for them of Troy, Apollo answered unto him saying, Calchas, Calchas, beware thou returne not back againe to Troy, but goe thou with Achylles unto the Greekes, and depart never

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus.
I cannot fight upon this argument;
It is too starv'd a subject for my sword.
But, Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague me!
I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar;
And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit.
Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?
Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl;
Between our Ilium,⁵ and where she resides,
Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood;
Ourself, the merchant; and their sailing Pandar,⁶
Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

Alarum. Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. How now, Prince Troilus? wherefore not affaid?

Tro. Because not there; This woman's answer sorts.⁷

For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Æneas, from the field to-day?

Æne. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Æneas?

Æne. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to scorn;
Paris is god'd with Menelaus' horn. [Alarum.]

Æne. Hark! what good sport is out of town to-day!

Tro. Better at home, if would I might, were away.—

But, to the sport abroad;—Are you bound thither?

Æne. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we then together
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The Same. A Street. Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba, and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower,

Whose height commands as subject all the vale,
To see the battle. Hector, whose patience
Is, as a virtue, fix'd, to-day was mov'd:

He chid Andromache, and struck his armourer;

And, like as there were husbandry⁸ in war,

Before the sun rose, he was harness'd a light,⁹

And to the field goes he; where every flower
Did, as a prophet, weep!¹⁰ what it forsook
In Hector's wrath.

from them, for the Greeks shall have victorie of the Trojans, by the agreement of the gods.'—Hist. of the Destruction of Troy, translated by Costin, ed. 1617. The prudent bishop immediately joined the Greeks.

5 Ilium, properly speaking, is the name of the city; Troy that of the country. But Shakespeare, following the Troy Book, gives that name to Priam's palace, said to have been built upon a high rock.

6 'This punk is one of Cupid's carriers;

Clap on more sails.' &c.

Merry Wives of Windsor

7 Troilus was pronounced by Shakespeare and his contemporaries as a disyllable. Pope has once or twice fallen into the same error.

8 I. e. fits, suits, is congruous. So in King Henry V.: 'It suits well with thy fierceness.'

9 Husbandry is thrift. Thus in King Henry V.:— 'our bad neighbours make us early stirrers,

Which is both healthful and good husbandry.'

10 The commentators have all taken light here as referring to armour. Poor Theobald, who seems to have had a suspicion that it did not, falls under the lash of Warburton for his temerity. Light, however, here has no reference to the mode in which Hector was armed, but to the legerity or alacrity with which he armed himself before sunrise. Light and lightly are often used for nimbly, quickly, readily, by our old writers. No expression is more common than 'light of foot.' And Shakespeare has even used 'light of ear.'

11 'And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting,' &c. Midsummer Night's Dream

Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, this: There is among the Greeks

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;

They call him, Ajax.

Cres. Good; And what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se,¹ And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions;² he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant; a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours that his valour is crushed³ into folly, his folly sauced with discretion; there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of; nor any man an attain, but he carries some stain of it; he is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair:⁴ He hath the joints of every thing; but every thing so out of joint, that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say, he yesterday coped Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the diadain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid: What do you talk of?—Good morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of, when I came? Was Hector armed, and gone, ere ye came to Ilium? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so; Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too: he'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that; and there is Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus; I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O, Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector? Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Ay, if ever I saw him before, and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

1 i. e. an extraordinary or incomparable person, like the letter A by itself. The usual mode of this old expression is A per se. Thus in Henrysoun's Testament of Cresseid, wrongly attributed by Steevens to Chaucer:—

'Of faire Cresseide, the flour and a per se of Troy and Greece.'

2 Their titles, marks of distinction or denominations. The term in this sense is originally forensic.

'Whereby he doth receive

Particular additions from the bill

That writes them all alike.' Macbeth.

3 i. e. confused and mingled with folly. So in Cymbeline:—

'Crush him together, rather than unfold His measure duly.'

Pan. Himself? Alas, poor Troilus! I would, he were,— Cres. So he is.

Pan. — Condition, I had gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself—'Would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; Time must friend, or end: Well, Troilus, well,—I would, my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is older.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. The other's not come to't; you shall tell me another tale when the other's come to't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities;—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him, his own's better

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore the other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour (for so 'tis, I must confess,)—Not brown neither.

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief, Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think, Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek,⁴ indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into a compassed⁵ window,—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapeter's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young: and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?⁷

Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him;—she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin,—

Cres. Juno have mercy!—How came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think, his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to, then:—But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,— Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus? why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh to think how

4 Equivalent to a phrase still in use—Against the grain. The French say a contre poil.

5 See Twelfth Night, Act IV. Sc. 1.

6 A compassed window is a circular bow window. The same epithet is applied to the cape of a woman's gown in the Taming of the Shrew;—'A small compassed cape.' A coved ceiling is yet in some places called a compassed ceiling.

7 Lifter, a term for a thief; from the Gothic liftian. Thus in Holland's Leaguer, 1638:—'Broker, or pander, cheater, or lifter.' Dryden uses the verb to lift, for to rob. Shop-lifter is still used for one who robs a shop.

she tickled his chin;—Indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing;—Queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones.¹

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was a more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes;—Did her eyes run o'er too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus's chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that. One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white: That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons. Jupiter! quoth she, which of these hairs is Paris my husband? The forked one, quoth he; pluck it out, and give it him. But, there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.²

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn, 'tis true; he will weep you, an 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettle against May. [A Retreat sounded.]

Pan. Hark, they are coming from the field: Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass toward Ilum? good niece, do; 'sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

ÆNEAS passes over the stage.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

Pan. That's Æneas; Is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

ANTENOR passes over.

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit,³ I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person:—When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon; if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.⁴

HECTOR passes over.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that;

1 So in King Richard III. :—

'Your eyes drop mill stones, when fools' eyes drop tears.'

2 I. e. passed all expression. Cressida plays on the word as used by Pandarus, by employing it herself in its common acceptance.

3 According to Lydgate,—

'Antenor was

Copious in words, and one that much time spent

To jest, when as he was in companie,

So driely, that no man could it espie;

And therewith held his countenance so well,

That every man received great content

There's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector;—There's a brave man, niece. O brave Hector!—Look, how he looks! there's a countenance: Is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pan. Is't a not? It does a man's heart good—Look you what hacks are on his helmet? look you yonder, do you see? look you there! There's no jesting: there's laying on; take't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

PARIS passes over.

Pan. Swords? any thing, he cares not: an the devil come to him, it's all one: By God's lid, it does one's heart good:—Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: look ye yonder, niece; Is't not a gallant man too, is't not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who said, he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now. Ha! would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

HELENUS passes over.

Pan. That's Helenus,—I marvel where Troilus is:—That's Helenus; I think he went not forth to day:—That's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus? no:—yes, he'll fight indifferent well:—I marvel, where Troilus is!—Hark; do you not hear the people cry, Troilus?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes over.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus: 'Tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him;—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece; look you, how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hack'd than Hector's: And how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Forces pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die i' the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles; a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well?—why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

To hear him speake, and pretty jests to tell,

When he was pleasant and in merriment:

For tho' that he most commonly was sad,

Yet in his speech some jest he always had.

Such, in the hands of a rude English poet, is the grave Antenor; to whose wisdom it was thought necessary that the art of Ulysses should be opposed:—

'Et moveo Priamum, Priamoque Antenora junctum.'

1 To give the nod was a term in the game at cards called Noddy. The word also signifies a silly fellow. Cressid means to call Pandarus a noddy, and says he shall by more nods be made more significantly a fool.

Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be baked with no date¹ in the pie,—for then the man's date is out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward² you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too; if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding, and then it is past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come: [Exit Boy.]
I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle,—

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token—you are a bawd.—

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Words, vows, griefs, tears, and love's full sacrifice,
He offers in another's enterprise:

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see

Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be;

Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing:

Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing:
That she³ beloved knows nought that knows not this,—

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is;

That she was never yet, that ever knew

Love got so sweet, as when desire did sue:

Therefore this maxim out of love I teach,—

Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech:⁴

Then though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. The Grecian Camp. Before Agamemnon's Tent. Trumpets. Enter AGAMEMNON, NESTOR, ULYSSES, MENELAUS, and others.

Agam. Princes,

What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?

The ample proposition, that hope makes

In all designs begun on earth below,

Falls in the promise's largeness; checks and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd:

As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain

Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Nor, princes, is it matter new to us,

That we come short of our suppose so far,

¹ Dates were an ingredient in ancient pastry of almost every kind. The same quibble occurs in All's Well that Ends Well, Act I. Sc. 1.

² A metaphor from the art of defence. Falstaff, King Henry IV. Part I. says, 'Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay,' &c.

³ That she, means that woman.

⁴ 'Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech.' The meaning of this obscure line seems to be, 'Men after possession become our commanders; before it they are our suppliants.'

'My heart's content,' in the next line, probably signifies my will, my desire.

⁵ Joined by affinity. The same adjective occurs in Othello:—

'If partially affin'd, or leagu'd in office.'

⁶ The throne in which thou sitest like a descended god.

⁷ To apply here is used for to bend the mind, or attend particularly to Agamemnon's words. As in the following passage from Baret: 'To attende or applie

That, after seven years' siege, yet Troy walls stand;

Sith every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim,
And that unbodied figure of the thought That gave't surmised shape. Why, then, you princes,

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works;
And think them shames, which are, indeed, nought
else

But the protractive trials of great Jove,
To find persistive constancy in men?
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love: for then, the bold and coward,
The wise and fool, the artist and unread,
The hard and soft, seem all affin'd⁸ and kin.
But, in the wind and tempest of her frowns,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away;
And what hath mass, or matter, by itself
Lies rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat,⁹
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply⁷
Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance
Lies the true proof of men: The sea being smooth,
How many shallow beagle boats dare sail
Upon her patient breast, making their way
With those of nobler bulk;

But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage
The gentle Thetis, and, anon, behold
The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut,

Bounding between the two moist elements,
Like Perseus' horse:¹⁰ Where's then the saucy boat,

Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now
Co-rival'd greatness? either to harbour fled,
Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so
Doth valour's show, and valour's worth, divide
In storms of fortune: For, in her ray and bright-
ness,

The herd hath more annoyance by the brize,¹¹
Than by the tiger: but when the splitting wind
Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks,
And flies fled under shade, Why, then, the thing of courage,

As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,¹²
And, with an accent tun'd in self-same key,
Returns to chiding fortune.¹¹

Ulyss.

Agamemnon.—

Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece,
Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit,
In whom the tempers and the minds of all
Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks.
Besides the applause and approbation
The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,—

[To AGAMEMNON.]

And thou, most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,—

[To NESTOR.]

I give to both your speeches,—which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again,

his wife to something, and to give his mind unto it.' The example cited by Malone, from The Nice Woman, is not to the purpose, the word there is used awake now use to ply. As in another example from Baret, 'With diligent endeavour to apply their studies.'

⁸ Pegasus was, strictly speaking, Bellerophon's horse, but Shakespeare followed the old Troy Book. 'Of the blood that issued out (from Medusa's head) there engendered Pegasus or the flying horse. By the flying horse that was engendered of the blood issued from her head, is understood that of her riches issuing of that realm: he [Perseus] founded, and made a ship named Pegasus, and this ship was likened unto an horse flying.' &c. In another place we are told that this ship, which the writer always calls Perseus' flying horse, 'flew on the sea like unto a bird.' Destruction of Troy, No. 1617, p. 165-164.

⁹ The gadfly that stings cattle.

¹⁰ It is said of the tiger, that in stormy and high winds he rages and roars most furiously.

¹¹ I. e. replies to noisy or clamorous fortune.

IMPORTANT STANDARD WORKS

PREPARING FOR IMMEDIATE PUBLICATION

BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW-YORK.

Prescott's Conquest of Mexico.

The History of the Conquest of Mexico, with the Life of the Conqueror, Hernando Cortes, and a View of the Ancient Mexican Civilization. In three Volumes, 8vo, with Portraits and Maps.

This work will be founded on original documents, chiefly supplied by the Royal Academy of History at Madrid. These documents are the fruits of more than fifty years' laborious researches by Navarrete, the venerable president of the Academy, by Vargas Ponce, his predecessor, and by the celebrated historian Mufioz. They were obtained under sanction of government, from the various public offices and repositories in Spain and her colonies; and consist of the correspondence of the parties, instructions of the court, contemporary memoirs, military journals and official documents, in manuscript, most of them unknown or inaccessible to preceding historians. Besides this, additional materials have been drawn from Mexico, London, and Paris.

Kendall's Life of General Jackson.

The Life of General ANDREW JACKSON. By the Hon. AMOS KENDALL. To be completed in about Fifteen Numbers, at Twenty-five Cents each, illustrated with Engravings or Prints, averaging two to a Number, embracing Likenesses of the General and some of his most distinguished co-actors, Drawings of his Battle-grounds, &c.

This task has been undertaken with the approbation of General JACKSON himself, who has kindly put into the Author's hands his books and papers, public and private, and on obscure points favoured him with his own recollections. With these materials, with the works already published, and with the contributions of facts and papers by many of the General's associates in civil and military life, aided by his own knowledge of events occurring within the last twenty years, the Author hopes to produce a work worthy of the confidence and patronage of the American people.

Dr. Olin's Travels.

Travels in Egypt, Arabia Petrea, and the Holy Land. By the Rev. STEPHEN OLIN, D.D., President of the Wesleyan University. In 2 vols, small 8vo. With Illustrations on Steel. Will be ready on the 15th of May.

M'Culloch's Gazetteer and Geography.

M'Culloch's Universal Gazetteer; or, Geographical Dictionary. With Seven Maps on Steel. A Dictionary, Geographical, Statistical, and Historical, of the various Countries, Places, and principal Natural Objects in the World. By J. R. M'CULLOCH, Esq. In two Volumes, 8vo. In which the articles relating to the United States will be re-written and greatly multiplied and extended, and adapted to the present condition of the country, and to the wants of its citizens. By DANIEL HASKEL, A.M., late President of the University of Vermont. To be completed in 16 or 20 Numbers, at 25 Cents each. The first Number to appear in May. A Number will appear on the 1st and 15th of each month.

Neal's History of the Puritans.

The History of the Puritans; or, Protestant Nonconformists; from the Reformation in 1517, to the Revolution in 1688; comprising an Account of their Principles, their Attempts for a farther Reformation in the Church, their Sufferings, and the Lives and Characters of their most considerable Divines. By DANIEL NEAL, M.A. A New Edition. With very copious additional Notes, by the Rev. J. O. CROULES. To be published in about Eight Numbers, at 25 Cents each.

Harper's New Pictorial Bible.

A New Pictorial Bible, embellished with Sixteen Hundred Historical Engravings, by J. A. ADAMS, more than Fourteen Hundred of which are from Original Designs, by J. G. CHAPMAN, made expressly for this Edition, and executed in the most finished manner, at an expense of over Twenty-five Thousand Dollars! The work will be printed on large type, and published in Numbers, on foolscap folio sized paper. In addition to the Old and New Testaments, it will include the Apocrypha.

Hannah More's Complete Works.

In Nine Numbers, octavo, with Engravings, at 25 Cents per Number.

Several Novels,

By distinguished Authors, viz., Mrs. ELLIS, Mr. JAMES, &c.

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air (strong as the axletree
On which heaven rides) knit all the Greekish ears
To his experienced tongue;—yet let it please both,—

Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Agam. Speak, prince of Ithaca; and be't of less expect¹

That matter needless, of importless burden,
Divide thy lips; than we are confident,
When rank Thersites opens his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,
And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
But for these instances.

The specialty of rule² hath been neglected:
And, look, how many Grecian tents do stand
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected? Degree being vizarded,
The unworthiest shows as fairly in the mark.
The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,³

Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order:
And therefore in the glorious planet, Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the other; whose mod'ciable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check, to good and bad: But when the planets,
In evil mixture, to disorder wander,⁴

What plagues, and what portents? what misery?
What raging of the sea? shaking of earth?
Commotion in the winds? frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married⁵ calm of states
Quite from their fixture? O, when degree is shak'd,
Which is the ladder of all high designs,
The enterprise is sick! How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods⁶ in cities,
Peaceful commerce from dividable⁷ shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentic place?
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets
In mere⁸ oppugnaney: The bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe!⁹

1 How much the commentators have perplexed themselves and their readers about the following passage!

—speeches,—which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again,
As venerable Nestor hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air—

—knit all the Greekish ears

To his experienced tongue.

Ulysses evidently means to say that Agamemnon's speech should be writ in brass; and that venerable Nestor, with his silver hairs, by his speech should rivet the attention of all Greeks. The phrase hatch'd in silver, which has been the stumbling-block, is a simile borrowed from the art of design; to hatch being to fill a design with a number of consecutive fine lines; and to hatch in silver was a design inlaid with lines of silver, a process often used for the hilts of swords, handles of daggers, and stocks of pistols. The lines of the graver on a plate of metal are still called hatchings. Hence hatch'd in silver, for silver-haired or gray-haired. Thus in Love in a Maze, 1632:—

'Thy hair is fine as gold, thy chin is hatch'd
With silver.'

2 Expect for expectation.

3 The particular rights of supreme authority

4 I. e. this globe. According to the system of Ptolemy, the earth is the centre round which the planets move.

5 The apparent irregular motions of the planets were supposed to portend some disasters to mankind: indeed the planets themselves were not thought formerly to be confined in any fixed orbits of their own, but to wander about ad libitum, as the etymology of their name demonstrates

Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike his father dead:
Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong,
(Between whose endless jar justice resides,)
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last, eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
This chaos, when degree is suffocate,
Follows the choking.

And this neglect¹¹ of degree it is,
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb.¹² The general's disdain'd
By him one step below; he, by the next;
That next, by him beneath: so every step,
Exemplary by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emulation:
And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd
The fever whereof all our power¹³ is sick.

Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
What is the remedy?

Ulyss. The great Achilles,—whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehead of our host,—
Having his ear full of his airy fame,¹⁴
Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
Lies mocking our designs: With him, Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed the livelong day
Breaks scurril jests;

And with ridiculous and awkward action
(Which, slender, he, imitation calls),
He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon,
Thy topless¹⁵ deputation he puts on;
And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,¹⁶
Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming¹⁷
He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks
'Tis like a chime-a-mending; with terms unsear'd,¹⁸
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd,
Would seem hyperboles. At this busy stuff,
The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
Cries,—Excellent!—'tis Agamemnon just.—

6 The epithet married, to denote an intimate union, is employed also by Milton:—

—Lydian airs

Married to immortal verse.

7 Confraternities, corporations, companies.

8 Dividable for divided, as corrigible for corrected, in Antony and Cleopatra. The termination ble is often thus used by Shakespeare for ed.

9 I. e. absolute.

10 So in Lear:—'I'll make a sop of the moonshine of you.' In a former speech a boat is said to be made a basin for Neptune.

11 This uncommon word occurs again in Pericles, 1609:—

'If neglect¹¹,
Should therein make me vile.'

12 'That goes backward step by step, with a design in each man to aggrandize himself by slighting his immediate superior.'

13 Army, force.

14 Verbal eulogium. In Macbeth called mouth honour.

15 Supreme, sovereign.

'And topless honours he bestow'd on thee.'

Blind Beggar of Alexandria, 1598.

16 Malone's sagacious note informs us that 'the galleries of the theatre were sometimes called the scaffolds.' This may be very true, but what has it to do with the present passage? The scaffolding here is the floor of the stage, the wooden dialogue is between the player's foot and the boards. A scaffold more frequently meant the stage itself than the gallery: Thus Baret, 'A scaffold or stage where to behold plays. Spectaculum theatrum.'

17 I. e. overstrained, wrested beyond true semblance

18 I. e. unsuited, unfixed

Now play me Nestor;—hem, and stroke thy beard,
As he, being dress'd to some oration.

That's done;—as near as the extremest ends
Of parallel;¹ as like as Vulcan and his wife:
Yet good Achilles still cries, Excellent!
'Tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night alarm.
And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth; to cough, and spit,
And, with a palsy-fumbling² on his gorget,
Shake in and out the rivet:—and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries, O!—enough, Patroclus;—
Or give me ribs of steel; I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleen. And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Severals and generals of grace exact,³
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Success, or loss, what is, or is not, serves
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain, (Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice,) many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-will'd; and bears his head
In such a rein,⁴ in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles: keeps his tent like him;
Makes factious feasts: rails on our state of war,
Bold as an oracle: and sets Theristes
(A slave, whose gall coins slanders like a mint,)
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How rank soever rounded in with danger.⁵

Ulys. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;
Count wisdom as no member of the war;
Forestall prescience, and esteem no act
But that of hand: the still and mental parts,—
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness calls them on: and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity:
They call this—bed-work, mappery, closet-war;
So that the ram, that battens down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine;
Or those, that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse
Makes many Thetis' sons. [Trumpet sounds.]

Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Men. From Troy.

Agam. What would you fore our tent?

Æne. Is this Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray?

Agam. Even this.

Æne. May one, that is a herald, and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm
Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
Call Agamemnon head and general.

Æne. Fair leave, and large security. How may

1 Johnson says 'the allusion seems to be made to the parallels on a map. As like as east to west.'

2 Paralytic fumbling.

3 Grace exact seems to mean decorous habits.

4 I. e. carries himself haughtily; bridles up. See Cotgrave in 'Se rengorger.'

5 How rank soever rounded in with danger. How strongly soever encompassed by danger. So in King Henry V.:

'How dread an army hath enrouned him.'

6 And yet this was the seventh year of the war. Shakespeare, who so wonderfully preserves character, usually confounds the customs of all nations, and probably supposed that the ancients (like the heroes of chivalry) fought with beavers to their helmets. In the fourth act of this play, Nestor says to Hector:—

'But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now.'

Those who are acquainted with the embellishments of ancient manuscripts and books, well know that the artists gave the costume of their own time to all ages. But in this anachronism they have been countenanced by other ancient poets as well as Shakespeare.

A stranger to those most imperial looks,
Know them from eyes of other mortals?⁶

Agam.

How?

Æne. Ay;

I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phoebus:
Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan scorns us: or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonaire, unarm'd,
As bending angels; that's their fame in peace:
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords: and, Jove's accord:—

Nothing so full of heart.' But peace, Æneas,
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!
The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If that the praise'd himself bring the praise forth:
But what the repining enemy commends,
That breath fame follows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Æneas?

Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?

Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Agam. He hears nought privately that comes from Troy.

Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him:
I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;
To set his sense on the attentive beat,
And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly⁷ as the wind;

It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:

That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

Æne. Trumpet, blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;—
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly, shall be spoke aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.]

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy,
A prince call'd Hector, (Priam is his father,)
Who in this dull and long-continued truce⁸
Is rusty grown; he bade me take a trumpet,
And to this purpose speak. Kings, princes, lords!
If there be one among the fairest of Greece,
That holds his honour higher than his ease;
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear;
That loves his mistress more than in confession,¹⁰
(With truant vows to her own lips he loves,)
And dare avow her beauty and her worth,
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge,
Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it,
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,
Mid-way between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love;

7 Malone and Steevens see difficulties in this passage; the former proposed to read 'Jove's a god,' the latter, 'Love's a lord.' There is no point after the word accord in the quarto copy, which reads 'great Jove's accord.' Theobald's interpretation of the passage is, I think, nearly correct:—'They have galls, good arms, &c. and Jove's consent:—Nothing is so full of heart as they.' I have placed a colon at accord, by which the sense is rendered clearer.

8 So Jaques, in As You Like It;

'—I must have liberty

Wihal, as large a charter as the wind,

To blow on whom I please.'

9 Of this long truce there has been no notice taken; in this very act it is said, that 'Ajax coped Hector yesterday in the battle.' Shakespeare found in the seventh chapter of the third book of The Destruction of Troy, that a truce was agreed on, at the desire of the Trojans, for six months.

10 Confession for profession, 'made with idle vows to the lips of her whom he loves.'

If any come, Hector shall honour him ;
If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sun-burn'd, and not worth
The splinter of a lance.¹ Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, lord Eneas—
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home : But we are soldiers :
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love !
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector ; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd : he is old now ;
But, if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man, that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his love, tell him from me,—
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vanbrace² put this wither'd brawn ;
And, meeting him, will tell him, That my lady
Was firmer than his grandame, and as chaste
As may be in the world : His youth in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Ene. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth !

Ulys. Amen.

Agam. Fair lord Eneas, let me touch your hand ;
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir.
Achilles shall have word of this intent ;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent :
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but ULYSSES]

Ulys. Nestor,—

Nest. What says Ulysses ?

Ulys. I have a young conception in my brain,
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is't ?

Ulys. This 'tis :

Blunt wedges rive hard knots : The seeded pride
That hath to this maturity blown up⁴
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropp'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how ?

Ulys. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,

However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,

Whose grossness little characters sum up :⁵

And in the publication make no strain,⁶
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Libya,—though Apollo knows,
⁷This dry enough,—will with great speed of judgment,
Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

Ulys. And wake him to the answer, think you ?

Nest. Yes.

1 Stevens remarks that this is the language of romance. Such a challenge would have better suited Falmerin or Amadis, than Hector or Eneas.

2 An armour for the arm. Avant bras. Milton uses the word in Samson Agonistes, and Heywood in his Iron Age, 1632 :—

—peruse his armour,
The dist'st still in the vanbrace.

3 Be you to my present purpose what time is in respect of all other schemes, viz. a ripener and bringer of them to maturity.

4 Thus in the Rape of Lucrece :—

'How will thy shame be seed in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring !'

5 'The intent is as plain and palpable as substance, and it is to be collected from small circumstances, as a gross body is made up of many small parts.' This is the scope of Warburton's explanation, to which I incline. Stevens says that 'substance is estate, the value of which is ascertained by the use of small characters, i. e. numerals : grossness is the gross sum.'

6 Make no difficulty, no doubt, when this duel comes to be proclaimed, but that Achilles, dull as he is, will discover the drift of it. Thus in a subsequent scene Ulysses says :—

'I do not strain at the position,
It is familiar.'

It is most meet ; Whom may you else oppose,
That can from Hector bring those honours off,
If not Achilles ? Thought't be a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion dwells ;
For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute
With their fin'st palate : And trust to me, Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action : for the success,
Although particular, shall give a scantling⁷
Of good or bad unto the general ;
And in such indexes, although small pricks⁸
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
He that meets Hector, issues from our choice :
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election ; and doth boil,
As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues ; Who miscarrying,
What heart receives from hence a conquering part,
To steal a strong opinion to themselves ?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,
In no less working, than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.

Ulys.

Give pardon to my speech ;—
Therefore 'tis meet, Achilles meet our Hector.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell ; if not,
The lustre of the better shall exceed,
By showing the worse first.⁹ Do not consent,
That ever Hector and Achilles meet ;
For both our honour and our shame, in this,
Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes ; what are they ?

Ulys. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector
Were he not proud we all should share with him ?
But he already is too insolent ;
And we were better parch in Afric sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,
Should he 'scape Hector fair : if he were foul'd,
Why, then we did our main opinion¹⁰ crush
In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery ;
And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw
The sort¹¹ to fight with Hector : Among ourselves,
Give him allowance for the better man,
For that will physic the great Myrmidon,
Who broils in loud applause ; and make him fall
His crest, that prouder than blue Iris bends.
If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,¹²
We'll dress him up in voices ; If he fail,
Yet go we under our opinion¹³ still
That we have better men. But, hit or miss,
Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,— Ajax, employ'd, plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,

Now I begin to relish thy advice :

And I will give a taste of it forthwith

7 A scantling is a measure, a proportion. 'When the lion's skin will not suffice, we must add a scantling of the fox's.' Montaigne's Essays, by Florio, 1603.

8 I. e. small points compared with the volumes. Indexes were formerly often prefixed to books.

9 The folio reads :—

'The lustre of the better, yet to show
Shall show the better.'

But as the quarto copy of the play is generally more correct than the folio, it has been followed. Malone thinks that some arbitrary alterations have been made in the text of this play by the editors of the folio.

10 Opinion for estimation or reputation. See King Henry IV. Part I. Act v. Sc. iv. The word occurs before in this scene, in the same sense :—

'Yet in the trial much opinion dwells.'

11 Lot. Sort. Fr. sorte, Lat. Thus Lydgate :—

'Of sorte also and dilynation.'

12 Shakespeare, misled by The Destruction of Troy, appears to have confounded Ajax Telamonius with Ajax Oileus, for in that book the latter is called simply Ajax, as the more eminent of the two. 'Ajax was of a huge stature, great and large in the shoulders, great arms, and always was well clothed, and very richly, and was of no great enterprise, and spake very quicks'

13 See note 10.

To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.
Two curs shall tame each other: Pride alone
Must tarre¹ the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.²

SCENE I. Another part of the Grecian Camp.
Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. Agamemnon—how if he had boils? full, all over, generally?
Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. And those boils did run?—Say so,—did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core?

Ajax. Dog,—
Ther. Then would come some matter from him;
I see none now.
Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear?
Feel, then. [Strikes him.]

Ther. The plague of Greece³ upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!⁴

Ajax. Speak, then, thou unsalted leaven,⁵ speak!
I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: but, I think, thy horse will sooner con an oration, than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murrain⁶ o' thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. Toads-stool, learn me the proclamation.
Ther. Dost thou think, I have no sense, thou strikest me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation,—
Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not; my fingers itch.

Ther. I would, thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the loathomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strik'st as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation,— Ther. Thou grumblest and railest every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness, as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou barkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!
Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobloaf?⁷

Ther. He would pun⁸ thee into shivers with his fat, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. You whoreson cur! [Beating him.]

Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!

Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sudden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows: an assinico⁹ may tutor thee: Thou scoury-valiant ass! thou art here put to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slave. If thou use¹⁰ to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!

1 I. e. urge, stimulate, or set the mastiffs on. See King John, Act iv. Sc. 1.

2 This play is not divided into acts in any of the original editions.

3 Alluding to the plague sent by Apollo on the Grecian army.

4 He calls Ajax mongrel, on account of his father being a Grecian and his mother a Trojan. Sir Andrew Aguecheek says, in Twelfth Night, 'I am a great eater of beef, and I believe that does harm to my wit.'

5 The folio has 'thou whinid'st leaven,' a corruption undoubtedly of vineyard'st or vinnied'st, i. e. movably leaven. Thou unsalted leaven, is as much as to say, 'thou foolish lump.'

6 In The Tempest, Caliban says, 'The red plague rid you.'

7 Cobloaf is perhaps equivalent to ill shapen lump. Minshew says, a cob-loaf is a little loaf made with a round head, such as cob loaves which support the fire.

8 I. e. pound; still in use provincially. It is related of a Staffordshire servant of Miss Seward, that hearing

Ajax. You dog!

Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ajax. You cur!

Ther. Murrain his idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do.

[Beating him]

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax? wherefore do you thus?

How now, Thersites? what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do; What's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why, I do so.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him: for whoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have bobb'd his brain, more than he has beat my bones;
I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his *pis mater*¹¹ is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow.
This, lord Achilles, Ajax,—who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say, this Ajax—

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

[AJAX offers to strike him, ACHILLES interposes.]

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look you these

Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you: for a fool's will shame it.

Pat. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl, go learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.¹²

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary; Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. Even so?—a great deal of your wit too lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains; 's' a were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses, and old Nestor,—whose wits was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on his mistress knock with her foot to call up her attendant, he said, 'Mark! madam is punning.'

9 The commentators changed this word to ambage, and then erroneously affirm it to be Portuguese. It is evidently from the Spanish asocio, a young or little ass; a word indeed entirely similar in sound, and seems to have been adopted into our language to signify a silly ass, a stupid fellow. The Italians and French have several kindred terms with the same meaning. Shakespeare may have used the word for an ass or idiot, confounding it with asociacio or asocio; like the French gros-âne, used to denote the most gross stupidity or folly.

10 I. e. 'If you accustom yourself, or make it a practice to beat me.'

11 See vol. i. p. 104.

12 Voluntarily. Another instance of an adjective used adverbially.

13 The same thought occurs in Cymbeline:—

'Not Hercules

Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had none.'

their toes,—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth; To, Achilles! to, Ajax! to!

Ajex. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou, afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Theristes; peace.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach' bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents; I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools. [Exit.]

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this air, is proclaimed through all our hosts:

That Hector, by the first hour of the sun,
Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy,
To-morrow morning call some knight to arms,
That hath a stomach; and such a one, that dare
Maintain—I know not what; 'tis trash: Farewell.
Ajex. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not, it is put to lottery: otherwise, He knew his man.

Ajex. O, meaning you:—I'll go learn more of it. [Exit.]

SCENE II. Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.
Enter PRIAM, HECTOR, TROILUS, PARIS, and HELENUS.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,
Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks;
*Deliver Helen, and all damage else—
As honour, loss of time, travel, expence,
Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consumed
In hot digestion of this comorant war,
Shall be struck off:—*Hector, what say you to't?

Hec. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,

As far as toucheth my particular, yet,
Dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out—Who knows what follows?
Than Helen is: The wound of peace is surely,
Surely secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wine, the tent that searcheth
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Every little soul, 'mongst many thousand dimes,¹
Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours:
If we have lost so many tents of ours,
To guard a thing not ours; not worth to us,
Had it our name, the value of one ten;
What merit's in that reason, which denies
The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fye, fye, my brother!

Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,
So great as our dread father, in a scale
Of common ounces? will you with counters sum
The past-proportion of his infinite?²
And buckle in a waist meet fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive

¹ Both the old copies read breach, which may be right; for we find menile and balls in the dictionaries interpreted 'a beam, an hart; a breach, or jewel of a round compass to hang about ones neck.' It has been observed that Theristes afterwards call's Patroclus Achilles's male harlot, and his masculine whore. The term breach was suggested by Rowe, and which later editors have continued in the text, has been already explained, it is 'a manerly name for all heurd-bitches.'

² Who knows what all consequences may follow from pursuing this or that course?

³ Dime is properly tenite or tythes, but dimes is here used for tenes.

⁴ I. e. that greatness to which no measure bears any proportion.

⁵ I. e. consideration, regard to consequences.

⁶ The will does that attributed or gives the qualities which it affects: that first causes excellence, and then admires it. The folio reads inclimable, the quarto attributive.

As fears and reasons? fye, for godly shame!

Hec. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,

You are so empty of them. Should not our father Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest,

You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:

You know, an enemy intends you harm;
You know, a sword employ'd is perilous,
And reason flies the object of all harm;
Who marvels, then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels;
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star disorb'd?—Nay, if we talk of reason,
Let's shut our gates and sleep: Manhood and honour
Should have here hearts, would they but sat their thoughts

With this cressm'd reason: reason and respect!
Make livers pale, and lusthood deject.

Hec. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost
The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 'tis valued?

Hec. But value dwells not in particular will;
It holds his estimate and dignity

As well wherein 'tis precious of itself

As in the prizer: 'tis mad idolatry,

To make the service greater than the god;

And the will dotes, that is attributive

To what infectiously itself affects,⁷

Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election

Is led on in the conduct of my will;⁸

My will, entangled by mine eyes and ears,

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores

Of will and judgment: How may I avoid,

Although my will distaste what it elected,

The wife I choose? There can be no evasion

To blench⁹ from this, and to stand firm by honour:

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,

When we have sold them; nor the remainder viands

We do not throw in unrespective sieve,¹⁰

Because we now are full. It was thought meet,

Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:

Your breath with full consent bellied his sails;

The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,

And did him service: he touch'd the ports desired;

And, for an old aunt,¹¹ whom the Greeks held captive,

He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and fresh-
ness

Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning.

Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:

Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,

Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,

And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.

If you'll avouch, 'twas wisdom Paris went,

(As you must needs, for you all cry'd—Go, go,)

If you'll confess, he brought home noble prize,

(As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,

And cry'd—Inestimable!) why do you now

The issue of your proper wisdoms rate;

And do a deed that fortune never did,¹²

Beggar the estimation which you priz'd

Richer than sea and land? O theft most base;

⁷ I. e. under the guidance of my will.

⁸ See p. 168, note 9.

⁹ That is, into a common voider. It is well known that sieves and half sieves are baskets, to be met with in every quarter of Covent Garden: and baskets lined with tin are still employed as voiders. In the former of these senses sieve is used in The Wit, by Sir W. Davenant—
—apple-wives
That wrangle for a sieve.

Dr. Farmer says, that in some counties the baskets used for carrying out dirt, &c. are called sieves. The folio copy reads by mistake 'unrespective same.'

¹⁰ Priam's sister, Heleone.

¹¹ Fortune was never so unjust and mutable as to rate a thing on one day above all price, and on the next to set no estimation whatsoever upon it. You are doing what Fortune, inconstant as she is, never did

That we have stolen what we do fear to keep!
But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!

Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?

Tro. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voice.

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!

Hect. It is Cassandra.

Enter CASSANDRA, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hect. Peace, sister, peace.

Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled elders,

Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of moan to come.

Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears!

Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilion stand!

Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all!

Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a woo:

Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.]

Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains

Of divination in our sister, work
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it;
Nor once deject the courage of our minds
Because Cassandra's mad: her brainsick raptures
Cannot distaste¹ the goodness of a quarrel,
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make it gracious.² For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst us
Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince³ of levity
As well my undertakings, as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent⁴
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project.
For what, alas! can these my single arms?
What propagation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet I protest,
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant, is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself

The pleasures such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soul of her fair rape⁵
Wip'd off, in honourable keeping her.
What treason were it to the ransom'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up,
On terms of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a strain as this
Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?
There's not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unfam'd,
Where Helen is the subject: then, I say,
Well may we fight for her, whom we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hect. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said well:
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glaz'd,⁶—but superficially; not much.
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle¹⁰ thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy:
The reasons you allege, do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; For pleasure, and revenge,
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves,
All dues be render'd to their owners; Now
What nearer debt in all humanity,
Than wife is to the husband? if this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection;
And that great minds, of¹¹ partial indulgence
To their benumbed wills, resist the same;
There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen, then, be wife to Sparta's king,—
As it is known she is,—these moral laws
Of nature, and of nations, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: Thus to persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion
Is this, in way of truth: yet, nevertheless,
My spritely brethren, I propend¹² to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependance
Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:
Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds:
Whose present courage may beat down our foes;
And fame, in time to come, canonise us:¹³
For I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

Hect.

I am yours,

¹ The quarto thus. The folio reads 'wrinkled old,' which Risson thinks should be 'wrinkled old.' Shakespeare has 'idle-headed old,' and 'palest old,' in other places.

² See p. 157, note 5. This line brings to mind one in the second book of the Æneid—

'Trojaque nunc staret, Priamique arx alta maneres.'

³ Hecuba, when pregnant with Paris, dreamed she should be delivered of a burning torch.—Æneid, x. 703.

⁴ Corrupt, change to a worse state.

⁵ I. e. to make it graceful, to grace it, to set it off.

⁶ To convince and to convict were synonymous with our ancestors. The word was also used for to overcome, and will generally be found in Shakespeare with that signification. See Bacon's Alcibiades, C. 1244.

⁷ Consent is agreement, accord, approbation.

⁸ Rape and ravishment anciently signified only seizing or carrying away. Indeed the Rape of Helen is merely Raptus Helene, without any idea of personal violence.

⁹ Glor'd here means commented. See King Henry V. Act I. Sc. 2.

¹⁰ We may be amused at Hector's mention of Aristotle, but 'Let it be remembered (says Steevens) as often as Shakespeare's anachronisms occur, that errors in computing time were very frequent in those ancient romances which seem to have formed the greater part of his library.' These old writers perhaps did not think an attention to chronology any part of the duty of a writer of works of fiction. Indeed one of the most fertile and distinguished writers of the present age, in his admirable historical novels, blends circumstances of various periods, and exhibits persons on the stage of action together who were not contemporaries; yet his language, manners, and costume are in admirable keeping

¹² Incline to, as a question of honour.

¹³ 'The hope of being registered as a saint is rather out of its place at so early a period as this of the Trojan war,' says Steevens. It is not so meant, the expression must not be taken literally; it merely means de inscriptis among the heroes or demigods. 'Ascribi numinibus' is rendered by old translators, 'to be canonized, or made a saint.'

You valiant offspring of great Priamus.—
I have a roisting! challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Who strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advertis'd, their great general slept,
Whilst emulation¹ in the army crept;
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exit.

SCENE III. The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles'
Tent. Enter THERSITES.

Ther. How now, Thersites? what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! 'would, it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me: 'Shoot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles, —a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caduceus;² if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they have! which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons, and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather, the bone-ache!³ for that, methinks, is the curse dependant on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers; and devil, envy, say Amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites? Good Thersites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit,⁴ thou wouldest not have slipped out of my contemplation: but it is no matter; Thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood⁵ be thy direction till thy death!
then if she, that lays thee out, says—thou art a fair corpse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazars. Amee.—Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay; The heavens hear me!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come;
what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles:—Then tell me,
Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites; Then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus; Then tell me,
Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayest tell, that knowest.

¹ Blustering.

² Emulation is here put for envious rivalry, factious contention. It is generally used by Shakespeare in this sense: the reason will appear from the following definition:—'To have envie to some man, to be angry with another man which hath that which we covet to have, to envy at that which another man hath, to studie, in endeavour, and travaile to do as well as another: emulation is such kinde of envy.'

³ The wand of Mercury is wreathed with serpents. So Marial, lib. vii. epig. lxxiv. —

⁴ Cylleus colligae decus! facunde minister

Aurea cul torto virga draconis viret.

⁵ In the quarto 'the Neapolitan bone-ache'

⁶ To understand this joke it should be known that counterfeit and slip were synonymous:—'And therefore he went out and got him certain slips, which are counterfeit pieces of money, being brasse, and covered over with silver, which the common people call slips.'

Achil. O, tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord: I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.⁷

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool; I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileged man.—Proceed, Ther sites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool: Thersites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this; come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.⁸

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover.—It sut fices me, thou art. Look you, who comes here!

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and AJAX.

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody:—Come in with me, Thersites. [Exit.

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is, a cuckold and a whore; a good quarrel, to draw enulous⁹ factious, and bleed to death upon! Now the dry *serpigo*¹⁰ on the subject! and war, and lechery, confound all! [Exit.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent: but ill dispos'd, my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him, that we are here. He shent!¹¹ our messengers; and we lay by Our appertainments, visiting of him:

Let him be told so; lest, perchance, he think, We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit.

Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent; He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: But why, why? let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord.

[Takes AGAMEMNON aside.

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

Nest. Who? Thersites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see he is his argument, that has his argument; Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their faction is more our wish, than their faction: But it was a strong composure,¹² a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.¹³

Greene's Thieves falling out, true Men come by their Goode.

⁷ Thy blood means thy passions, thy natural propensities.

⁸ The four next speeches are still in the quarto.

⁹ The grammatical allusion is not pursued, the first degree of comparison is here alluded to.

¹⁰ See Act ii. Sc. 2.

¹¹ The serpigo is a kind of tetter.

¹² Rebuked, reprimanded. See Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. ii. note the last. Instead of shent the quarto reads sent: the quarto, sate.

¹³ The folio reads counsel.

Patr. Achilles bids me say—he is much sorry, If any thing more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness, and this noble state¹ To call upon him; he hopes, it is no other, But, for your health and your digestion sake, An after-dinner's breath.²

Agam. Hear you, Patroclus;— We are too well acquainted with these answers: But his evasion, wing'd thus with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions. Much attribute he hath; and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues,— Not virtuously on his own part beheld,— Do, in our eyes, begin to lose their gloss; Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him, We come to speak with him: And you shall not aim, If you do say—we think him over-proud, And under-honest; in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself

Here tend the savage strangeness³ he puts on; Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite⁴ in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch His pettish luns,⁵ his ebbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this; and add, That, if he overhold his price so much, We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report.— Bring action hither, this cannot go to war: A stirring dwarf we do allowance⁶ give Before a sleeping giant:—Tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently. [Exit.]

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied, We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter.

[Exit Ulysses.]

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think, he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say—he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind's the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud, eats up himself: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle: and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.⁷

4 To underwrite is synonymous with to subscribe, which is used by Shakespeare in several places for to yield, to submit.

5 Fitful lunacies. The quarto reads:—

'His course and time, his ebbs and flows, and if The passage and whole stream of his commencement Rode on his tide.'

6 Allowance is approbation.

7 We have this sentiment before in Act I. Sc. 3:—

'The worthiness of praise disdains his worth,

If that the praise'd himself the praise bring forth.'

Malone has cited a passage from Coriolanus in both instances, which has nothing in it of similar sentiment, and which he could neither comprehend nor explain. See Coriolanus, Act iv. Sc. 7.

Re-enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss.

He doth rely on none; But carries on the stream of his dispose, Without observance or respect of any, In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request, Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only,

He makes important: Possess'd he is with greatness;

And speaks not to himself, but with a pride That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth Holds in his blood such swoll and hot discourse, That, 'twixt his mental and his active parts, Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,⁹ And batters down himself: What should I say? He is so plaguily proud, that the death tokens¹⁰ on his Cry—No recovery.

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent:

'Tis said, he holds you well: and will be led,

At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!

We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes

When they go from Achilles; Shall the proud lord,

That bastes his arrogance with his own seam;¹¹

And never suffers matter of the world

And say in thunder—Achilles, go to him.

'He was pushed over the pate with a pot.'

The word is used twice by Massinger in his Virgin Martyr; and Mr. Gifford has adduced an instance from Dryden; he justly observes, it is to be regretted that the word is now obsolete, as we have none that can adequately supply its place. To dash signifying to throw one thing with violence against another; to push is to strike a thing with such force as to crush it to pieces.

Ajax. I will let his humours blood.¹
Agam. He'll be the physician, that should be the patient. [Aside.]
Ajax. An all men

Ajax. He should not bear it so,
 He should eat swords first; Shall pride carry it?

 Thrice-fam'd, beyond all erudition:⁵
 But he that disciplin'd thy arms to fight,
 Let Mars divide eternity in twain,
 And give him half: and, for thy vigour,
 Bull-bearing Milo his addition⁶ yield
 To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,
 Which, like a bourn,⁷ a pale, a shore, confines
 Thy spacious and dilated parts: Here's Nestor, —
 Instructed by the antiquary times,
 He must, he is, he cannot but be wise; —
 But pardon, father Nestor, were your days
 As green as Ajax', and your brain so temper'd,
 You should not have the eminence of him,
 But be as Ajax.
Ajax. Shall I call you father?⁸
Nest. Ay, my good son.
Dio. Be rul'd by him, lord Ajax.
Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the hart Achilles Keeps thicket. Please it our great general
 To call together all his state of war;
 Fresh kings are come to Troy: To-morrow,
 We must with all our main of power stand fast:

And here's a lord, — come knights from east to west,
 And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.
Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep:
 Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.
Enter PANDARUS and a Servant.

Pan. Friend! you! pray you, a word: Do not you follow the young lord Paris?
Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.
Pan. You do depend upon him, I mean?
Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.
Pan. You do depend upon a noble gentleman;
 I must needs praise him.
Serv. The lord be praised!
Pan. You know me, do you not?
Serv. Faith, sir, superfluently.
Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the Lord
 Pandarus.
Serv. I hope, I shall know your honour better.⁹
Pan. I do desire it.
Serv. You are in the state of grace.

[Music within.]
Pan. Grace! not so, friend! honour and lordship are my titles: — What music is this?
Serv. I do but partly know, sir; it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?
Serv. Wholly, sir.
Pan. Who play they to?
Serv. To the hearers, sir.
Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?
Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.
Pan. Command, I mean, friend.
Serv. Who shall I command, sir?
Pan. Friend, we understand not one another; I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning: At whose request do these men play?
Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir: Marry, sir, at the request of Paris, my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul, —
Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?
Serv. No, sir, Helen: Could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a com-plimental assault upon him, for my business seeths.
Serv. Sudden business! there's a stewed phrase,
 indeed!

Enter PARIS and HELEN, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them! especially to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.
Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen. —
 Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Par. You have broke it, cousin: and, by my life, you shall make it whole again; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance: — Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

dividing one place from another. As in the line of the old ballad Edgar sings in Lear, Act iii. Sc. 6: —
 'Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me.'

1 There is a curious collection of Epigrams, Satires, &c. printed in 1600, with this quaint title: — 'The Letting of Humours Blood in the Head Vaine.' A small reimpression was made at Edinburgh in 1816, with a preface and notes by Sir Walter Scott.

2 Force him, that is stuff him; farcir, Fr. In another place of this play we have 'malice forced with wit.'

3 See the preceding scene.

4 To palter is to shuffle, equivocate.

5 The quarto reads: —

'Thrice fam'd beyond all thy erudition.'

6 i. e. yield his titles, his celebrity for strength. See Act i. Sc. 2.

7 A bourn is a boundary, and sometimes a rivulet.

8 The servant means to quibble. He hopes Pandarus will become a better man than he is at present. In his next speech he chooses to understand Pandarus as if he had said he wished to grow better; and hence the servant affirms that he is in the state of grace.

Helen. O, sir,—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in fits.¹

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen:—My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.—But (marry) thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus—

Helen. My Lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody; if you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, i'faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad, is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; no, no.—'And, my lord, he desires you, anon, if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My Lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to-night?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.²

Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposer³ Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter, you are wide; come, your disposer is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say—Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick.

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy?—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pan. He! no, she'll none of him: they two are twain.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, pr'ythee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love; this love will undo us all. O, Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, i'faith.

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, oh, love's bow

Shoots buck and doe;

The shaft confounds,

Not that it wounds,

But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! ho! they die!

Yet that which seems the wound to kill,

Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!

¹ A quibble is intended. A fit was a part or division of a song or tune. The equivocal lies between fits, starts, or sudden impulses, and fits in its musical acception.

² 'And, my lord,' &c. I think with Johnson, that the speech of Pandarus should begin here; and that the former part should be added to that of Helen.

³ 'You must not know where he sups.' These words in the old copies are erroneously given to Helen.

⁴ Stevens would give this speech to Helen, and read

So dying love lives still:

Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!

Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Hey ho!

Helen. In love, i'faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are vipers: Is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-night, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something;—you know all, Lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen.

[Exit.]

[A Retreat sounded.]

Par. They are come from field; let us to Priam's hall,

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles, With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd, Shall more obey, than to the edge of steel, Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings, disarm great Hector.

Helen. 'Twill make us proud to be his servant,

Paris:

Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty,

Gives us more palm in beauty than we have;

Yea, overshines ourself.

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Pandarus's Orchard. Enter PANDARUS and a Servant, meeting.

Pan. How now? where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Serv. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. O, here he comes.—How now, how now?

Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Servant.]

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door, Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks, Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon, And give me swift transference to those fields, Where I may wallow in the lily beds Propos'd for the deserver! O gentle Pandarus, From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings, And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here i' the orchard, I'll bring her straight.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirles me round.

The imaginary relish is so sweet

That it enchants my sense; What will it be,

When that the watry palate tastes indeed

Love's thrice-reputed nectar; death, I fear me;

Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine,

Too subtle potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness.

For the capacity of my ruder powers:

I fear it much; and I do fear besides,

That I shall lose distinction in my joys;

deposer instead of disposer. Helen, he thinks, may address herself to Pandarus; and by her deposer, mean that Cressida had deposed her in the affections of Troilus.

Disposer appears to have been an equivalent term anciently for steward, or manager. If the speech is to be attributed to Helen, she may mean to call Cressid her hand-maid.

⁵ — ubi jam amborum fuerat confusa voluptas.
Sappho's Epistle to Phaon

As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Par. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were fray'd with a sprite; I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath as short as a new-tan sparrow. [Exit PANDARUS.]

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom: My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse; And all my powers do their bestowing lose, Like vassalage at unawares encounter'ing The eye of majesty.

Enter PANDARUS AND CRESSIDA.

Par. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Here she is now; swear the oaths now to her, that you have sworn to me.—What, are you gone again? you must be watch'd: ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.¹—Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw the curtain, and let's see your picture, Alas the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress.² How now, a kiss in fee-farm!³ build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out, ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel,⁴ for all the ducks i' the river; go to, go to.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Par. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's—*In witness whereof the parties interchangeably*⁵—Come in, come in; I'll go get a fire. [Exit PANDARUS.]

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O, Cressida, how often have I wished me thus?

Cres. Wished, my lord?—The gods grant!—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption? What too curious dreg spies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: To fear the worst, oft cures the worst.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.⁶

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrosity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.

1 Hawks were tamed by keeping them from sleep; and thus Pandarus meant that Cressida should be tamed. See Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. Sc. 1.

2 I. e. the shaft. Pills or fills is the term in the midland counties for the shafts of a cart or wagon.

3 The allusion is to bowling; what is now called the jack was formerly termed the mistress. A bowl that kisses the jack or mistress is the most advantageous situation. Rub on is a term in the game. See Cymbeline, Act II. Sc. 1.

4 'A kiss in fee-farm' is a kiss of duration, that has bounds, a fee-farm being a grant of lands in fee; that is, for ever reserving a certain rent. The same idea is expressed much more poetically in Coriolanus, when the jargon of law was absent from the poet's thoughts:—

—O, a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!

5 The tercel is the male and the falcon the female

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are there such? such are not we: Praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare, till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert, before his birth; and, being born, his addition⁷ shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what envy can say worst, shall be a mock for his truth;⁸ and what truth can speak truest, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Par. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Par. I thank you for that; if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me: Be true to my lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word, and my firm faith.

Par. Nay, I'll give my word for her too; our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant, being won: they are burs, I can tell you: they'll stick were they are thrown.⁹

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart:—

Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day
For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord, With the first glance that ever—Pardon me;—

If I confess much, you will play the tyrant. I love you now; but not, till now, so much. But I might master it: in faith, I lie; My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown Too headstrong for their mother: See, we fools! Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us,

When we are so unsecret to ourselves? But, though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not; And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man; Or that we women had men's privilege

Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue; For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak

The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence, Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws My very soul of counsel: Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Par. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you pardon me; 'Twas not my purpose, thus to beg a kiss:

I am ashamed;—O heavens! what have I done?— For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Par. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning.

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

hawk. Pandarus appears to mean that he will back the falcon against the tercel, or match his niece against her lover for any bet.

6 Shakespeare had here an idea in his thoughts that he has elsewhere often expressed. Thus in a future page:—'Go to, a bargain made; seal it.'

7 From this passage a Fear appears to have been a personage in other pageants, or perhaps in our ancient moralities. To this circumstance Aspatia alludes in The Maid's Tragedy:—

—and then a Fear
Do that Fear bravely, wench!

8 I. e. we will give him no high or pompous titles.

9 Even malice (i. e. envy) shall not be able to impeach his truth, or attach him in any other way, except by ridiculing him for his constancy.

10 He wishes this allusion in Measure for Measure—
'Nay, friar, I am a kind of bur, I shall stick.'

Tro. You cannot shun Yourself

Cres. Let me go and try:
I have a kind of self resides with you;
But an unkind self, that itself will leave,
To be another's fool. I would be gone:
Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more craft than love;

And fell so roundly to a large confession,
To angle for your thoughts: But you are wise;
Or else you love not; For to be wise, and love,
Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.¹

Tro. O, that I thought it could be in a woman,
(As, if it can, I will presume in you,)

To feed for aye² her lamp and flames of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth,
Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays!
Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me—
That my integrity and truth to you
Might be affronted³ with the match and weight
Of such a winnow'd purity in love;
How were I then uplifted! but, alas,
I am as true as truth's simplicity,
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. Is that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars who shall be most right!
True swains in love shall, in the world to come,
Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,⁴
Want smiles of truth, tir'd with iteration,⁵
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,⁶
As sun to-day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,—
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
As true as Troilus shall crown up⁷ the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing; yet let memory,
From false to false, among false masks in love, Upbraid my falsehood! when they have said—as false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,

¹ Cressida's meaning appears to be, 'Perchance I fell too roundly to confession, in order to angle for your thoughts; but you are not so easily taken in; you are too wise, or too indifferent; for to be wise, and love, exceeds man's might.' The thought originally belongs to Publius Syrus:—'Amare et sapere vix Deo conceditur.'

² Troilus alludes to the perpetual lamps, which were supposed to illuminate sepulchres.

³—lasting flames, that burn

To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn.⁸

See Pericles, Act II. Sc. 1.

⁴ Met with and equalled. See Hamlet, Act III. Sc. 1:

—That he, as 'twere by accident, may here

affront Ophelia.⁹

⁵ Comparisons.

⁶ In the old copy this line stands:—

'Wants smiles truth tir'd with iteration.'

The emendation was proposed by Mr. Tyrwhitt.

⁷ Plantage is here put for any thing planted, which was thought to depend for its success upon the influence of the moon. 'The poor husbandman perceiveth that the increase of the moone maketh plants fruitful; so as in the full moone they are in their best strength; decaying in the wane; and in the conjunction do utterly wither and vade.'—Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft.

⁸ I. e. conclude it. Pisus coronat opus.

⁹ Hamlet asked this to 'inconstant men;' but the poet seems to have been less attentive to make Pandarus talk consequentially, than to account for the ideas actually annexed to the three names in his own time.

The old copies all concur in reading—

'That through the sighs I bear in things to love.'

As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son;
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
As false as Cressid.

Pan. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it: I'll be the witness.—Here I hold your hand; here, my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful gores-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all—Pandars; let all constant¹⁰ men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers-between Pandars! say, amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber and a bed, which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away.

And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here,
Bed, chamber, Pandar, to provide this gear.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The Grecian Camp. Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES, NESTOR, AJAX, MENELAUS, and CALCHAS.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you
The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompence. Appear it to your mind,
That, through the sight I bear in things, to Jove¹¹
I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession,
Incurr'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself
From certain and possess'd conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes; sequester'd from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition,
Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become
As new into¹² the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which you say, live to come in my behalf.

Agam. What would'st thou of us, Trojan? make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor,
Yesterday took; Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you (often have you thanks therefore,) Deer'd my Cressid in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied: But this Antenor,
I know, is such a wretch¹³ in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,

Which Steevens thinks may be explained:—'No longer assisting Troy with my advice, I have left it to the dominion of fate, to the consequence of the amour of Paris and Helen.' The present reading of the text is supported by Johnson and Malone; to which Mason makes this objection:—'That it was Juno and not Jove that persecuted the Trojans. Jove wished them well, and though we may abandon a man to his enemies, we cannot, with propriety, say that we abandon him to his friends.' Some modern editions have the line thus:—

'That through the sight I bear in things to come.'

Which is an emendation to which I must confess I incline: for, as Mason observes, 'the speech of Calchas would have been incomplete, if he had said he abandon'd Troy, from the sight he bore of things, without explaining it by adding the words to come.'

The merit of Calchas did not merely consist in having come over to the Greeks; he also revealed to them the fate of Troy, which depended on their conveying away the palladium, and the horses of Rhesus, before they should drink of the river Xanthus.

¹⁰ Into for unto; a common form of expression in old writers. Thus in the Paston Letters, vol. II. p. 5:—'And they that have jested with him into this day, have been as richly beseen,' &c.

¹¹ A wretch is an instrument for tuning harps, &c. by drawing up the strings. Its form may be seen in some of the illuminated service-books, where David is represented; in the Second Part of Mersenna's Harmonics; and in the Symagmata of Prætorius, vol. II. fig. xix. See in King James's Edict against Combats, &c. p. 45:—

'This small instrument the tongue, being kept in tune by the wretch of aw.'

In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pay.¹

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither; Calchas shall have
What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
Withal, bring word—if Hector will to-morrow
Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt DIOMEDES and CALCHAS.]

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, before their Tent.

Ulys. Achilles stands i' the entrance of his tent:—

Please it our general to pass strangely by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him;
I will come last: 'Tis like, he'll question me,
Why such unplausible eyes are bent, why turn'd on
him:

If so, I have devotion med'cinable,
To use between our strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink;
It may do good: pride hath no other glass
To show itself, but pride; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on
A form of strangeness as we pass along;
So do each lord; and either greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me?
You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us?

Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?

Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agam. The better.

[Exeunt AGAMEMNON and NESTOR.]

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How do you? how do you?

[Exit MENELAUS.]

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too.

[Exit AJAX.]

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles?

Pat. They pass by strangely: they were us'd to hand,

To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
To come as humbly, as they us'd to creep
To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late?

'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: What the declin'd is,
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others,
As feel in his own fall: for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mealy wings, but to the summer;
And not a man, for being simply man,

Hath any honour; but honour for those honours
That are without him, as place, riches, favour,
Prizes of accident as oft as merit:
Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,
Save these men's looks: who do, methinks, find
out

Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses;
I'll interrupt his reading.—
How now, Ulysses?

Ulys. Now, great Thetis' son?

Achil. What are you reading.

Ulys.

A strange fellow here
Writes me, That man—how dearly ever parted,²
How much in having, or without, or in,—
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection;
As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they retort that heat again
To the first giver.

Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses.

The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
To others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself
(That most pure spirit of sense,) behold itself,³
Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd
Salutes each other with each other's form.
For speculation⁴ turns not to itself,
Till it hath travell'd, and is married there
Where it may see itself: this is not strange at all.

Ulys. I do not strain at the position,
It is familiar; but at the author's drift:
Who, in his circumstance,⁵ expressly proves—
That no man is the lord of any thing, (Though in and of him there be much consisting,) Till he communicate his parts to others:
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they are extended; which,⁶ like an arch, reverberates

The voice again; or like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this;
And apprehended here immediately
The unknown Ajax.⁷
Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse;
That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,

Most abject in regard, and dear in use!
What things again most dear in the esteem,
And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow,
An act that very chance doth throw upon him,—
Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
While some men leave to do!
How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
While others play the idiots in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,
While pride is fasting in his wantonness!
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder;
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrieking.⁸

Achil. I do believe it: for they passed by me,
As misers do by beggars: neither gave to me
Good word, nor look: What, are my deeds forgot!

¹ Manmer and Warburton read, 'In most accepted pay.' But the construction of the passage, as it stands, appears to be, 'Her presence shall strike off, or recompense the service I have done, even in those labours which were most accepted.'

² However excellently endowed, with however dear or precious parts enriched.

³ Thus in Julius Caesar:—

'No, Cassius: for the eye sees not itself
But by reflection; by some other things.'

⁴ Speculation has here the same meaning as in Macbeth:—

'Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with.'

⁵ Detail of argument.

⁶ The old copies read who, like an arch, reverberate, which may mean, They who applaud reverberate. The elliptic mode of expression is in the poet's manner. Rowe made the alteration.

⁷ I. e. Ajax, who has abilities which were never brought into view or use.

⁸ The folio reads shrieking. The following passage in the subsequent scene seems to favour the reading of the quarto:—

'Hark, how Troy roars; how Hebe cries out;
How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth;
And all cry—Hector, Hector's dead.'

Ulysses. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alive for oblivion,¹
A great-sized monster of ingratitude:
Those scraps are good deeds past: which are devour'd

As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: Perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright: To have done, is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast: keep then the path;
For emulation hath a thousand sons,
That one by one pursue: If you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost:—

Or, like a gallant horse fallen in first rank,²
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear, O'er-run and trampled on: Then what they do in present,

Though less than yours in past, must o'er-top yours:
For time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand;
And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: Welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue seek

Remuneration for the thing it was;
For beauty, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time.
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,—
That all, with one consent, praise new-born gawds,³
Though they are made and moulded of things past;
And give to dust, that is a little gilt,
More land than gilt o'er-dusted.⁴

The present eye praises the present object:
Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax;
Since things in motion sooner catch the eye,
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might; and yet it may again,
If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in thy tent;
Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions⁵ 'mongst the gods themselves,

And draw great Mars to faction.

Achil. Of this my privacy

I have strong reasons.

Ulysses. But 'gainst your privacy

The reasons are more potent and heroic:
'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.⁶

Achil. Ha! known?

Ulysses. Is that a wonder?

The providence that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold;
Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps;
Keeps place with thought,⁷ and almost, like the gods,
Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles,
There is a mystery (with whom relation Durst never meddle⁸) in the soul of staté;
Which hath an operation more divine,

1 This image is literally from Spenser:—
'And eke this wallet at your backe arreare—

And in this bag, which I behinde me don,
I put repentance for things past and gone.'

F. Q. b. vi. c. viii. st. 94.

2 The quarto wholly omits the simile of the horse, and reads thus:—

'And leave you hindmost, then what they do at present.'

3 New-fashioned toys.

4 Gilt, in this second line, is a substantive. See Coriolanus, Act I. Sc. 2. Dust a little gilt means ordinary performances, which have the gloss of novelty.
Gilt o'er-dusted means splendid actions of preceding ages, the remembrance of which is weakened by time.

5 I. e. the descent of deities to combat on either side.
Shakespeare probably followed Chapman's Homer: in the fifth book of the Iliad Diomed wounds Mars, who on

Than breath, or pen, can give expressure to;
All the commerce that you have had with Troy,
As perfectly is ours, as yours, nor word;
And better would it fit Achilles' war,
To throw down Hector, than Polyxena:
But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home,
When fame shall in our islands sound her trumpet;
And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing,—
Great Hector's sister did Achilles win;
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.
Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak;
The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.

[Exit.

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd you:
A woman impudent and mannish grown,
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man
In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this;
They think, my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus:
Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air.⁹

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

Patr. Ay; and, perhaps, receive much honour by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake;
My fame is shrewdly go'd.¹⁰

Patr. O, then beware;
Those wounds heal ill, that men do give themselves:
Omission to do what is necessary,
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
And danger, like an ague, subtly taints
Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus;
I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
To invite the Trojan lords, after the combat,
To see us here unarm'd: I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;
To talk with him, and to behold his visage,
Even to my full view. A labour sav'd!

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself.

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector; and is so prophetically proud of an heroic cudgelling, that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock, a stride, and a stand: ruminates, like an hostess, that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard,¹¹ as who should say—there were wit in this head, an 'twould out; and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking.¹² The man's undone for ever: for if Hector break not his neck in the combat, he'll break it himself in vain-glory. He knows not me; I said, Good-morrow, Ajax; and he replies, Thanks, Agamemnon. What think you of this his return to heaven is rated by Jupiter for having interfered in the battle. This disobedience is the faction alluded to.

6 Polyxena, in the act of marrying whom, he was afterwards killed by Paris.

7 There is in the providence of a state, as in the providence of the universe, a kind of ubiquity. It is possible that there may be some allusion to the sublime description of the divine omnipresence in the 180th Psalm.

8 There is a secret administration of affairs, which no history was ever able to discover.

9 The folio has 'ayrie air.'

10 So in Hamlet:—

'To keep thy name ungo'd.'

11 I. e. a sly look.

12 Thus in Julius Caesar:—
'That carries anger, as the flint bears fire,
Who much enforced shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.'

man, that takes me for the general? He is grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, Therites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in his arms.¹ I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make demands on me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: Tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe-conduct for his person, of the magnanimous, and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Ther. Humph!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent!—

Ther. Humph!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go on one way or other; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not: But I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings² on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable³ creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd: And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.]

Ther. 'Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Troy. A Street. Enter, at one side, ÆNEAS, and Servant with a Torch; at the other, PARIS, DRIPHOBUS, ANTEHOR, DIOMEDES, and others, with Torches.

Par. See, ho! who's that there?

Dei. 'Tis the lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lie long, As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dei. That's my mind too.—Good morrow, Lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas; take his hand: Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told—how Diomed, a whole week by days, Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir,

During all question⁴ of the gentle truce: But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance, As heart can think, or courage execute.

Dei. The one and other Diomed embraces. Our bloods are now in calm; and so long, health: But when contention and occasion meet, By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life, With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly With his face backward.—In humane gentleness, Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises' life, Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear,⁵ No man alive can love, in such a sort, The thing he means to kill more excellently.

Dei. We sympathize:—Jove, let Æneas live, If to my sword his fate be not the glory, A thousand complete courses of the sun! But, in mine emulous honour, let him die, With every joint a wound; and that to-morrow!

Æne. We know each other well.

Dei. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despicable gentle greeting, The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—What business, lord, so early?

Æne. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you:⁶ 'Twas to bring this Greek

To Calchas' house; and there to render him, For the enfréed Antenor, the fair Cressid; Let's have your company; or if you please, Haste there before us: I constantly do think (Or, rather, call my thoughts a certain knowledge,) My brother Troilus lodges there to-night; Rouse him, and give him note of our approach, With the whole quality wherefore: I fear, We shall be much unwelcome.

Æne. That I assure you; Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece, Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help; The bitter disposition of the time Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Æne. Good morrow, all.

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed; 'faith, tell-me true,

Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,—Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best, Myself, or Menelaus?

Dei. Both alike: He merits well to have her, that doth seek her, (Not making any scruple of her souleure,) With such a hell of pain, and world of charge; And you as well to keep her, that defend her, (Not palating the taste of her dishonour,) With such a costly loss of wealth and friends: He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece; You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors: Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor more; But he as he, the heavier for a whore.⁷

Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

Dei. She's bitter to her country: Hear me, Paris,—

For every false drop in her bawdy veins A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple Of her contaminated carrion weight, A Trojan hath been slain: since she could speak, She hath not given so many good words breath, As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do, Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy: But we in silence hold this virtue well,— We'll not commend what we intend to sell.⁸ Here lies our way.

[Exeunt.]

¹ So in Macbeth:—'My voice is in my sword.'

² Lute-string made of catgut. One of the musicians in Romeo and Juliet is named Simon Catling.

³ I. e. intelligent.

⁴ I. e. conversation while the truce lasts.

⁵ He swears first by the life of his father, and then by the hand of his mother.

⁶ I. e. I bring you his meaning and his orders.

⁷ The merits of each being weighed are exactly equal; in each of the scales a harlot must be placed, since each of them has been equally attached to one.

⁸ Warburton would read:—

'We'll not commend what we intend not sell.' Not sell sounds harsh; but such elliptical expressions are not unfrequent in these plays.

SCENE II. The same. Court before the House of Pandarus. Enter TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself; the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down;

He shalt unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;

To bed, to bed: Sleep kill those pretty eyes,

And give as soft attachment to thy senses,

As infants' sleep of all thought!

Cres. Good morrow, then.

Tro. 'Pr'ythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you weary of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day, Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ribald¹ crows, And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer, I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights²

As tediously as hell; but flies the grasps of love, With wings more momentary-swift than thought. You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. 'Pr'ythee, tarry;—

You men will never tarry.—— O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off, And then you would have tarried. Hark! there's one up.

Pan. [Within.] What, are all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

*Enter PANDARUS.*³

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:

I shall have such a life,——

Pan. How now, how now? how go maiden-heads?

—Here, you maid! where's my cousin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!

You bring me to do, and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what: what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; beshrew your heart! you'll ne'er be good,

Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchia⁴—hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him!

Cres. Did I not tell you?—'would he were knock'd o' the head!—

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—

My lord, come you again into my chamber:

You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no such thing.—

How earnestly they knock!—pray you, come in; I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exit TROILUS and CRESSIDA.]

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now? what's the matter?

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Æneas? By my troth, I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Æne. Is not Prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Æne. Come, he is here, my lord, do not deny him; It doth import him much, to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know, I'll be sworn:—For my own part, I came in late: What should he do here?

Æne. Who!—nay, then.—Come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are 'ware: you'll be so true to him, to be false to him: Do not you know of him? yet go fetch him hither; go.

As PANDARUS is going out, enter TROILUS.

Tro. How now? what's the matter?

Æne. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,

My matter is so rash: 'Tis at hand Paris your brother, and Deiphobus, The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith, Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour, We must give up to Diomedes' hand The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Æne. By Priam, and the general state of Troy: They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!

I will go meet them: and, my lord Æneas,

We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Æne. Good, good, my lord; the secrets of nature

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exit TROILUS and ÆNEAS.]

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got, but lost? The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad. A plague upon Antenor, I would they had broke's neck!

Enter CRESSIDA.

Cres. How now? What is the matter? Who was here?

Pan. Ah, ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord gone?

Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. 'Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?

Pan. 'Pr'ythee, get thee in; 'Would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew, thou would'st be his death:—O poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you on my knees, I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone: thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus; 'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane: he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father; I know no touch⁵ of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me,

As the sweet Troilus.—O you gods divine!

Make Cressid's name the very crown⁶ of falsehood, If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,

Do to this body what extremes you can;

But the strong base and building of my love

Is as the very centre of the earth,

Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep;—

Pan. Do, do.

Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks,

Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy

[Exit CRESSIDA.]

1 i. e. 'the roguish or thievish crows.' Ribaldry signified roguery, naughtiness, or loose conduct of any kind, among our ancestors. It may, however, be used in the sense of obscene.

2 i. e. venefici, those who use nocturnal sorcery.

3 The hint for the following scene appears to have been suggested by Chaucer. Troilus and Cressida, b. iii. v. 1661.

4 Capocchia, an Italian word for fool

5 i. e. hasty or abrupt. So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'It is too rash, too unadvic'd, too sudden

'Too like the lightning.'

6 So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'And mock our eyes with air.'

7 Sense or feeling of relationship. So in Macbeth:—

'He wants the natural touch.'

8 i. e. the very height. So in Cymbeline:—

'My supreme crown of grief.'

SCENE III. The same. Before Pandarus' House.
Enter PARIS, TROILUS, AENEAS, DRIPPOSUS,
ANTENOR, and DIOMEDES.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour prefix'd
 Of her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon;—Good my brother Troilus,
 Tell you the lady what she is to do,
 And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk in to her house;
 I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:
 And so his hand when I deliver her,
 Think it an altar; and thy brother Troilus
 A priest, there offering to it his own heart. [Exit.]
Par. I know what 'tis to love;
 And 'would, as I shall pity, I could help!—
 Please you, walk in, my lords. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Room in Pandarus' House. Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?
 The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste?
 And violenteth¹ in a sense as strong
 As that which causeth it: How can I moderate it?
 If I could temporize with my affection,
 Or brow it to a weak and colder palate,
 The like allayment could I give my grief:
 My love admits no qualifying dross:
 No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.—Ah sweet ducks!

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus! [Embracing him.] Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too: O heart,—as the goodly saying
 is,—

— O heart, O heavy heart,
 Why sigh'st thou without breaking?

where he answers again,

*Because thou canst not ease thy smart,
 By friendship, nor by speaking.*

There never was a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse; we see it, we see it.—How now, lams?

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity,
 That the blest gods—as angry with my fancy,
 More bright in zeal than the devotion which Gold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods envy?

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy, and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
 All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
 Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents
 Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows
 Even in the birth of our own labouring breath:
 We two, that with so many thousand sighs
 Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
 With the rude brevity and discharge of one.

1 i. e. broad day. It is a familiar French idiom,— C'est grand matin.

2 This verb is used by Ben Jonson in The Devil is an Ass :—

'Nor nature violenteth in both these.'

3 Consigned means sealed, from consigno, Lat.
 Thus in King Henry V. 'It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.' See Act III. Sc. 2.

4 An obscure poet (Flauman) has borrowed this thought :—

'My soul just now about to take her flight,
 Into the regions of eternal night,
 Methinks I hear some gentle spirit say,
 Be not fearful, come away!'

5 So in Macbeth.—

'That tears will drown this wind.'

6 The expression has before occurred in Act I. Sc. 2, of this play.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
 Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how:
 As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
 With distinct breath and consign'd² kisses to them,
 He fumbles up into a loose adieu;
 And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,
 Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Aen. [Within.] My lord! is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: Some say, the Genius so

Cries, Come! to him that instantly must die.⁴—

Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind,⁵ or my heart will be blown up by the root!

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Cres. I must then to the Greeks?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks?⁶

When shall we see again?

Tro. Hear me, my love: Be thou but true of
 heart,—

Cres. I true! how now? what wicked deem⁷ is this?

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
 For it is parting from us:

I speak not, be thou true, as fearing thee;

For I will throw my glove to death himself;⁸

That there's no maculation in thy heart:

But be thou true, say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation; be thou true,

And I will see thee.

Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers
 As infinite as imminent! but, I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.⁹

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,

To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true again?

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love;

The Grecian youths are full of quality;¹⁰

They're loving, well compos'd, with gifts of nature flowing,

And swelling o'er with arts and exercise;

How novelty may move, and parts with person,

Alas, a kind of godly jealousy

(Which I beseech you, call a virtuous sin)

Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain then!

In this I do not call your faith in question,

So mainly as my merit; I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high lavolt,¹¹ nor sweeten talk,

Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:

But I can tell, that in each grace of these

There lurks a still and dumb-discoursive devil,

That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.

But something may be done, that we will not

And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,

When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,

Presuming on their changeful potency.

7 Deem (a word now obsolete) signifies opinion, surmise.

8 That is, I will challenge death himself in defence of thy fidelity.

9 In Histiomastix, or the Player Whipt, a Comedy, 1610, a circumstance of a similar kind is ridiculed, in a mock interlude wherein Troilus and Cressida are the speakers. I cannot but think that it is the elder drama by Decker and Chettle, that is the object of this satirical allusion, and not Shakspeare's play, which was probably not written when Histiomastix appeared, for Queen Elizabeth is complimented under the character of Astrea in the last Act of that piece, and is spoken of as then living.

10 i. e. highly accomplished: quality, like condition, is applied to manners as well as dispositions.

11 The lavolta was a dance.

Æne. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
And bring Æneas, and the Grecian, with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:
While others fish with craft for great opinions,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine here.
Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit
Is—plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

Enter ÆNEAS, PARIS, ANTEOR, DRIPHOBUS, and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady,
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port, I'll give her to thy hand;
And by the way, possess¹ thee what she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Iion.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:
The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the zeal of my petition to thee,
In praising her:—I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-scoring o'er thy praises,
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O, be not mov'd, Prince Troilus;
Let me be privy'd by my place, and message,
To be a speaker free: when I am hence,
I'll answer to my lust:² And know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge: To her own worth
She shall be priz'd; but that you say—be't so,
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour,—no.

Tro. Come, to the port.—I tell thee, Diomed,
This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.—
Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

[Exit TROILUS, CRESSIDA, and DIOMEDES.]

[Trumpet heard.]

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning!
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault; Come, come, to field
with him.

Dei. Let us make ready straight.

Æne. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity,
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie,
On his fair worth and single chivalry. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The Grecian Camp. Lights set out.

*Enter AJAX, armed; AGAMEMNON, ACHILLES, PATROCLUS, MENELAUS, ULYSSES, NESTOR,
and others.*

Agam. Here art thou in appointment³ fresh and fair,

¹ 'The moral of my wit' is the meaning of it. Thus in the Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. Sc. 4.—'He has left me behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.'

² I. e. the gate.

³ I. e. inform.

⁴ Troilus apparently means to say, that Diomed does not use him courteously by addressing himself to Cressida, and assuring her that she shall be well treated for her own sake, and on account of her singular beauty, instead of making a direct answer to that warm request which Troilus had just made to him to 'entreat her fair.'
The subsequent words justify this interpretation:—
'I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge.'

Anticipating time with starting courage.
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant,
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my passion.
Now crack thy lungs and split thy brazen pipe:
Blow, villain, till thy spher'd bias-check¹
Outswell the colic of puff'd Aquilon:
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood;
Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.]

Ulys. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early days.
Agam. Is not yon Diomed, with Calchas' daughter?

Ulys. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the toe: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter DIOMEDES, with CRESSIDA.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulys. Yet is the kindness but particular;

'Twere better she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courteously: I'll begin.—

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady:

Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now:

For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment;

And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulys. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorn!

For which we lose our heads, to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—this, mine;
Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!

Patr. Paris, and I, kiss ever more for him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir:—Lady, by your leave.

Cres. Is kissing do you render or receive?²

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live.³

The kiss you take is better than you give;

Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an odd man; give even, or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady? every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true,
That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You flip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulys. It were no match, your nail against his horn.—

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulys. I do desire it.

Cres.

Why, beg, then.

Ulys. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis due.

Ulys. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

Dio. Lady, a word;—I'll bring you to your father. [DIOMEDES leads out CRESSIDA.]

⁵ I. e. I'll answer to my will or pleasure, according to my inclination.

⁶ I. e. preparation.

⁷ I. e. swelling out like the bias of a bowl. So in Vik-torie Coronobona, 1622:—

'—Faith, his cheek

Has a most excellent bias.

The idea is taken from the puffy cheeks of the widdows represented in the old prints and masks.

⁸ Thus Bassanio, in The Merchant of Venice, when he kisses Portia:—

'—Fair lady, by your leave,

I come by note to give and to receive.⁹

⁹ I will make such bargains as I may live by, such as may bring me profit, therefore will not take a worse kiss than I give.

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulyss. Fye, fye upon her!
There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive¹ of her body.²
O, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give a coasting welcome³ ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every fickle reader! set them down
For stutish spots of opportunity.⁴
And daughters of the game. [Trumpet within.

All. The Trojan's trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter HECTOR, armed; ÆNEAS, TROILUS, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Æne. Hail, all the state of Greece! what shall be done

To him that victory commands? Or do you purpose
A victor shall be known? will you, the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other: or shall they be divided
By any voice or order of the field?
Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Æne. He cares not, he'll obey conditions.

Achil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
The knight oppos'd.

Æne. If not Achilles, sir,

What is your name?

Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.

Æne. Therefore Achilles: But, whate'er, know
this;—

In the extremity of great and little,
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all,
The other blank as nothing.⁵ Weigh him well,
And that, which looks like pride, is courtesy.
This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:⁶
In love whereof, half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
This blended knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.⁷

Achil. A maiden battle, then?—O, I perceive you.

Re-enter DROMIO.

Agam. Here is Sir Dromio:—Go, gentle knight,
Stand by our Ajax: as you and Lord Æneas
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the uttermost,
Or else a breath: the combatants being kin,
Half stunts⁸ their strife before their strokes begin.

[AJAX and HECTOR enter the lists.

Ulyss. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?

1 Motive for part that contributes to motion. This word is employed with some singularity in Alf's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. Sc. 2:—

'As k has fated her to be my motive

And helper to a husband.'

2 One would almost think that Shakespeare had, on this occasion, been reading St. Chrysostom, who says:—
'Non loquuta es lingua, sed loquuta es gressu; non loquuta es voce, sed oculis loquuta es clarior quam voce.'
I. e. 'They say nothing with their mouths, they speak in their gait, they speak with their eyes, they speak in the carriage of their bodies.' This invective against a wanton, as well as the translation of it, is from Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Part III. Sect. II. Memb. 2, Subs. 2.

3 A coasting welcome is a conciliatory welcome: that makes silent advances before the tongue has uttered a word. So in Venus and Adonis:—

'Anon she hears them chaunt it lustily,

And all in haste she coasteth to the cry.'

4 I. e. corrupt wenches, of whose chastity every opportunity makes an easy prey.

5 'Securely done,' in the sense of the Latin securus, a negligent security arising from a contempt of the object opposed. So in the last act of the Spanish Tragedy:—

'O damned devil, how secure he is.'

6 Valour (says Æneas) is in Hector greater than valour in other men, and pride in Hector is less than pride

Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight:
Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word;
Speaking in deeds, and deedless¹¹ in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon
calm'd:

His heart and hand both open, and both free;
For what he has, he gives, what thinks, he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impair'd thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindictive than jealous love;
They call him Troilus; and on him erect
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.
Thus says Æneas; one that knows the youth
Even to his inches, and, with private soul,
Did in great Ilion thus translate¹⁴ him to me.

[Alarm. HECTOR and AJAX fight.

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;

Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there,

Ajax:

Dia. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.

Æne. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Dia. As Hector pleases.

Hec.

Why then, will I no more:—
Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain:
Were thy commixture Greek and Trojan so,
That thou could'st say—This hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood
Runs on the dexter¹⁵ cheek, and this sinister¹⁶
Bounds in my father's; By Jove multipotent, Thou should'st not bear from me a Greekish member

Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our rank feud: But the just gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
My sacred aunt,¹⁷ should by my mortal sword
Be drain'd! Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax.

I thank thee, Hector:
Thou art too gentle and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition¹⁸ earned in thy death.

Hec. Not Neoptolemus¹⁹ so mirable
(On whose bright crest flame with her loud at O yee

in other men. So that Hector is distinguished by the excellence of having pride less than other pride, and valour more than other valour.

7 Ajax and Hector were cousins-german.

8 Hence Thersites, in a former scene, called Ajax a mongrel.

9 I. e. a breathing, an exercise. See Act II. Sc. 2, note 2, p. 168.

10 Stops.

11 No boaster of his own deeds.

12 'An impair thought' is an unworthy or injurious thought. Thus in Chapman's preface to his Shield of Homer, 1598:—'Nor is it more impair to an honest and absolute man,' &c.

13 I. e. submits, yields.

14 Thus explain his character. So in Hamlet:—

'There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves
You must translate.'

15 Right.

16 Left.

17 It is remarkable that the Greeks give to the aunt, the father's sister, the title of sacred. Steevens says, this may lead us to conclude that this play was not the entire composition of Shakespeare, to whom the Grecian was probably unknown.

18 See Act I. Sc. 2.

19 By Neoptolemus Shakespeare seems to have meant Achilles: finding that the son was Pyrrhus Neoptolemus, he considered Neoptolemus as the nomen gentili-

Cries, This is he! could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Æne. There is expectance here from both the sides,

What further you will do.

Hect.

We'll answer it;¹

The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,
(As sold I have the chance,) I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

Di. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish: and great Achilles
Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to me:

And signify this loving interview

To the expecters of our Trojan part;

Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.²

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by
name;

But for Achilles, my own searching eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy;

But that's no welcome: Understand more clear,
What's past, and what's to come, is strow'd with husks

And formless ruin of oblivion;

But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,

Bids thee, with most divine integrity,³

From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious⁴ Agamemnon.

Agam. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less to you.

[To TROILUS.]

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting;—

You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hect. Whom must we answer?

Men.

The noble Menelaus.⁵

Hect. O you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!

Mock not, that I affect the untraded⁶ oath;
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove:
She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.

Hect. O, pardon; I offend.

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,
Labouring for destiny,⁷ make cruel way Through ranks of Greekish youths: and I have seen thee,

As hot as Perseus,⁸ spur thy Phrygian steed,
Despising many forfeits and subdumencs,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword 'pon the air,
Not letting it decline on the declin'd;⁹

That I have said to some my standers-by,

Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!

And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,

Men. and thought the father was likewise Achilles Neoptolemus. Or he was probably led into the error by some book of the time. By a passage in Act III. Sc. 3, it is evident that he knew Pyrrhus had not yet engaged in the siege of Troy:—

'But it must grieve young Pyrrhus, now at home,' &c.

1 i. e. answer the expectance.

2 These knights, to the amount of about two hundred thousand, (for there were no less in both armies,) Shakespeare found with all the appendages of chivalry in The Old Troy Book. Eques and armiger, rendered knight and squire, excite ideas of chivalry. Pope, in his Homer, has been liberal by his use of the jargon.

3 i. e. integrity like that of heaven.

4 It has been asserted that imperious and imperial had formerly the same signification, but so far is this from being the fact, that Bullokar carefully distinguishes them.—Imperial, royal or chief, emperor-like: im- perious, that commandeth with authority, lord-like, stately.

5 Ritson thought that this speech belonged to Æneas, and indeed it seems hardly probable that Menelaus would be made to call himself 'the noble Menelaus.'

Like an Olympian wrestling: This have I seen;

But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,

I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire,¹⁰

And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;

But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,

Never like thee: let an old man embrace thee;

And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Æne. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,

That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time:—

Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.

Nest. I would, my arms could match thee in contention,

As they contend with thee in courtesy.

Hect. I would they could.

Nest. Ha!

By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-morrow

Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time—

Ulys. I wonder now how yonder city stands,

When we have here her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I know your favour, Lord Ulysses, well.

Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,

Since first I saw yourself and Diomed

In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.

Ulys. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:

My prophecy is but half his journey yet;

For yonder walls, that perdy front your town,

Yon towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,¹¹

Must kiss their own feet.

Hect.

I must not believe you.

There they stand yet; and modestly I think,

The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost

A drop of Grecian blood: The end crowns all;

And that old common arbitrator, time,

Will one day end it.

Ulys.

So to him we leave it.

Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome:

After the general, I beseech you next

To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou!¹²

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;

I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,

And quoted¹³ joint by joint.

Is this Achilles?

Hect.

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee.

Achil.

Behold thy fill.

Hect.

Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too brief; I will the second time,

As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. O, like a book of sport thou'lt read me o'er;

But there's more in me than thou understand'st.

Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body

Shall I destroy him? whether there, there, or there?

That I may give the local wound a name;

And make distinct the very breach whereout

Hector's great spirit flew: Answer me, heavens!

6 Untraded is uncommon, unusual. So in King Richard II:—'Some way of common trade,' for some usual course, or trodden way.

7 Destiny is the viceregent of fate.

8 As the equestrian fame of Perseus is here again alluded to, it should appear that in a former simile his horse was meant for a real one, and not allegorically for a ship. See Act I. Sc. 2.

9 i. e. the fallen.

10 Laomedon.

11 Thus in Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece—

'Threatening cloud-kissing Ilion with annoy.'

Ilion, according to Shakespeare's authority, was the name of Priam's palace, 'that was one of the richest and strongest that ever was in all the world. And it was of height five hundred paces, besides the height of the towers, whereof there was great plenty, and so high that it seemed to them that saw them from farre, they raught up unto the heavens.'—Destruction of Troy.

12 Mr. Tyrwhitt thought we should read—

'I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, though?'

13 Quoted is noted, observed. The hint for this scene of altercation between Achilles and Hector is furnished by Lydgate.

Hec. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud man,

To answer such a question : Stand again :
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,
As to pronominate in nice conjecture,
Where thou wilt hit me dead ?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.
Hec. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well ;
For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there ;
But, by the forge that studded Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er.—
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag,
His insolence draws folly from my lips ;
But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I never—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee, comin ;—
And you Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till accident, or purpose, bring you to't :
You may have every day enough of Hector,
If you have stomach ;¹ the general state, I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hec. I pray you, let us see you in the field ;
We have had pelting² wars, since you refus'd
The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector ?
To-morrow, do I meet thee, fell as death ;
To-night, all friends.

Hec. Thy hand upon that match.
Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent ;

There in the full convive³ we : afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat him.—
Beat loud the tabourines,⁴ let the trumpets blow,
That this great soldier may his welcome know.

[Exeunt all but TROILUS and ULYSSES.
Tro. My Lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,
In what place of the field doth Calchas keep ?

Ulys. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus :
There Diomed looks feast with him to-night ;
Who neither looks upon the heaven, nor earth,
But gives all gaze and beat of amorous view
On the fair Cressid.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,

After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither ?

Ulys. You shall command me, sir.
As gentle tell me, of what honour was
This Cressida in Troy ? Had she no lover there
That waits her absence ?

Tro. O, sir, to such as boasting show their scars,
A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord ?
She was belov'd, she lov'd ; she is, and doth :
But, still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.

1 A stith is an anvil, a stithy a smith's shop, and hence the verb stithied is formed. See Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 2.

2 Ajax treats Achilles with contempt, and means to insinuate that he was afraid of fighting with Hector.
3 You may every day (says he) have enough of Hector, if you have the inclination ; but I believe the whole state of Greece will scarcely prevail on you to be at odds with him, to contend with him.

4 I. e. petty or paltry wars.

5 A convive is a feast. 'The sitting of friends together at a table, our ancestors have well called convivium, a banquet, because it is a living of men together.'—Hutton. The word is several times used in Helias the Knight of the Swanee, bk. i.

6 Small drums.

7 Grammar requires us to read :—

'With Greekish wine to-night I'll heat his blood,

Which, &c.

Otherwise Achilles threatens to cool the wine, instead of Hector's blood.

8 A batch is all that is baked at one time, without heating the oven afresh. So Ben Jonson in his Callicles :

'Except he were of the same meal and batch.'

Therites has already been called a cob-loaf.

9 In his answer, Therites quibbles upon the word sent.

ACT V.

SCENE I. The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent. Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,

Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.⁶—
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Therites.

Enter THERITES.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy ?
Thou crusty hatch⁷ of nature, what's the news ?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol of idiot-worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, fragment ?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now ?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, Adversity !⁸ and what need these tricks ?

Ther. Prythee be silent, boy ; I profit not by thy talk : thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet,⁹ you rogue ! what's that ?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now, the rotten diseases of the south, the guts-griping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads o' gravel i' the back, lethargies, cold palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume, sciaticas, lime kilns i' the palm, incurable bone-ach, and the rivelled foe-simple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries !

Patr. Why thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus ?

Ther. Do I curse thee ?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt ; you whoreson indistinguishable cur,¹⁰ no.

Ther. No ? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleave¹¹ silk, thou green sarcenet flap for a sore eye, thou tassell of a prodigal's purse, thou ? Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such water-flies :¹² diminutives of nature !

Patr. Out, gall !

Ther. Finch egg !

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite
From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.

Here is a letter from queen Hecuba ;
A token from her daughter, my fair love ;¹⁴

Both taxing me, and gaging me to keep
An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it :

Fall, Greeks ; fall, fame ; honour, or go, or stay,
My major vow lies here, this I'll obey.—

Come, come, Therites, help to trim my tent ;
This night in banquetting must all be spent.

Away, Patroclus.

[Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad ; but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon,—an honest fel-

9 Adversity is here used for contrariety. The reply of Therites having been studiously adverse to the drift of the question urged by Patroclus. So in Love's Labour's Lost, the Princess addressing Boyet, (who had been capriciously employing himself to perplex the dialogue,) says, 'Avaunt, perplexity !'

10 This expression is met with in Decker's Honest Whore :—'This is a male varlet, sure, my lord !' The person spoken of is Bellafronte, a harlot, who is introduced in boy's clothes. Man-mistress is a term of reproach thrown out by Dorax, in Dryden's Don Sebastian. See Professor Heyne's Seventeenth Excursus on the first book of the Æneid.

11 Patroclus reproaches Therites with deformity, with having one part crowded into another. The same idea occurs in the Second Part of King Henry IV. :—
'Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous form.'

12 See Macbeth, Act ii. Sc. 2.

13 So Hamlet, speaking of Omick :—

'Dost know this water-fly ?'

14 This is a circumstance taken from the old story-book of The Destruction of Troy.

low enough, and one that loves quails;¹ but he has not so much brain as ear-wax. And the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckolds;² a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wit larded with malice, and splices forced³ with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing: he is both ass and ox: to an ox were nothing: he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew,⁴ a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe, I would not care: but to be Menelaus,—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Therites; for I care not to be the louse of a leazar, so I were not Menelaus.—Hey-day! spirits and fires!⁵

Enter HECTOR, TROILUS, AJAX, AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, MENELAUS, and DIOMEDE, with Lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. There, where we see the lights. No, yonder 'tis;

Hec. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulys. Here comes himself to guide you.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good night.

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hec. Thanks, and good night, to the Greeks' general.

Men. Good night, my lord.

Hec. Good night, sweet lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught:⁶ Sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night.

And welcome, both to those that go, or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

[Exit AGAMEMNON and MENELAUS.

Achil. Old Nestor tarries; and you too, Diomed, keep Hector company an hour or two.

Di. I cannot, lord; I have important business, The tide whereof is now.—Good night, great Hector.

Hec. Give me your hand.

Ulys. Follow his torch, he goes To Calchas' tent; I'll keep you company.

[Aside to TROILUS.

Ther. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hec. And so good night.

[Exit DIOMEDE; ULYSSES and TROILUS following.

Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exit ACHILLES, HECTOR, AJAX, and NESTOR.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he lerts, than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth, and promises, like Brabbler the hound;⁷ but when he performs, astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious,⁸ there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon, when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to dog him; they say, he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets!⁹ [Exit

1 By quails are meant women, and probably those of a looser description. 'Caille coiffée' is a sobriquet for a harlot. Chaud comme un caille is a French proverb. The quail being remarkably salacious.

2 He calls Menelaus the transformation of Jupiter, that is, the bull, on account of his horns, which are the oblique memorial of cuckolds.

3 I. e. forced or stuffed.

4 A polecat. So in Othello:—'Tis such another fitchew, marry a perfumed one.'

5 This Therites speaks upon the first sight of the distant lights

SCENE II. The camp. Before Calchas' Tent. Enter DIOMEDES.

Di. What are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Di. Diomed.—Calchas, I think,—Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within.] She comes to you.

Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at a distance; after them THERITES.

Ulys. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter CRESSIDA.

Ther. Cressid comes forth to him!

Di. How now, my charge?

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian!—Hark! a word with you. [Whispers.

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulys. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff!¹⁰ she's noted.

Di. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember? yes.

Di. Nay, but do, then,

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulys. List!

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery!

Di. Nay, then,—

Cres. I'll tell you what:

Di. Pho! pho! come, tell a pin: You are for sworn.

Cres. In faith, I cannot; What would you have me do?

Ther. A juggling trick, to be—secretly open.

Di. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I prythee, do not hold me to mine oath;

Bid me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Di. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulys. How now, Trojan?

Cres. Diomed,—

Di. No, no, good night; I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better meet.

Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness!

Ulys. You are mor'd, prince; let us depart, I pray you,

Lost your displeasure should enlarge itself

To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulys. Now, good my lord, go off;

You flow to great destruction;¹¹ come, my lord.

Tro. I prythee, stay.

Ulys. You have not patience; come.

Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell, and all hell's torments,

I will not speak a word.

Di. And so, good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Ulys. Why, how now, my lord?

Tro. By Jove,

I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!

6 Draught is the old word for fornic. It is used in the translation of the Bible, in Holinshed, and by all old writers.

7 If a hound gives mouth, and is not upon the scent of the game, he is called a babbler or brabbler. The proverb says, 'Brabbling curs never want sore ears.'

8 Portentious, ominous.

9 That is, her key. Claf, Fr. A mark in music at the beginning of the lines of a song, &c. which indicates the pitch, and whether it is suited for a bass, treble, or tenor voice.

10 I. e. your impetuosity exposes you to imminent peril. The folio reads distraction.

Dia. Pho, pho! adieu; you palter.¹

Cres. In faith, I do not; come hither once again.

Ulys. You shake, my lord, at something; will you go?

You will break out.

Tro. She strokes his cheek!

Ulys. Come, come.

Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word: There is between my will and all offences A guard of patience—stay a little while.

Thr. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump, and potatoe finger,² tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!

Dia. But will you then?

Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.

Dia. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.]

Ulys. You have sworn patience.

Tro. Fear me not, my lord;

I will not be myself, nor have cognition

Of what I feel; I am all patience.

Re-enter CRESSIDA.

Thr. Now the pledge; now, now, now!

Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.³

Tro. O beauty! Where's thy faith?

Ulys. My lord!—

Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.

Cres. You look upon that sleeve;—Behold it well.—

He loved me—O false wench!—Give't me again.

Dia. Who was't?

Cres. No matter, now I have't again.

I will not meet with you to-morrow night:

I prythee, Diomed, visit me no more.

Thr. Now she sharpens:—Well said, whetstone.

Dia. I shall have it.

Cres. What, this?

Dia. Ay, that.

Cres. O, all you gods!—O pretty pretty pledge!

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed

Of thee, and me; and sighs, and takes my glove,

And gives memorial dainty kisses to it,

As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me;

He that takes that, must take my heart withal.

Dia. I had your heart before, this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; 'faith you shall not.

I'll give you something else.

Dia. I will have this; Whose was it?

Cres. 'Tis no matter.

Dia. Come, tell me whose it was.

Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you will.

But, now you have it, take it.

Dia. Whose was it?

Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women yonder,⁴

And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Dia. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm;

And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.

Tro. Wert thou the devil, and wor'st it on thy horn,

It should be challeng'd.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past,—And ye it is not;

I will not keep my word.

Dia. Why then, farewell;

Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.

Cres. You shall not go:—One cannot speak a word,

But it straight starts you.

Dia. I do not like this fooling.

Thr. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you, pleases me best.

Dia. What, shall I come? the hour?

Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!—Do come:—I shall be plagu'd.

Dia. Farewell till then.

Cres. Good night. I prythee, come.—
[Exit DIOMEDES.]

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;

But with my heart the other eye doth see.⁵

Ah! poor our sex! this fault in us I find,

The error of our eye directs our mind:

What error leads, must err; O then conclude,

Minds, sway'd by eyes, are full of turpitude.

[Exit CRESSIDA.]

Thr. A proof of strength, she could not publish more,⁶

Unless she said, My mind is now turn'd whore.

Ulys. All's done, my lord.

Tro. R is.

Ulys. Why stay we, then?

Tro. To make a recordation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke.

But, if I tell how these two did co-act,

Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,

An asperance so obstinately strong,

That doth invert the attest of eyes and ears;⁷

As if those organs had deceptive functions,

Created only to calumniate.

Was Cressid here?

Ulys. I cannot conjure, Trojan.

Tro. She was not, sure.

Ulys. Most sure she was.

Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of madness.

Ulys. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but now.

Tro. Let it not be believ'd for womanhood!⁸

Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage

To stubborn critics⁹—apt, without a theme,

For depravation,—to square the general sex

By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Ulys. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.

Thr. Will he swagger himself out on's own eyes?

Tro. This she? no, this is Diomed's Cressida:

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;

If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimonies,

If sanctimony be the gods' delight,

If there be rule in unity itself,¹⁰

This was not she. O madness of discourse,

That cause sets up with and against itself!

Bi-fold authority!¹¹ where reason can revolt

4 I. e. the stars which she points to.

5 The silver-shining queen he would disdain;

Her twinkling hand-maids too, by him defild,

Through Night's black bosom should not peep again.⁶

6 The characters of Cressida and Pandarus are more immediately formed from Chaucer than from Lydgate;

for though the latter mentions them both characteristically,

he does not sufficiently dwell on either to have furnished Shakespeare with many circumstances to be found in this tragedy.

6 She could not publish a stronger proof.

7 I. e. turns the very testimony of seeing and hearing against themselves.

8 For the sake of womanhood.

9 Critic has here probably the signification of cynic.

So Iago says in Othello:

'I am nothing if not critical.'

10 If it be true that one individual cannot be two distinct persons.

11 The folio reads 'By foul authority,' &c. There is

1 To palter is to equivocate, to shuffle. Thus in Macbeth:—

'That palter with us in a double sense.'

2 Luxuria is the appropriate term of the old school divines for the sin of incensiveness, which is accordingly called luxury by all our old English writers. The degrees of this sin and its partitions are enumerated by Richard Rolle, the Hermit of Hampole, in his Speculum Vitæ, MS. penes me. And Chaucer, in his Parson's Tale, makes it one of the seven deadly sins. Luxury, or lecherousness, is said to have a potatoe-finger, because that root was thought 'to strengthen the bodie, and procure bodily lust.'

3 This sleeve was given by Troilus to Cressida at their parting, and she gave him a glove in return. It was probably such a sleeve as was formerly worn at tournaments: one of which Spenser describes in his View of the State of Ireland, p. 43, ed. 1663.

Without perdition, and loss assume all reason
Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid!
Within my soul there doth commence a fight!
Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparate²
Divides more wider than the sky and earth;
And yet the spacious breadth of this division
Admits no orifice for a point, as subtle
As Ariachne's³ broken woof, to enter.
Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates;
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:
Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;
The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd;

And with another knot, five-finger-tied,⁴
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith,⁵ are bound to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd
With that which here his passion doth express?⁶

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged well
In characters as red as Mars his heart
Inflam'd with Venus: never did young man fancy⁷
With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek;—As much as I do Cressid love,
So much by weight hate I her Diomed;
That sieve is mine, that he'll bear on his helm;
Were it a casque compos'd by Vulcan's skill,
My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricano call,⁸
Constring'd in mass by the almighty sun,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword
Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his concupy.⁹

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!
Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And they'll seem glorious.

Ulyss. O, contain yourself;
Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter ENESAS.

Æne. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord:
Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;
Ajax, your guard stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince:—My courteous lord, adieu:

Farewell, revolted fair!—and, Diomed,
Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!¹⁰

Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exeunt TROILUS, ENESAS, and ULYSSES.]

Ther. 'Would, I could meet that rogue Diomed!
I would croak like a raven; I would bode, I would bode.
Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond, than he for a commodious drab.
Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion: A burning devil take them! [Exit.]

a madness in that disquisition, in which a man reasons at once for and against himself upon authority which he knows not to be valid. The words loss and perdition, in the subsequent line, are used in their common sense; but they mean the loss or perdition of reason.

1 A Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting.

2 I. e. the plighted faith of lovers. Troilus considers it inseparable, or at least that it ought never to be broken, though he has unfortunately found that it sometimes is.

3 One quarto copy reads Ariachne's; the other Ariachne's; the folio Ariachne's. It is evident Shakespeare intended to make Ariachne a word of four syllables. Our ancestors were not very exact either in writing or pronouncing proper names, even of classical origin. Steevens thinks it not improbable that the poet may have written Ariachne's broken woof, confounding the two stories in his imagination, or alluding to the clue of thread, by the assistance of which Theseus escaped from the Cretan labyrinth.

4 A knot tied by giving her hand to Diomed.

5 The image is one of the most delicate kind. 'Her o'er-eaten faith' means her truth plighted to Troilus, of which she was surfeited, and, like one who has o'er-eaten himself, had thrown off. So in Twelfth Night:—

'Their over-greedy love hath surfeited,' &c.

SCENE III. Troy. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,

To stop his ears against admonishment?

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hec. You train me to offend you; get you in:

By all the overlasting gods, I'll go.

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.¹¹

Hec. No more, I say.

Enter CASSANDRA.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister; arm'd and bloody in intent;

Consort with me in loud and dear petition.¹²

Pursue him on knees; for I have dream'd

Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night

Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O, it is true.

Hec. Ho! bid my trumpet sound!

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hec. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me swear.

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish¹³ vows;

They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd

Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O! be persuaded: Do not count it holy

To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,

For we would give much, to use violent thefts,¹⁴

And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow;

But vows to every purpose must not hold;

Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hec. Hold you still, I say;

Mine honour keeps the weather¹⁵ of my fate:

Life every man holds dear; but the dear man¹⁶

Holds honour far more precious-dear than life.—

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man? mean'st thou to fight to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit CASSANDRA.]

Hec. No, 'faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth;

I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry:

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,

And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.

Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,

I'll stand to-day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,

Which better fits a lion, than a man.¹⁷

6 'Can Troilus really feel, on this occasion, half of what he utters?' A question suitable to the calm Ulysses.

7 Love.

8 'And down the shower impetuously doth fall,

Like that which men the hurricano call.' Drayton.

9 A cant word, formed from concupiscence.

10 I. e. defend thy head with armour of more than common security. So in The History of Prince Arthur, 1634, c. civill. '—Do thou thy best, said Sir Gawaine;

therefore his thee fast that thou wert gone, and wlt thou well we shall soon come after, and breake the strongest castle that thou hast upon thy head.' It appears that a kind of close helmet was called a castle. See Titus Andronicus, Act iii. Sc. 1.

11 The hint for this dream of Andromache might be taken from Lydgate, or Chaucer's Nonne's Presses Tale, v. 15147. 'My dreame of last night will prove ominous to the day: forebode ill to it, and show that it will be a fatal day to Troy. So in the seventh scene of this act:—

—the quarrel's most ominous to us.'

12 I. e. earnest, anxious petition.

13 Foolish.

14 I. e. to use violent thefts, because we would give much. In the first line of Andromache's speech she alludes to a doctrine which Shakespeare has often enforced:—

'Do not you think you are acting virtuously by adhering to an oath, if you have sworn to do amiss.'

15 To keep the weather is to keep the wind or advantage. Entre ou deesse du vent is the French proverbial phrase.

16 The dear man is the man of worth.

17 The traditions and mores of the darker ages

Hec. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians fall, Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword, You bid them rise, and live.¹

Hec. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

Hec. How now? how now?

Tro. For the love of all the gods, Let's leave the hermit Pity with our mother; And when we have our armours buckled on, The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;² Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.³

Hec. Fye, savage, fye!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

Hec. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars Beckoning with fiery truncheon⁴ my retire; Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees, Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears;⁵ Nor yet, my brother, with your true sword drawn, Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way, But by my ruin.

Re-enter CASSANDRA, with PRIAM.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast: He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay, Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee, Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back: Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions;

Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself Am like a prophet suddenly enwrap'd, To tell thee—that this day is ominous: Therefore, come back.

Hec. Æneas is afield; And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks, Even in the faith of valour, to appear This morning to them.

Pri. Aye, but thou shalt not go. Hec. I must not break my faith.

You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir, Let me not shame respect;⁶ but give me leave To take that course by your consent and voice, Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O, Priam, yield not to him.

And. Do not, dear father.

Hec. Andromache, I am offended with you: Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit ANDROMACHE.] Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl, Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell, dear Hector.⁷ Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!

Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents! Hark how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out! How poor Andromache shrills⁸ her dolours forth! Behold! destruction,⁹ frenzy, and amazement, Like witless antics, one another meet, And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!

Tro. Away!—Away!

abounded with examples of the lion's generosity. Upon the supposition that these acts of clemency were true, Troilus reasons not improperly, that to spare against reason, by mere instinct and pity, became rather a generous beast than a wise man. We find it recorded in Pliny's Natural History, c. 16, that 'the lion alone of all wild beasts is gentle to those that humble themselves before him, and will not touch any such upon their submission, but spareth what creature soever lieth prostrate before him.' Hence Spenser's Una, attended by a lion; and Percy's lion, in Mort d'Arthur, b. xiv. c. 6.

¹ Shakespeare seems not to have studied the Homeric character of Hector; whose disposition was by no means inclined to clemency, as we learn from Andromache's speech in the 34th Iliad.

² Ruthful is careful, careful, and ruth is mercy. The words are opposed to each other.

³ Antiquity acknowledges no such sign of command as a truncheon. The spirit of the passage, however, is such as might atone for a greater impropriety.

Cas. Farewell.—Yet, soft:—Hector, I take my leave:

Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. [Exit. Hec.] You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim: Go in, and cheer the town: we'll forth, and fight, Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night.

Pri. Farewell; the Gods with safety stand about thee!

[Exeunt severally PRIAM and HECTOR. Alarums.]

Tro. They are at it; hark! Proud Diomed, believe,

I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter from you' poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whoreson ptiac, a whoreson rascally ptiac so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o' these days: And I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were curs'd,⁹ I cannot tell what to think on't.—What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart; [Tearing the Letter.]

The effect doth operate another way.—Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together. My love with words and errors still she feeds; But edifies another with her deeds.

[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE IV. Between Troy and the Grecian Camp. Alarums: Excursions. Enter THESSITES.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another. I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there, in his helm; I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, on a sleeveless errand. O' the other side, The policy of those crafty swearing rascals,¹⁰—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor; and that same dog-fox, Ulysses,—is not proved worth a blackberry:—They set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles: and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day: whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism,¹¹ and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft! here comes sleeve, and a' other.

Enter DIOMEDES, TROILUS following.

Tro. Fly not; for, shouldst thou take the river Styx,

I would swim after.

Dio. Thou dost miscall retire:

I do not fly; but advantageous care Withdrew me from the odds of multitude: Have at thee!

4 l. e. tears that continue to course each other down the face. So in As You Like It:—

—The big round tears

Course'd one another down his innocent nose.

5 l. e. disgrace the respect I owe you, by acting in opposition to your commands.

6 The interposition and clamorous sorrow of Cassandra, are copied from Lydgate.

7 So in Spenser's Epithalamium:—

'Hark how the minstrels glee to shrill aloud
Their merry music,' &c.

8 The folio reads distraction.

9 That is, under the influence of a malediction, such as mischievous beings have been supposed to pronounce upon those who offended them.

10 Theobald proposes to read 'swearing rascals;' which Mason thinks more suitable to the characters of Ulysses and Nestor than swearing.

11 To set up the authority of ignorance, and to declare that they will be governed by policy no longer.

Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian!—now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve!
[Exeunt TROILUS and DIOMEDES, fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hector's match?

Art thou of blood, and honour?

Ther. No, no:—I am a rascal; a scurvy railing knave; a very filthy rogue.

Hect. I do believe thee:—Exit.

Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me;
But a plague break thy neck, for fighting me!
What's become of the wenching rogues? I think, they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle. Yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself.
I'll seek them. [Exit.]

SCENE V. The same. Enter DIOMEDES and a Servant.

Di. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse;¹

Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;
Tell her, I have chastis'd the amorous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.

Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit Servant.]

Enter AGAMEMNON.

Agam. Renew, renew! The force Polydamas
Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner:
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,²
Upon the pashed³ corpses of the kings
Epistrophus and Cedeus: Polixenes is slain;
Amphimachus, and Thoon, deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta'en, or slain; and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary⁴
Appeals our numbers; haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles;
And bid the snail-pac'd Ajax arm for shame.—
There is a thousand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathea his horse,
And there lacks work; anon, he's there afoot,
And there they fly, or die, like scaled sculls⁵
Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath:
Here, there, and every where, he leaves and takes;
Dexterity so obeying appetite,
That what he will, he does; and does so much,
That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

Ulys. O, courage, courage, princes! great
Achilles

Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance:
Patroclus' wounds have roars'd his drowy blood,
Together with his mangled myrmidons.
That peaceless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd, come
to him,
Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And comes at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it,
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastic execution;
Engaging and redearning of himself,
With such a careless force, and forceless care,
As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
Bade him win all.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! [Exit.]
Di. Ay, there, there.
Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector?
Come, come, thou boy-queller,⁶ show thy face;
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry.
Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Another part of the Field. *Enter
AJAX.*

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

Di. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?
Ajax. What would'st thou?
Di. I would correct him.
Ajax. Were I the general, thou should'st have my office

Ere that correction:—Troilus, I say! what, Troilus!

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. O, traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face,
thou traitor,
And pay thy life thou ow'st me for my horse!

Di. Ha! art thou there?
Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.
Di. He is my prize, I will not look upon.⁷
Tro. Come both, you coggings!⁸ Greeks; have at you both. [Exeunt, fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Yes, Troilus! O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee; Ha!—Have at thee,
Hector.

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.
Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.
Be happy, that my arms are out of use:
My rest and negligence befriended thee now,

man: this beast was heery like an horse, and shone well with a bowe: this beste made the Grekes some afterde, and slew many of them with his bowe.—Destruction of Troy, by Constantine.

A more circumstantial account of this Sagittary is to be found in Lydgate.

§ 1. c. disparat should. 'A scull of fishes: examen vel agmen piscium' (Baret) was also in more ancient times written 'a scote.'

7 This remark seems to be made by Nestor, in consequence of the return of Ajax to the field, he having lately refused to cooperate or draw together with the Greeks, though at present he is rescued from the sulks fit by the loss of a friend.

§ 1. c. murderer of boys. So in King Henry IV. Part ii. Act ii. Scene 1:—

'A man-queller and a woman-queller.'

8 That is, as we should now say, I will not be a looker-on.

10 The poet had heard of Græcia mendax. Diomedes had defrauded him of his mistress, and he bestows the epithet on both, unius et culpæ. Cicero bears witness to this character of the ancient Greeks:—
'Testimonium religionem et fidem nunquam ita necesse coluit.' And again:—'Græcorum ingenia ad fallendum parata sunt.'

1 This is an idea taken from the ancient books of romantic chivalry, and even from the usage of the poet's age; as is the following one in the speech of Diomedes:
'And am her knight by proof.'

It appears from Segar's Honour, Military and Civil, folio 1602, that a person of superior birth might not be challenged by an inferior, or if challenged might refuse combat. We learn from McClure's Memoirs, p. 166, ed. 1735,
'the laird of Grange offered to fight Bethwell, who answered that he was neither earl nor lord, but a baron; and so was not his equal. The like answer made he to Tullibardine. Then my Lord Lindsay offered to fight him, which he could not well refuse; but his heart failed him, and he grew cold on the business.' These punctilios are well ridiculed in Albion's, Act iv. Sc. 7.

2 This circumstance is taken from Lydgate, as is the introduction of a bastard son of Priam under the name of Margarelon. The latter is also in the Old History of the Destruction of Troy.

3 i. e. his lance, like a weaver's beam; as Goliath's spear is described.

4 Bruised, crushed

5 'A marvellous beast that was called Sagittayre, that belynde the myrddes was an horse, and to fore a

But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit.]
Hect. Fare thee well:—
I would have been much more a fresher man,
Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother?

Re-enter TROILUS.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas; Shall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him: I'll be taken, too,
Or bring him off:—Fate, hear me what I say!
I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.]

Enter One in cumbersome Armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark:—
No? wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;¹
I'll crush² it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it:—Wilt thou not, beast, abide?
Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide. [Exit.]

SCENE VII. The same. Enter ACHILLES, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my myrmidons;
Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel:
Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath;
And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about;
In fellest manner execute your arms.
Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye!
It is decreed—Hector the great must die. [Exit.]

SCENE VIII. The same. Enter MENELAUS, and PARIS, fighting; then THESBITES.

Ther. The cuckold, and the cuckold-maker are at it: Now, bull! now, dog! 'Loo, Paris, 'loo! now my double-beaked sparrow! 'loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game:—'ware horns, ho!
[Exit] PARIS and MENELAUS.

Enter MARGARELON.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.
Ther. What art thou?
Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.
Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards:³ I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate.
One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment: Farewell, bastard.
Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exit.]

SCENE IX. Another part of the Field. Enter
HECTOR.

Hect. Most putrified core, so fair without,
Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.
Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath;
Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!
[Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.]

Enter ACHILLES and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;

1 i. e. prevail over him. So in Alps Well that Ends Well :—

'The count he wooes your daughter,
Resolves to carry her.'

2 This circumstance is also taken from Lydgate's poem, who furnished Shakspeare with the hint for the following line :—

'I am unarm'd; forego this vantage, Greek.'

3 To frush is to break or bruise. So in the Destruction of Troy :—'Saying these words, Hercules caught by the head poor Lychas—and threw him against a rocke so fiercely that he lo-frushed and all to-burst his bones, and so slew him.'

4 To execute their arms is to employ them, to put them to use. So in Love's Labour's Lost, Rosaline says to Biron :—

'Full of comparisons and wounding souls,
Which you on all estates will execute.'

5 Bastard, in ancient times, was not a disreputable appellation.

How ugly night comes breathing at his heels:
Even with the vail⁴ and dark'ning of the sun,
To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd: forego this vantage, Greek.
Achil. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek. [Hector falls.]

So, Hion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down!
Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
On, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

[A Retreat sounded.]

Hark! a retreat upon our Grecian part.
Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my
lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'er spreads the earth,

And, stickler⁵ like, the armies separates.
My half-sup'd sword, that frankly would have fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty bit, thus goes to bed.—

[Sheathes his sword.]

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail,
Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exit.]

SCENE X. The same. Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what about is that?
Nest. Peace, drums.
[Within.] Achilles!

Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!
Di. The bruit is—Hector's slain, and by Achilles.
Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be;
Great Hector was as good a man as he.

Agam. March patiently along!—Let one be sent
To pray Achilles see us at our tent!—
If in his death the gods have us befriended,
Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.
[Exit, marching.]

SCENE XI. Another part of the Field. Enter
ÆNEAS and Trojans.

Æne. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field.
Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. Hector is slain.
All. Hector?—The gods forbid!
Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail,
In beastly sort, dragg'd through the shameful field.—
Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!
Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile⁶ at Troy!
I say, at once let your brief pleasures be mercy,
And linger not our gure destructions on!

Æne. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.
Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so;

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men,
Address their dangers in. Hector is gone!
Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?

Let him, that will a screech-owl aye be call'd,
Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead:
There is a word will Priam turn to stone;
Make wells and Nibbes of the maids and wives,
Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word,

6 'The veil of the sun,' is the sinking, setting, or veiling of the sun.

7 Heywood, in his Rape of Lucrece, 1636, gives the same account of Achilles everpowering Hector by numbers. In Lydgate and the old story book the same account is given of the death of Troilus. Lydgate, following Guido of Colonna, who in the grosser manner has violated all the characters drawn by Homer, reprehends
the Grecian post as the original offender.

8 Sticklers were persons who attended upon combatants in trials of skill, to part them when they had fought enough, and, doubtless, to see fair play. They were probably so called from the stick or wand which they carried in their hands. The name is still given to the arbitrators at wrestling matches in the west country.

9 Hammer and Warburton read :—
— emits at Troy ;

which, it must be confessed, is more in correspondence with the rest of Troilus's wish.

Scare Troy out of itself. But, march, away :
Hector is dead ; there is no more to say.
Stay yet ;—You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pight ! upon our Phrygian plains,
Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
I'll through and through you !—And thou, greatsiz'd coward !

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates ;
I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,
That mouldeth goblins swift as frenzy thoughts.—
Strike a free march to Troy !—with comfort go :
Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

[Exeunt AENEAS and Trojans.]

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. But hear you, hear you !

Tro. Hence, broker ! lackey ! ignomy and shame
Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name !

[Exit TROILUS.]

Pan. A goodly med'cine for my aching bones !—
O, world ! world ! world ! this is the poor agent despised ! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a' work, and how ill requited ! Why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed ? what verse for it ? what instance for it ?—
Let me see :—

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey, and his sting :
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail.—

1 Pitched, fixed.

2 Broker anciently signified a bawd of either sex.
So in King John :—

This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word, &c.

3 Ignominy.

4 Canvass hangings for rooms, painted with emblems and mottoes.

5 See King Henry VI. Part I. Act. I. Sc. 2.

6 See Measure for Measure, Act I, Sc. 2.

* It should, however, be remembered that Thersites had been long in possession of the stage in an Interlude bearing his name.

* The first seven books of Chapman's Homer were published in 1596, and again in 1598, twelve books not long afterward, and the whole 24 books at latest in 1611.

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.*

As many as be here of pander's hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall :
Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,
Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
Brethren, and sisters, of the hold-door trade,
Some two months hence my will shall here be made :
It should be now, but that my fear is this,—
Some galled goose of Winchester* would hiss :
Till then I'll sweat,* and seek about for cases
And, at that time, bequeath you my diseases.

[Exit.]

THIS play is more correctly written than most of Shakespeare's compositions, but it is not one of those in which either the extent of his views or elevation of his fancy is fully displayed. As the story abounded with materials, he has exerted little invention ; but he has diversified his characters with great variety, and preserved them with great exactness. His vicious characters disgust, but cannot corrupt, for both Cressida and Pandar are detested and condemned. The comic characters seem to have been the favourites of the writ-ter : they are of the superficial kind, and exhibit more of manners than nature ; but they are copiously filled and powerfully impressed. Shakespeare has in his story followed, for the greater part, the old book of Carton, which was then very popular ; but the character of Thersites, of which it makes no mention, is a proof that this play was written after Chapman had published his version of Homer.*

JOHNSON.

The classical reader may be surprised that Shakespeare, having had the means of being acquainted with the great father of poetry through the medium of Chapman's translation, should not have availed himself of such an original instead of the Troy Book ; but it should be recollected that it was his object as a writer for the stage to coincide with the feelings and prejudices of his assistance, who, believing themselves to have drawn their descent from Troy, would by no means have been pleased to be told that Achilles was a braver man than Hector. They were ready to think well of the Trojans as their ancestors, but not very anxious about knowing their history with much correctness ; and Shakespeare might have applied to worse sources of information than even Lydgate.—Boswell.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE story of the Misanthrope is told in almost every collection of the time, and particularly in two books, with which Shakespeare was intimately acquainted—
The Palace of Pleasure, and the Translation of Plu-tarch, by Sir Thomas North. The latter furnished the poet with the following hint to work upon :—'Antonius forsook the city and companie of his friends, saying that he would lead Timon's life, because he had the like wrong offered him that was offered unto Timon ; and for the unthankfulness of those he had done good unto, and whom he took to be his friends, he was angry with all men, and would trust no man.'

Mr. Strutt, the engraver, was in possession of a MS.
play on this subject, apparently written, or transcribed, about the year 1600. There is a scene in it resembling Shakespeare's banquet, given by Timon to his flatterers.
Instead of warm water he sets before them stones painted like artichokes, and afterwards beats them out of the room. He then retires to the woods, attended by his faithful steward, who (like Kent in King Lear) has disguised himself to continue his services to his master.
Timon, in the last act, is followed by his fickle mistress,
&c. after he was reported to have discovered a hidden treasure by digging. The piece itself (though it appears to be the work of an academic) is a wretched one.
The persons dramatis are as follows :—Timon ; La-chee, his faithful servant. Eutrapelus, a dissolute young man. Gelastimus, a citie boy. Phryganeus, a lying traveller. Democ, an orator. Philargurus,

a covetous churlish old man. Hermogenes, a fiddler Abyssus, a usurer. Lollio, a country clowne, Philar-gurus sonne. Stilpo, and Speusippus, two lying philosophers. Grunnio, a lean servant of Philargurus.

To this manuscript play Shakespeare was probably indebted for some parts of his plot. Here he found the faithful steward, the banquet scene, and the story of Timon's being possessed of great sums of gold, which he had dug up in the wood ; a circumstance which it is not likely he had from Lucian, there being then no translation of the dialogue that relates to that subject.

Malone imagines that Shakespeare wrote his Timon of Athens in the year 1610.

Of all the works of Shakespeare, Timon of Athens possesses most the character of a satire—a laughing satire in the picture of the parasites and flatterers, and a Juvenalian in the bitterness and the imprecations of Timon against the ingratitude of a false world. The story is treated in a very simple manner, and is decidedly divided into large masses—in the first act, the joyous life of Timon, his poble and hospitable extravagance, and the throng of every description of suitors to him ; in the second and third acts, his embarrassment, and the trial which he is thereby reduced to make of his supposed friends, who all desert him in the hour of need ;—in the fourth and fifth acts, Timon's flight to the woods, his misanthropical melancholy, and his death: The only thing which may be called an episode, is the banishment of Alcibiades, and his return by force of arms. However, they are both examples of ingratitude,—the one of a state towards its defender, and the other of private friends to their benefactor.* As the merits of the general towards his fellow-citizens suppose more strength of character than those of the generous prodigal, their respective behaviours are no less different: Timon frets himself to death; Alcibiades regains his lost dignity by violence. If the poet very properly sides with Timon against the common practice of the world, he is, on the other hand, by no means disposed to spare Timon. Timon was a fool in his generosity; he is a madman in his discontent; he is every where wanting in the wisdom which enables man in all things to observe the due measure. Although the truth of his extravagant feelings is proved by his death, and though when he digs up a treasure, he spurns at the wealth which seems to sollicit him, we yet see distinctly enough that the vanity of wishing to be singular, in both parts of the plays, had some share in his liberal self-forgiveness.

* It appears to me that Schlegel and Professor Richardson have taken a more unfavourable view of the character of Timon, than our great poet intended to convey. Timon had not only been a benefactor to his private unworthy friends, but he had rendered the state service, which ought not to have been forgotten. He himself expresses his consciousness of this when he sends one of his servants to request a thousand talents at the hands of the senators:—

‘Of whom, even to the state’s best health, I have Deserv’d this hearing.’

And Alcibiades afterwards confirms this:—

‘I have heard, and griev’d
How curs’d Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.’

Surely then he suffered as much mentally from the ingratitude of the state, as from that of his faithless friends. Shakspeare seems to have entered entirely into the feelings of bitterness, which such conduct was likely to awaken in a good and susceptible nature, and has expressed it with vehemence and force. The virtues of Timon too may be inferred from the absence of any thing which could imply dissoluteness or intemperance in his conduct: as Richardson observes, ‘He is convivial, but his enjoyment of the banquet is in the pleasure of his guests; Phrynia and Timandra are not in the train of Timon, but of Alcibiades.’ He is not so desirous of being distinguished for magnificence, as of being eminent for courteous and beneficent actions: he solicits distinction, but it is by doing good.† Johnson has remarked that the attachment of his servants in his declining fortunes, could be produced by nothing but real virtue and disinterested kindness. I cannot, therefore, think that Shakspeare meant to stigmatise the generosity of Timon as that of a fool, or that he meant his misanthropy to convey to us any notion of ‘the vanity of wishing to be singular.’

ACT I.

SCENE I. Athens. A Hall in Timon’s House.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several Doors.

Poet.

Good day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you are well.¹

Poet. I have not seen you long; how goes the world?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that’s well known:

But what particular rarity? what strange,
Which manifold record not matches?² See,

1 It would be less abrupt and more metrical to begin the play thus:—

‘Poet. Good day, sir.

‘Pain. Good Sir, I’m glad you’re well.’

2 The Poet merely means to ask if any thing extraordinary or out of the common course of things has lately happened; and is prevented from waiting for an answer by observing so many conjured by Timon’s bounty to attend.

Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power

Hath conjur’d to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both; t’other’s a jeweller.

Mer. O, ’tis a worthy lord!

Jes. Nay, that’s most fix’d.

Mer. A most incomparable man; breath’d, as it were,

To an untirable and continue goodiness:

He passes.³

Jes. I have a jewel here.

Mer. O, pray, let’s see’t: for the Lord Timon, sir?

Jes. If he will touch the estimate:⁴ But for that—

Poet. When we for recompense have prais’d the vile,

3 Breath’d is exercised, inured by constant practice, so trained as not to be wearied. To breathe a horse is to exercise him for the course: continue for continued course. He passes, i. e. exceeds or goes beyond common bounds.

4 Touch the estimate, that is, come up to the price.

5 We must here suppose the Poet busy in reciting part of his own work; and that these three lines are the introduction of the poem addressed to Timon.

*It steals the glory in that happy verse
Which aptly sings the good.*

Mer.

'Tis a good form.

[Looking at the Jewel.]

Jes. And rich : here is a water, look you.

Pain. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication

To the great lord.

Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me.
Our poetry is a gum, which oozes¹

From whence 'tis nourished : The fire i' the flint
Shows not, till it be struck ; our gentle flame
Provokes itself, and like the current, flies
Each bound it chafes.² What have you there ?

Pain. A picture, sir.—And when comes your book forth ?

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment,³ sir,
Let's see your piece.

Pain. 'Tis a good piece.

Poet. So 'tis : this comes off well⁴ and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable : How this grace
Speaks his own standing !⁵ what a mental power
This eye shoots forth ! how big imagination
Moves in this lip ! to the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.⁶

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life.
Here is a touch ; isn't good ?

Poet. I'll say of it,
It tutors nature : artificial strife⁷
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

[Enter certain Senators, and pass over.]

Pain. How this lord's follow'd !

Poet. The Senators of Athens :—Happy men !

Pain. Look, more !

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.⁸

I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man,
Whom this beneath world⁹ doth embrace and hug
With amplest entertainment : My free drift
Halts not particularly¹⁰, but moves itself
In a wide sea of wax :¹¹ no levell'd malice
Infects one comma in the course I hold ;
But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leaving no tract behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you ?

Poet. I'll unbolts¹² to you.

You see how all conditions, how all minds,
(As well of glib and slippery creatures, as Of grave and austere quality,) tender down¹³
Their services to Lord Timon : his large fortunes,
Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,

1 The old copies read :—

'Our poetry is a gumme which oozes.'

2 It is not certain whether this word is chafes or chooses in the folio. I think the former is the true reading. The poetaster means that the vein of a poet flows spontaneously, like the current of a river, and flies from each bound that chafes it in its course, as scoring all impediment, and requiring no exhortation. In Julius Cæsar we have :—

'The troubled Tiber chafing with her shores.'

3 I.e. as soon as my book has been presented to Timon.

4 This comes off well, apparently means this is cleverly done, or this piece is well executed. The phrase is used in Measure for Measure ironically.

5 How the graceful attitude of this figure proclaims that k stands firm on its centre, or gives evidence in favour of its own figure. Grace is introduced as bearing witness to propriety.

6 One might venture to supply words to such intelligible action. Such significant gesture ascertains the sentiments that should accompany it. So in Cymbeline, Act II. Sc. 4 :—

'— never saw I pictures

So likely to report themselves.'

7 I.e. the context of art with nature. This was a very common mode of expressing the excellence of a painter. Shakespeare has it again more clearly expressed in his Venus and Adonis :—

'His art with nature's workmanship at strife.'

8 'Mine salutatum totis vomit adibus undam.'

9 So in Measure for Measure we have, 'This under generation ;' and in King Richard III. the lower world.

Sobdies and properties¹⁴ to his love and tendance
All sorts of hearts ; yes, from the glass-fac'd flatterer¹⁵

To Apemantus, that few things loves better
Than to abhor himself : even he drops down
The knees before him, and returns in peace,
Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain.

I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill,
Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd : The base o' the mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
'That labour on the bosom of this sphere

To propagate their states :¹⁶ amongst them all,
Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,

One do I personate of Lord Timon's frame,
Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain.

'Tis conceiv'd to scope.¹⁷

'This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition.'

Poet.

Nay, sir, but hear me on :

All those which were his fellows but of late,
(Some better than his value,) on the moment
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance,
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,¹⁸
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
Drink the free air.¹⁹

Pain.

Ay, marry, what of these ?

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of mood,

Spurns down her late belov'd, all his dependants,
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Nor one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common :

A thousand moral paintings I can show,
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune
More pregnant than words. Yet you do well,
To show Lord Timon, that mean eyes²⁰ have seen
The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter TIMON, attended ; the Servant of VENTIDIUS talking with him.

Tim.

Imprison'd is he, say you ?

Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord : five talents is his debt ;

His means most short, his creditors' most strait :
Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up ; which failing to him,
Periods²¹ his comfort.

10 My design does not stop at any particular character.

11 An allusion to the Roman practice of writing with a style on tablets, covered with wax : a custom which also prevailed in England until about the close of the fourteenth century.

12 I.e. open, explain.

13 I.e. subjects and appropriate.

14 One who shows by reflection the looks of his patron. The poet was mistaken in the character of Apemantus ; but seeing that he paid frequent visits to Timon, he naturally concluded that he was equally courteous with his other guests.

15 I.e. to improve or promote their conditions.

16 I.e. extensively imagined, largely conceived.

17 I.e. in our art, in painting. Condition was used for profession, quality ; façon de faire.

18 Whisperings of officious servility, the incense of the worshipping parasite to the patron as a god. Gray has excellently expressed in his Elegy these sacrificial offerings to the great from the poetic tribe :—

'To heap the shrine of luxury and pride
With incense kindled at the Mænes' flame.'

19 'To drink the air,' like the haustus æthereus of Virgil is merely a poetic phrase for draw the air, or breathe. To 'drink the free air,' therefore, 'through another,' is to breathe freely at his will only, so as to depend on him for the privilege of life : not even to breathe freely without his permission.

20 I.e. inferior spectators.

21 To period is perhaps a verb of Shakespeare's coinage.

Tim. Noble Venetians! Well,
I am not of that feather, to shake off
My friend when he must need me.¹ I do know him
A gentleman that well deserves a help,
Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free him.

Ven. Serv. Your lordship ever binds him.

Tim. Command me to him; I will send his ransom;

And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me:—

'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,

But to support him after.²—Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour!³ [Exit.]

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: What of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before
thee.

Tim. Attends he here, or no?—Lucilius!

Enter LUCILIUS.

Jac. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, Lord Timon, this thy creature,

By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift;
And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost,
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I pry thee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:⁴

His honesty rewards him in itself,

It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt:
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To LUCILIUS.] Love you the maid?

Jac. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,
I call the gods to witness, I will choose
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,
If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents, on the present; in future, all.

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long;
To build his fortune, I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter:

What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.

Jac. Humbly I thank your lordship: Never may
That state or fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not ew'd to you!⁵

[Exit LUCILIUS and old Athenian.]

Post. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon;

Go not away.—What have you there, my friend?

Post. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.

The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: These pencill'd figures are Even such as they give out.⁶ I like your work
And you shall find, I like it: stay attendance
Till you hear further from me.

Post. The gods preserve you!

Tim. Well fare you, gentlemen: Give me your hand;

We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord? disprais'd?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.
If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unclaw me quite.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated
As those, which sell, would give: But you well
know,

Things of like value, differing in the owners,
Are priz'd by their masters: believe 't, dear lord,
You moud the jewel by wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd.

Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common
tongue,
Which all men speak with him.

Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be chid?

Enter APEMANTUS.⁷

Jac. We will bear, with your lordship.

Mer. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow;

When thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves honest.⁸

Tim. Why dost thou call these knaves? thou know'st them not.

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus.

Apem. Thou knowest, I do: I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.

Apem. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.

6 'Let me never henceforth consider any thing that I possess but as owed or due to you; held for your service, and at your disposal.' So Lady Macbeth says to Duncan:—

'Your servants ever

Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs in complot,
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.'

6 Pictures have no hypocrisy; they are what they profess to be.

7 To unclaw a man is to draw out the whole mass of his fortunes. To unclaw being to unwind a ball of thread.

8 Are rated according to the esteem in which their possessor is held.

9 See this character of a cynic finely drawn by Lucian, in his Auction of the Philosophers; and how well
Shakespeare has copied it.

10 'Stay for thy good morrow till I be gentle, which will happen at the same time when thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves honest.'—i. e. never.

1 Should we not read 'When he most needs me?'
2 Johnson says this thought is better expressed by Dr. Madden in his Elegy on Archbishop Bowler:—
'More than they ask'd he gave; and deem'd it mean
Only to help the poor—to beg again.'
It is said that Dr. Madden gave Johnson ten guineas for correcting this poem.

3 See note on King Richard III. Act III. Sc. 2.

4 It appears to me that a word is omitted in this line.
Perhaps we should read:—

Therefore he will be [rewarded,] Timon;
His honesty rewards him in itself,
It must not bear my daughter.

It is true that Shakespeare often uses elliptical phrases, and this has been thought to mean:—'You say the man is honest; therefore he will continue to be so, and is sure of being sufficiently rewarded by the consciousness of virtue; he does not need the additional blessing of a beautiful and accomplished wife.' But 'It must not bear my daughter,' means, 'His honesty is its own reward, it must not carry my daughter.' A similar expression occurs in Othello:—

'What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe
If he can carry her thus.'

Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.

Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus?

Apem. The best for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well, that painted it?

Apem. He wrought better, that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Fain. You are a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation; What's she, if I be a dog?

Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

Tim. An thou should'st, thou'dst anger ladies.

Apem. O, they eat lords: so they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Apem. So thou apprehend'st it: Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?

Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing,¹ which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth?

Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet?

Poet. How now, philosopher?

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd: he is so.

Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: He that loves to be flattered, is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What would'st do then, Apemantus?

Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.²—Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apem. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!

Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffic's thy god, and thy god confound thee.

Trumpets sound. Enter a Servant.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Serv. 'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty horse, all of companionship.³

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us.—[Exeunt some Attendants.]

You must needs dine with me:—Go not you hence, Till I have thank'd you;—and, when dinner's done, Show me this piece.—I am joyful of your sights.—

Enter ALCIBIADES, with his Company.

Most welcome, sir! [They salute.]

Apem. So, so; there!—

Aches contract and starve your supple joints!— That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knaves,

And all this court'sy! The strain of man's bred out into baboon and monkey.⁴

Alci. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I feed Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir: Ere we depart, we'll share a bounteous time In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Exeunt all but APEMANTUS]

Enter two Lords.

1 Lord. What time a day is't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The most accursed thou,⁵ that still omit'st it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast.

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool, to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Should have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding; make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass.

[Exit.]

1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in.

And taste Lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes

The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of gold, Is but his steward: no mood,⁶ but he repays Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him, But breeds the giver a return exceeding All use of quittance.⁷

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,

That ever govern'd man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room of State in Timon's House. Hautboys playing loud music. A great banquet served in; FLAVIUS and others attending; then enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, LUCIUS, LUCULLUS, SEMPRONIUS, and other Athenian Senators, with VENTIDIUS, and Attendants.—Then comes dropping after all, APEMANTUS, discontentedly.

Ven. Most honour'd Timon, 't hath pleas'd the gods to remember

My father's age, and call him to long peace.

He is gone happy, and has left me rich:

Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound

To your free heart, I do return those talents,

Doubled, with thanks, and service, from whose help I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. O, by no means,

Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love;

I gave it freely over; and there's none

Can truly say, he gives, if he receives:

If our betters play at that game, we must not dare

To imitate them; Faults that are rich, are fair.⁸

Ven. A noble spirit.

[They all stand ceremoniously looking on TIMON.]

1 Alluding to the proverb: Plain-dealing is a jewel, but they who use it die beggars.

2 This line is corrupt undoubtedly, and none of the emendations or substitutions that have been proposed are satisfactory. Perhaps we should read, 'That I had (now angry) wish'd to be a lord:' or, 'That I had (so angry) will to be a lord.' Malone proposed to point the passage thus, 'That I had no angry wit. To be a lord!' and explains it, 'That I had no wit [or discretion] in my anger, but was absurd enough to wish myself one of that set of men, whom I despise.' These are the best helps I can afford the reader towards a solution of this enigmatical passage, and it must be confessed they are feeble.

3 I. e. Alcibiades's companions, or such as he consorts with and sets on a level with himself.

4 Man is degenerated; his strain or lineage is worn down into a monkey.

5 It has been before observed that to depart and to part were anciently synonymous. So in King John, Act ii Sc. 2:—'Hath willingly departed with a part.'

6 Elison says we should read:—

'The more accursed thou.'

So in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

'The more degenerate and base art thou.'

7 Meed here means desert.

8 I. e. all the customary returns made in discharge of obligations.

9 'The faults of rich persons, and which contribute to the increase of riches, wear a plausible appearance, and as the world goes are thought fair; but they are faults notwithstanding.'

Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony
Was but devis'd at first, to set a gloss
On faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recounting goodness, sorry ere 'tis shown;
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.]

1 Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.
Apem. Ho, ho, confess'd it? hang'd it, have you not?

Tim. O, Apemantus! you are welcome.

Apem.

You shall not make me welcome:

I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fye, thou art a churl! you have got a humour these

Does not become a man, 'tis much to blame:—

They say, my lords, ira furor brevis est,

But yond' man's ever angry.¹

Go, let him have a table by himself;

For he does neither affect company,

Nor is he fit for it, indeed.

Apem. Let me stay at thine apperil,² Timon;

I come to observe; I give thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian;
therefore welcome: I myself would have no power: pry'thee, let my meat make thee silent.³

Apem. I scorn thy meat; 'twould choke me, for
I should

Ne'er flatter thee.—O you gods! what a number

Of men eat Timon, and he sees them not!

It grieves me, to see so many dip their meat

In one man's blood; and all the madness in,

He cheers them up too.⁴

I wonder, men dare trust themselves with men:

Methinks they should invite them without knives;

Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.

There's much example for't; the fellow, that

Sits next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges

The breath of him in a divided draught,

Is the readiest man to kill him: it has been prov'd.

If I

Were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals;

Least they should spy my windpipe's dangerous

notes:⁵

Great men should drink with harness⁶ on their throats.

Tim. My lord, in heart;⁷ and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apem.

Flow this way!

A brave fellow!—he keeps his tides well. *Timon,*⁸

Those healths will make thee, and thy state, look ill.

Here's that, which is too weak to be a sinner,

Honest water, which ne'er left man? the mire:

This, and my food, are equals; there's no odds.

Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

¹ There seems to be some allusion to a common proverbial saying of Shakespeare's time, 'Confess and be hang'd.' See Othello, Act iv. Sc. 1.

² The old copy reads 'Yond' man's very angry.'

³ Stevens and Malone dismissed apperil from the text, and inserted own peril: but Mr. Clifford has shown that the word occurs several times in Ben Jonson:—

'Sir, I will bail you at mine own apperil.'

⁴ 'I myself would have no power to make thee silent, but I wish thou wouldst let my meat stop your mouth.'

⁵ For in the sense of cause or because.

⁶ 'I grieves me to see so many feed luxuriously, or snatch their meat at the expense of one man, whose very blood (means of living) must at length be exhausted by them; and yet he propitiously encourages them to proceed in his destruction.'

⁷ It was the custom in old times for every guest to bring his own knife, which he occasionally whetted on a stone that hung behind the door. One of these whetstones was formerly to be seen in Parkinson's Museum.

It is scarcely necessary to observe that they were strangers to the use of forks.

⁸ 'The windpipe's notes' were the indications in the throat of his situation when in the act of drinking; it should be remembered that our ancestors' throats were uncovered. Perhaps, as Stevens observes, a quibble is intended on windpipe and notes.

APEMANTUS'S GRACE.

*Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man, but myself:
Grant I may never prove so fond,¹²
To trust man on his oath or bond;
Or a harlot, for her weeping;
Or a dog, that seems a sleeping;
Or a keeper, with my freedom;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em.
Amen. So fall to't:
Which men eat, and I eat root.*

[Eats and drinks.]

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus!

Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field
now.

Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies, than a dinner of friends.

Alcib. So they were bleeding now, my lord, there's no meat like them; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apem. 'Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then; that then thou might'st kill 'em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our seals, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.¹³

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: How had you been my friends else?
why have you that charitable¹⁴ title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O, you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for them: and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits: and what better or properer can we call our own, than the riches of our friends? O, what a precious comfort 'tis to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes! O joy, e'en made away ere it can be born!¹⁵ Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks: to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apem. Thou weepst to make them drink, Timon.

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes,

And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up.

Apem. Ho, ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.

Apem. Much!¹⁶ [Trumpet sounded.]

Tim. What means that tramp?—How now?

⁹ I. e. armour.

¹⁰ 'My lord's health in sincerity.' So in Chaucer's
Knightes Tale:—

'And was all his in chere, as his in herte.'

¹¹ This speech, except the concluding couplet, is printed as prose in the old copy, nor could it be exhibited as verse without transposing the word Timon, which follows look ill, to its present place. I think with Malone that many of the speeches in this play, which are now exhibited in a loose and imperfect kind of metre, were intended by Shakespeare for prose, in which form they are exhibited in the old copy.

¹² Foolish.

¹³ I. e. arrived at the perfection of happiness.

¹⁴ 'Why are you distinguished from thousands by that title of endearment, was there not a particular connection and intercourse of tenderness between you and me?'
Thus Milton:—

'Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother.'

¹⁵ 'O joy! e'en made away [I. e. destroyed, turned to tears] ere it can be born.' So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumphs die.'

¹⁶ Much! was a common ironical expression of doubt or suspicion.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? what are their wills?

Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter CUPID.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all That of his bounties taste!—The five best senses Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely To gratulate thy plenteous bosom: The ear, Taste, touch, smell, all pleas'd from thy table rise; They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They are welcome all; let them have kind admittance:

Music, make their welcome.

[Exit CUPID.]

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you are belov'd.

Music. Re-enter CUPID, with a Masque of Ladies as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Apem. Hey day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way.

They dance! they are mad women.¹

Like madness is the glory of this life,

As this pomp shows to a little oil and root.²

We make ourselves fools, to disport ourselves;

And spend our flatteries, to drink those men,

Upon whose age we void it up again,

With poisonous spite, and envy. Who lives, that's not Depraved, or depraves? who dies, that bears Not one spurn to their graves of their friends' gift? I should fear, those, that dance before me now, Would one day stamp upon me: It has been done; Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table with much adoring of TIMON; and, to show their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment, Which was not half so beautiful and kind; You have added worth unto't, and lively lustre, And entertain'd me with mine own device; I am to thank you for it.

1 Lady. My lord, you take us even at the best.³

Apem. 'Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet⁴

Attends you: Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Lad. Most thankfully, my lord.

[Exeunt CUPID and Ladies.]

Tim. Flavius,—

Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet!

There is no crossing him in his humour; [Aside. Else I should tell him,—Well,—'faith, I should,

¹ Shakespeare probably borrowed this idea from the puritanical writers of his time. Thus Stubbes, in his Anatomy of Abuses, 8vo, 1583, 'Dauncers thought to be madmen.' 'And as in all feasts and pastimes dauncing is the last, so it is the extrem of all other vice.' And again, 'There were (saith Ludovicus Vives) from far countries certain men brought into our parts of the world, who when they saw men daunce, ran away marvelously afraid, crying out and thinking them mad,' &c. Perhaps the thought originated from the following passage in Cicero, Pro Murena 6, 'Nemo enim fere saluti sobrius, nisi forte insanit.'

² 'The glory of this life is like [or just such] madness, in the eye of reason, as this pomp appears when opposed to the frugal repast of a philosopher feeding on oil and roots.'

³ I. e. 'you have conceived the fairest of us,' or 'you think favourably of our performance, and make the best of it.'

When all's spent, he'd be cross'd⁵ then, as he could.

'Tis pity bounty had not eyes behind;

That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.⁶

[Exit, and returns with the Casket]

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O, my friends,

I have one word to say to you: Look, my good lord,

I must entreat you honour me so much,

As to advance⁷ this jewel; accept and wear it,

Kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gift,—

All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate

Newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav.

I beseech your honour,

Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear thee:

I prythee, let us be provided⁸

To show them entertainment.

Flav.

I scarce know how

[Aside]

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please your honour, the Lord

Lucius,

Out of his free love, hath presented to you

Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Enter a third Servant.

Be worthily entertain'd.—How now, what news?

3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; And let them be receive'd,

Not without fair reward.

Flav. [Aside.]

What will this come to?

He commands us to provide, and give

Great gifts, and all out of an empty coffer.

Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this,

To show him what a beggar his heart is,

Being of no power to make his wishes good;

His promises fly so beyond his state,

That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes

For every word; he is so kind, that he now

Pays interest for't; his land's put to their books.

Well, 'would I were gently put out of office,

Before I were forc'd out!

Happier is he that has no friend to feed,

Than such as do even enemies exceed.

I bleed inwardly for my lord.

[Exit.]

Tim.

You do yourselves

Much wrong, you bate too much of your own merits:—

Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty!

Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave

⁴ So in Romeo and Juliet:

'We have a foolish trifling supper towards.'

⁵ An equivocal is here intended, in which cross'd means have his hand crossed with money, or have money in his possession, and to be cross'd or thwarted. So in As You Like It, 'Yet I should bear no cross if I did bear you.' Many coins being marked with a cross on the reverse.

⁶ 'Tis pity bounty [i. e. profusion] has not eyes behind [to see the miseries that follow it]; that man might not become wretched for his nobleness of soul.'

⁷ I. e. prefer it, raise it to honour by wearing it. The Jeweller says to Timon in the preceding scene, 'You mend the jewel by wearing it.'

⁸ Steevens, to complete the measure, proposed as read:—

'I prythee, let us be provided straight.'

Good words the other day of a bay courser
I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it.

2 Lord. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know, no man

Can justly praise but what he does affect:
I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;
I'll tell you true. I'll call on you.

All Lords. None so welcome.

Tim. I take all and your several visitations
So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give;
Methinks I could deal' kingdoms to my friends,
And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,
Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich,
It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living
Is 'mongst the dead: and all the lands thou hast
Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, defiled land, my lord.

1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—

Tim. And so

Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endeared—

Tim. All to you.—Lights, more lights.

1 Lord. The best of happiness,

Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, Lord Timon!

Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exeunt ALCIBIADES, Lords, &c.]

Ape. What a coil's here!

Serving of becks,¹ and jutting out of bums!
I doubt whether their legs² be worth the sums
That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of dregs:
Methinks, false hearts should never have sound legs.
Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court'sies.

Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not sullen,
I'd be good to thee.

Ape. No, I'll nothing: for, if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to rail upon thee; and then thou would'st sin the faster. Thou givest so long, Timon, I fear me, thou wilt give away thyself in paper shortly: What need these feasts, pompes, and vain glories?

Tim. Nay, as you begin to rail on society once,
I am sworn, not to give regard to you. Farewell;
and come with better music. [Exit.]

Ape. So;—thou'll not hear me now;—thou shalt not then, I'll lock thy heaven³ from thee.

O, that men's ears should be
To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! [Exit.]

1 i. e. could dispense them on every side with an ungrudging distribution.

2 That is, 'all good wishes to you,' or 'all happiness attend you.'

3 A beck is a nod or salutation with the head. Steevens says that 'beck' has four distinct significations, but they will resolve themselves into two. Beck, a rivulet, or little river; and beck, a motion or sign with the head; signa capitis voluntatem ostendens. This last may be either a nod of salutation, of assent or dissent, or finally of command.

4 He plays upon the word leg, as it signifies a limb, and a bow or act of obedience.

5 Warburton explained this, 'be ruined by his securities entered into.' Dr. Farmer would read proper, i. e. I suppose, in propria persona. Steevens supports this reading by a quotation from Roy's Saure on Cardinal Wolsey:—

'—their order
Is to have nothing in proper,
But to use all thynges in commune.'

6 By his heaven he means good advice; the only thing by which he could be saved.

7 The commentators have made difficulties about this passage, which appears to me quite plain and intelligible without a comment. 'If I give my horse to Timon, it immediately foals, i. e. produces me several able horses.'

8 Sternness was the characteristic of a porter. There appeared at Kenilworth Castle, [1575] 'a porter tall of person, big of lim, and stern of countenance.' The word one, in the second line, does not refer to porter, but means a person. 'He has no stern forbidding porter at his gate to keep people out, but a person who smiles and invites them in.'

ACT II.

SCENE I. Athens. A Room in a Senator's House. Enter a Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro; and to Isidore

He owes nine thousand; besides my former sum,
Which makes it five and twenty.—Still in motion
Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not.
If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,
And give it Timon, why the dog coins gold:
If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more
Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon;
Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me⁹ straight,
And able horses: No porter at his gate;¹⁰
But rather one that smiles, and still invites
All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason
Can sound his state in safety.¹¹ Caphis, ho!
Caphis, I say!

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. Here, sir; what is your pleasure?

Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to Lord

Timon;

Importune him for my moneys; be not cease'd!¹²

With slight denial; nor then silenc'd, when—

Commend me to your master—and the cap

Plays in the right hand, thus:—but tell him, sirrah,

My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn

Out of mine own; his days and times are past,

And my reliances on his fracted dates

Have smit my credit: I love and honour him;

But must not break my back, to heal his finger:

Immediate are my needs; and my relief

Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words,

But find supply immediate. Get you gone:

Put on a most importunate aspect,

A visage of demand; for, I do fear,

When every feather sticks in his own wing,

Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,¹³

Which¹⁴ flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.

Sen. I go, sir?—take the bonds along with you,

And have the dates in compt.

Caph. I will, sir.

Sen. Go.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Hall in Timon's House. Enter FLAVIUS, with many Bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of expense,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flow of riot: Takes no account
How things go from him; nor resumes no care
Of what is to continue; Never mind
Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.¹⁵
What shall be done? He will not hear, till feel:
I must be round with him now he comes from hunting.

Fye, fye, fye, fye!

9 Johnson altered this to 'found his state in safety.' But the reading of the folio is evidently sound, which I think will bear explanation thus:—'No reason can proclaim his state in safety, or not dangerous.' So in King Henry VIII. Act v. Sc. 3:—

'Pray heaven he sound not my disgrace!'

10 Be not stayed or stopped:—

'Why should Tiberius' liberty be ceased?'

Claudius Tiberius Nero, 1607.

11 This passage has been thus explained by Roger Wilbraham, Esq. in his Glossary of words used in Cheshire:—'Gull, s. a naked gull; so are called all nestling birds in quite an unfledged state.'

12 Which for who. The pronoun relative applied to things is frequently used for the pronoun relative applied to persons, by old writers, and does not seem to have been thought a grammatical error. It is still preserved in the Lord's prayer.

13 This is elliptically expressed:—

'Never mind

Was [made] to be so unwise [in order] to be so kind.' Conversation, as Johnson observes, affords many examples of similar lax expression.

Enter CAPHIS, and the SERVANTS of ISIDORE and VARRO.

Caph. Good even,¹ Varro: What, You come for money?

Var. Serv. Is't not your business too?

Caph. It is;—And yours too, Isidore?

Isid. Serv. It is so.

Caph. 'Would we were all discharg'd!

Var. Serv. I fear it.

Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,²

My Alcibiades.—With me? What's your will?

Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.

Tim. Dues? Whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens, here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.

Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off To the succession of new days this month:

My master is awak'd by great occasion,

To call upon his own; and humbly prays you,

That with your other noble parts you'll wait,³

In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,

I pry'thee, but repair to me next morning.

Caph. Nay, good my lord,——

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.

Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my good lord,——

Isid. Serv. From Isidore;

He humbly prays your speedy payment,——

Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants,——

Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeiture, my lord, six weeks,

And past,——

Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord;

And I am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath,——

I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;

[Enter ALCIBIADES and Lords.

I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither, pray

you; [To FLAVIUS.

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd

With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds,⁴

And the detention of long-since-due debts,

Against my honour?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen,

The time is unagreeable to this business:

Your importunacy cease, till after dinner;

That I may make his lordship understand

Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends:

See them well entertain'd. [Exit TIMON.

Flav. I pray, draw near. [Exit FLAVIUS.

Enter APEMANTUS and a Fool.⁵

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus; let's have some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!

Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apem. No; 'tis to thyself.—Come away.

[To the Fool.

Isid. Serv. [To VAR. SERV.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet.

Caph. Where's the fool now?

Apem. He last ask'd the question.—Poor rogues, and usurers' men! bawds between gold and want!

All Serv. What are we, Apemantus?

Apem. Asses.

All Serv. Why?

Apem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All Serv. Gramercies, good fool: How does your mistress?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. 'Would, we could see you at Corinth.⁶

Apem. Good! gramercy.

Enter Page.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain? what do you in this wise company?—How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apem. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Pry'thee, Apemantus, read me the super- scription of these letters; I know not which is which.

Apem. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apem. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hanged. This is to Lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go: thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelp'd a dog; and thou'lt be famish'd, a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone.

[Exit Page.

Apem. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to Lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers?

All Serv. Ay; 'would they served us!

Apem. So would I, as good a trick as ever hang- man served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his ser- vant: My mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly: The reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apem. Do it, then, that we may account: these a whoremaster and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime, it appears like a lord; sometime, like a lawyer; sometime, like a philosopher, with two stones more than his artificial one.⁷ He is very often like a knight; and, gene-here lost, in which the audience were informed that the fool and the page that follows him belonged to Phrynia, Timandra, or some other courtesan; upon the know- ledge of which depends the greater part of the ensuing jocularly.

⁶ The reputation of the ladies of Corinth for gallan- try caused the term to be anciently used for a house of ill repute. The scalding, to which the fool alludes, is the curative process for a certain disease, by means of a tub, which persons affected (according to Randle Holme, Storehouse of Armory, b. iii. p. 441) 'were put into, not to boyl up to an height, but to parboyl.' In the frontispiece to the Old Latin Comedy of Cornelian- num Dolium this sweating tub is represented. It was anciently the practice to scald the feathers of poultry instead of plucking them.

⁷ Meaning the celebrated object of all alchymical re- search, the philosopher's stone, at that time much talk- ed of. Sir Thomas Smith was one of those who have

¹ Good even, or good den, was the usual salutation from noon, the moment that good morrow became improper. See Romeo and Juliet, Act II. Sc. 4.

² I. e. to hunting; in our author's time it was the custom to hunt as well after dinner as before. Thus in Tancred and Gismunda, 1592, 'He means this evening in the park to hunt.' Queen Elizabeth, during her stay at Kenilworth Castle, always hunted in the afternoon.

³ I. e. that you will behave on this occasion in a man- ner consistent with your other noble qualities.

⁴ The old copy reads:—

of debt, broken bonds.

The emendation, which was made by Malone, is well supported by corresponding passages in the poet. Thus at p. 198, ante:—

'And my reliances on his fracted dates.'

⁵ Johnson thought that a scene or passage had been rally in all shapes, that man goes up and down in, from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Per. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Flav. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much solitary as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All Serv. Aside, aside; here comes Lord Timon.

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Flav. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, and woman; sometimes, the philosopher.

[Exeunt APHEMANTUS and FLAVIUS.]

Flav. 'Pray you, walk near; I'll speak with you anon.

Tim. You make me marvel: Wherefore, ere this time,

Had you not fully laid my state before me;
That I might so have rated my expense,
As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me,
At many lectures I propos'd.

Tim. Go to:

Perchance, some single vantages you took,
When my indisposition put you back;
And that unaptness made your minister,
Thus to excuse yourself.

Flav. O my good lord!
At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you; you would throw them off,
And say, you found them in mine honesty.
When, for some trifling present, you have bid me
Return so much.¹ I have shook my head, and wept;
You, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd you
To hold your hand more close; I did endure
Not seldom, nor no slight checks; when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate,
And your great flow of debts. My dear-lov'd lord,
Though you hear now (too late!) yet now's a time,²
The greatest of your having lacks a half
To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone;
And what remains will hardly stop the mouth
Of present dues: the future comes apace:
What shall defend the interim? and at length
How goes our reckoning?³

Tim. To Lacedæmon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but a word;⁴
Were it all yours to give it in a breath,
How quickly were it gone?

Tim. You tell me true.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood,
Call me before the exactest auditors,
And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me.

considerable sums in seeking of it. Sir Richard Steele was one of the last eminent men who entertained hopes of being successful in this pursuit. His laboratory was at Poplar.

1 The construction is, 'And made that unaptness your minister.'

2 He does not mean so great a sum, but a certain sum.

3 'Though you now at last listen to my remonstrances, yet now your affairs are in such a state, that the whole of your remaining fortune will scarce pay half your debts: you are therefore wise too late.'

4 'How will you be able to subside in the time intervening between the payment of the present demands (which your whole substance will hardly satisfy) and the claim of future dues, for which you have no fund whatsoever; and, finally, on the settlement of all accounts, in what a wretched plight will you be.'

5 I. e. as the world itself may be comprised in a word, you might give it away in a breath.

6 Steevens asserted that offices here meant apartments allotted to culinary purposes, the reception of domestics, &c.; and that feeders meant servants. Malone contended that by offices was intended 'all rooms or places at which refreshments were prepared or served out;' as Steevens had explained it in Othello; and that feeders did not here mean servants. It must be confessed that the passage in Othello, 'All offices are open, and there is full liberty of feasting from this

When all our officers' have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders; when our vaults have wept
With drunken spilt of wine; when every room
Hath blas'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy;
I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,⁷
And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim.

Pr'ythee, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord!
How many prodigal bits have slaves, and peasants,
This night enrag'd! Who is not Timon's?
What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is Lord Timon's?

Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon!

Ah! when the means are gone that buy this praise,
The breath is gone whereof this praise is made:
Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers,
These flies are couch'd.

Tim.

Come, sermon me no further:

No villanous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart;
Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given.⁸
Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack,

To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart;
If I would broach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts by borrowing,
Men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use,
As I can bid thee speak.

Flav.

Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd.¹⁰

That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends: You shall perceive, how you Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends.
Within there, ho!—Flaminius, Servilius!

Enter FLAMINIUS, SERVILIUS, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord,—

Tim. I will despatch you severally.—You, to Lord Lucius,—

To Lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his Honour to-day;—You to Sempronius;
Commend me to their loves; and, I am proud, say,
That my occasions have found time to use them
Toward a supply of money: let the request
Be fifty talents.

Flam.

As you have said, my lord.

Flav. Lord Lucius, and Lord Lucullus? humph!
[Aside.]

Tim. Go you, sir, [To another Serv.] to the senators,

(Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing,) bid 'em send o' the instant
A thousand talents to me.

Flav.

I have been bold

(For that I know it the most general way,¹¹)
To them to use your signet, and your name;

present hour of five until the bell has told eleven, countenance Steevens's explanation; as does another passage, from Shirley's Opportunite, cited by Mr. Boswell:—

'Let all the offices of entertainment

Be free and open.'

The cellar and the buttery are probably meant.

7 A wasteful cock is possibly what we now call a waste pipe, a pipe which is continually running, and thereby prevents the overflow of cisterns, &c. by carrying off their superfluous water. This circumstance served to keep the idea of Timon's unceasing prodigality in the mind of the steward, while its remoteness was favourable to meditation.

8 Every reader must rejoice in this circumstance of comfort which presents itself to Timon, who, although beggared through want of prudence, consoles himself with reflection that his ruin was not brought on by the pursuit of guilty pleasures.—Steevens.

9 I. e. the contents of them. The argument of a book was 'a brief sum of the whole matter contained in it.' So in Hamlet, the king asks concerning the play:—
'Have you heard the argument? is there no offence in it?'

10 I. e. dignified, adorned, made gracious.

'And yet no day without a deed to crown it.'

King Henry VIII.

11 'The most general way,' is the most compendious to try many at a time

But they do shake their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can it be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall,¹ want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry—you are honourable,—

But yet they could have wish'd—they know not—but

Something hath been amiss—a noble nature
May catch a wrench—would all were well—'tis pity—

And so, intending² other serious matters,
After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions,
With certain half-caps,³ and cold-moving nods,
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them!—
I pr'ythee, man, look cheerly: These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd,⁴ 'tis cold, it seldom flows;
'Tis lack of kindly warmth, they are not kind;
And nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull, and heavy.—
Go to Ventidius, [To a Serv.]—'Pr'ythee, [To FLAVIUS.] be not sad,

Thou art true and honest; ingeniously I speak,
No blame belongs to thee;—[To Serv.] Ventidius lately

Buried his father; by whose death, he's stepp'd
Into a great estate: when he was poor,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends,
I clear'd him with five talents; Greet him from me;
Bid him suppose, some good necessity
Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd
With those five talents:—that had, [To FLAV.]
give it these fellows

To whom 'tis instant due. No'er speak, or think,
That Timon's fortunes 'mong his friends can sink.

Flav. I would, I could not think it; That thought is bounty's foe;

Being free⁵ itself, it thanks all others so. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Athens. A Room in Lucullus's House.

FLAMINIUS waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you, he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter LUCULLUS.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. [Aside.] One of Lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver bason and ewer to-night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectively⁶ welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—[Exit Servant.]—And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well,

Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

knows what belongs to reason: and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah.—[To the Servant, who lord's a bountiful gentleman; but thou art wise;

to me, that this is no time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidares⁹ for thee; good boy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible, the world should so much differ;

And we alive that liv'd? Fly, damned baseness,
To him that worships thee.

Lucul. Ha! Now I see, thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit LUCULLUS.]

Flam. May these add to the number that may scald thee!

SCENE II. The same. A public Place. Enter
LUCIUS, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who, the Lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

1 Stran. We know¹⁴ him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumour; now Lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fye, no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

Str. But believe you this, my lord, that, not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents;¹ nay, urged extremely for't, and showed what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

Str. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that? now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honourable man? there was very little honour showed in't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet had he mistook him,² and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied him occasion so many talents.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured lord,—

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well:—Commend me to thy honourable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent—

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord; he's ever sending: How shall I thank him, thinkest thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.³

Luc. I know, his lordship is but merry with me; He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord. If his occasion were not virtuous,⁴ I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to disfigure myself against such a good time, when I might have shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour!—Servilius, now before the gods, I am not able to do't: the more beast, I say:—I was sending to use Lord Timon myself these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done it now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship: and I hope, his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind: And tell him this from me, I cannot it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will

¹ 'So many talents,' a common colloquial phrase for an indefinite number: the stranger apparently did not know the exact sum; and yet some editors have artfully substituted 'fifty talents.'

² Lucius means to insinuate that it would have been a kind of mistake in Timon to apply to him, who had received but few favours from him in comparison to those bestowed on Lucullus.

³ Such is again the reading the old copy supplies; some modern editors have here again substituted 'fifty talents.' But this was the phraseology of the poet's age. In Julius Caesar, Lucullus says to his adversary—

'There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight.'

⁴ 'If he did not want it for a good use.'

⁵ I.e. 'by purchasing what brought me but little honour, I have lost the more honourable opportunity of supplying the wants of my friend.'

⁶ The old copy reads:—

'Is every flatterer's sport.'

The emendation 's Theobald's. I think with Malone that this speech was never intended for verse, though quoted as such in the folio

⁷ I.e. 'in respect of his fortune.' What Lucius de-you befriended me so far, as to use mine own words to him?

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I will look you out a good turn, Servilius.—

[Exit SERVILIUS]

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk, indeed; And he, that's once denied, will hardly speed.

[Exit LUCIUS]

1 Str. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2 Str. Ay, too well.

1 Str. Why this

Is the world's soul; and just of the same piece Is every flatterer's spirit.¹ Who can call him His friend, that dips in the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been this lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse; Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money Has paid his men their wages: He ne'er drinks, But Timon's silver treads upon his lip; And yet (O, see the monstrousness of man, When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!) He does deny him, in respect of his.² What charitable men afford to beggars.

2 Str. Religion groans at it.

1 Str. For mine own part, I never tasted Timon in my life, Nor came any of his bounties over me, To mark me for his friend; yet, I protest, For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue, And honourable carriage, Had his necessity made use of me, I would have put my wealth into donation,³ And the best half should have return'd to him, So much I love his heart: But, I perceive, Men must learn now with pity to dispense: For policy sits above conscience. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A PRONION in Sempronius's House. Enter SEMPRONIUS, and a Servant of Timon's.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in't? Humph! 'Bove all others?

He might have tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus; And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Whom he redeem'd from prison: All these Owe their estates unto him.

Serv.

O my lord, They have all been touch'd,⁴ and found base metal; for They have all denied him.

Sem. How! have they denied him? Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him? And does he send to me? Three? humph!⁵ It shows but little love or judgment in him.

Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians,

Thrive,⁶ give him over; Must I take the cure upon me?

He has much disgrac'd me in't; I am angry at him, nies to Timon is in proportion to his fortune less than the usual alms given by good men to beggars.

⁸ The commentators have made difficulties about this passage, of which the meaning appears to be:—Had he applied to me, I would have put my wealth into the form of a gift, and have sent him the best half of it. The Stranger could not mean that he would have treated his wealth as a present originally received from Timon, because he expressly declares that he never tasted his bounties.

⁹ Alluding to the trial of metals by the touchstone Thus in King Richard III.—

'O Buckingham, now do I play the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed.'

¹⁰ This speech appears to be mutilated, and therefore unmetrical; the first part of it may perhaps bear modification thus:—

'Ventidius, and Lucius, and Lucullus,

Have denied him, and does he send to me?

Three? humph!—

It shows, &c.

¹¹ I can only point out metrical dilapidations, which I profess myself unable to repair, says Stevens.

¹² Johnson proposes to read:—

'Thrice, give him over?'

but says, 'perhaps the old reading is the true; which

That might have known my place: I see no sense
for't.

But his occasions might have woo'd me first;
For, in my conscience, I was the first man
That e'er received gift from him:
And does he think so backwardly of me now,
That I'll requite it last? No: So it may prove
An argument of laughter to the rest,
And I amongst the lords be thought a fool.
I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum,
He had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake;
I had such a courage to do him good. But now return,

And with their faint reply this answer join;
Who bates mine honour, shall not know my coin.

[Exit.
Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did, when he made man politic; he cross'd himself by't: and I cannot think, but, in the end, the villanies of man will set him clear.¹ How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! takes virtuous copies to be wicked: like those that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire.²

Of such a nature is his politic love.
This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled,
Save the gods only: Now his friends are dead,
Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their wards
Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their master.
And this is all a liberal course allows;
Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house.³

[Exit.

SCENE IV. The same. A Hall in Timon's House. Enter two Servants of VARRO, and the Servant of LUCIUS, meeting TITUS, HORTENSIVS, and other Servants to TIMON's Creditors, waiting his coming out.

Var. Serv. Well met; good-morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. Lucius?

What, do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and, I think,
One business does command us all; for mine
Is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter PHILOTUS.

Luc. Serv. And sir
Philotus, too!

Phi. Good day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother.

What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phi. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Serv. Not yet.

Phi. I wonder on't; he was wont to shine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter
with him:

You must consider that a prodigal course

Steevens illustrates by the following passage in Webster's Duchess of Malfy :—

Physicians thus,
With their hands full of money, use to give o'er
Their patients.

The passage will then mean, 'His friends, like physicians, thrive by his bounty and fees, and either relinquish and forsake him, or give up his case as desperate.' It is remarked by Malone that Webster has frequently imitated Shakespeare, and that this passage may be an imitation of that in the text.

I take the sense of this passage to be, 'The devil knew not what he did when he made man politic, (i. e. crafty, or full of cunning shifts); he thwarted himself by so doing, overreached himself: and I cannot think but in the end the villanies of man will (make the devil appear in comparison innocent) set him clear, and that they will change places; man becoming the tempter, not the tempted.'

² Warburton thinks that this is levelled at the Puritans. 'Sempronius, like them, takes a virtuous semblance to be wicked, pretending that warm affection and

Is like the sun's;⁴ but not, like him, recoverable. I fear,

'The deepest winter in Lord Timon's purse;
That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet
Find little.'

Phi. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange event.
Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.
Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift,
For which you⁵ wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shows,
Timon in this should pay more than he owes:
And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels,
And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I am weary of this charge,⁶ the gods can witness:

I know, my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth,
And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.

1 Var. Serv. Yea, mine's three thousand crowns:
What's yours?

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

1 Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep: and it should seem by the same,

Your master's confidence was above mine;
Else, surely, his had equal'd.⁷

Enter FLAMINIUS.

Tit. One of Lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! sir, a word: Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship; 'pray, signify so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that: he knows, you are too diligent. [Exit FLAMINIUS.

Enter PLAVIUS in a cloak, snuffed.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward snuffed so? He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, sir?

1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.

Flav. Ay,

If money were as certain as your waiting,
'Twere sure enough. Why then prefer'd you not
Your sums and bills, when your false masters eat
Of my lord's meat? Then they could smile, and fawn
Upon his debts, and take down th' interest
Into their glutinous maws. You do yourselves but wrong,

To stir me up; let me pass quietly:
Believe't, my lord and I have made an end;
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flav. If 'twill not serve,
'Tis not so base as you; for you serve knaves.

[Exit.
1 Var. Serv. How! what does his cashier's worship matter?

generous jealousy of friendship, that is affronted if any other be applied to before it.'

³ I. e. keep within doors for fear of duns. Thus in Measure for Measure, Act iii. Sc. 3.—'You will turn good husband now, Pompey, you will keep the house.'

⁴ I. e. like him to blaze and splendor.

⁵ Solus occidere et redire possunt.—Caes.

⁶ Still perhaps alluding to the effects of winter, during which some animals are obliged to seek their scanty provision through a depth of snow.

⁷ The old copy reads, 'For which I wait for money.'

⁸ I. e. this office or employment.

⁹ The commentators thought this simple passage required a comment; and the reader will be surprised to hear that it bears several constructions. It is obvious that the meaning is, 'It should seem by the sum your master lent, his confidence in Timon was greater than that of my master, else surely my master's loan had equalled his.' If there be any obscurity, it is because the relative pronoun his does not quite clearly refer to its immediate antecedent wise. I should not have thought the passage needed explanation, had it not been the subject of contention.

2 Var. Serv. No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Ti. O, here's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.

Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair some other hour, I should derive much from it: for, take it on my soul, my lord leans wondrously to discontent. His comfortable temper has forsook him; he is much out of health, and keeps his chamber.

Lac. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not sick:

And, if it be so far beyond his health, Methinks, he should the sooner pay his debts, And make a clear way to the gods.

Ser. Good gods!

Ti. We cannot take this for an answer, sir.

Flam. [Within.] Servilius, help!—my lord! my lord!

Enter TIMON, in a rage; FLAMINIUS following.

Tim. What, are my deers oppos'd against my passage?

Have I been ever free, and must my house Be my retentive enemy, my goal? The place which I have feasted, does it now, Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Lac. Serv. Put in now, Timon.

Ti. My lord, here is my bill.

Lac. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord.

Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.

Phi. All our bills.

Tim. Knock me down with 'em: ' cleave me to the girdle.

Lac. Serv. Alas! my lord,—

Ti. Cut my heart in sunder.

Ti. Mine fifty talents.

Ti. Tell out my blood.

Lac. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Ti. Five thousand drops pays that—

What yours?—and yours?

1 Var. Serv. My lord,—

2 Var. Serv. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you!

Hor. 'Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money: these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em.

[Exeunt.]

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the slaves: Creditors!—devils.

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flav. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so:—My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord.

Tim. So stily? Go, bid all my friends again, Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all:³ I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O, my lord,

You only speak from your distracted soul; There is not so much left, to furnish out A moderate table.

Tim. Be't not in thy care; go, I charge thee; invite them all: let in the tide Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide.

[Exeunt.]

1 Timon quibbles. They present their written bills; he catches at the word, and alludes to bills or battle-axes. The word is so played upon in As You Like It.

2 The first folio reads:—

'Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius, Ullors all.'

What is meant by this strange corruption it is perhaps now vain to conjecture. Malone retains this strange word; and Steevens banters him pleasantly enough upon his pertinacious adherence to the text of the first folio SCENE V. The same. The Senate House. The Senate sitting. Enter ALCIAS, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice to it; the fault's

Bloody; 'tis necessary he should die:

Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Alci. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

1 Sen. Now, captain?

Alci. I am an humble suitor to your virtues;

For pity is the virtue of the law,

And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time, and fortune, to lie heavy

Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,

Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth

To those that, without heed, do plunge into it.

He is a man, setting his fate aside,³

Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice,

(An honour in him which buys out his fault;)

But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,

Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave⁴ his anger, ere 'twas spent,

As if he had but prov'd an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,⁵

Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:

Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling

Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,

Is valour misbegot, and came into the world

When sects and factions were newly born:

He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer

The worst that man can breathe;⁶ and make his wrongs

His casualties; wear them like his raiment, carelessly;

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,

To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evil, and enforce us kill,

What folly 'tis to hazard life for ill!

Alci. My lord,—

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;

To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alci. My lords, then, under favour, pardon me, If I speak like a captain.—

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,

And not endure all threatnings? sleep upon it,

And let the foes quietly cut their throats,

Without repugnancy? but if there be

Such valour in the bearing, what make we

Abroad? why then, women are more valiant,

That stay at home, if bearing carry it;

And th' are more captain than the lion; the felon,⁸

Loaden with irons, wiser than the judge,

If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,

As you are great, be pitifully good:

Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;⁹

But, in defence, by mercy,¹⁰ 'tis most just.

To be in anger is impiety;

But who is man, that is not angry?

Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alci. In vain! his service done

3 i. e. putting this action of his, which was predetermined by fate, out of the question.

4 The folio reads:—

'And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent.'

5 You undertake a paradox too hard.

6 i. e. utter.

7 What do we, or what have we to do in the field?—

8 The old copy reads 'fellow.' The alteration was made at Johnson's suggestion, perhaps without necessity. Fellow is a common term of contempt.

9 Gust here means rashness. We still say, 'it was done in a gust of passion.'

10 i. e. 'I call mercy herself to witness'

At Lacedæmon, and Byzantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 Sen. What's that?

Alcib. Why, I say, my lords, h'as done fair service,
And slain in fight many of your enemies:
How full of valour did he bear himself
In the last conflict, and made pteuteous wounds?

2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em, he Is a sworn rioter,¹ h'as a sin that often
Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner:
If there were no foes, that were enough alone
To overcome him: in that beastly fury
He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions: 'Tis infer'd to us,
His days are foul, and his drink dangerous.

1 Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fate! he might have died in war.
My lords, if not for any parts in him
(Though his right arm might purchase his own time,
And be in debt to none,) yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both:
And, for I know your reverend ages love
Security, I'll pawn my victories, all²
My honour to you, upon his good returns.
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receive't in valiant gore;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

1 Sen. We are for law, he dies; urge it no more,
On height of our displeasure: Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood, that spills another.

Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How?

Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.³

3 Sen. What?

Alcib. I cannot think, but your age has forgot me;
It could not else be, I should prove so base,⁴
To sue, and be denied such common grace:
My wounds ache at you.

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?
'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect;
We banish thee for ever.

Alcib. Banish me?
Banish your dotage; banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.

1 Sen. If after two days' shine, Athens contain
thee,
Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell
our spirit,

He shall be executed presently. [Exeunt Senators.]

Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough; that you may live

Only in bone, that none may look on you!
I am worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,
While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon large interest; I myself,
Rich only in large hurts;—All those, for this?
Is this the balsam, that the usuring senate
Pours into captains' wounds? ha! banishment?
It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd;
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My discontented troops, and lay for hearts.⁵
'Tis honour, with most lands to be at odds;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs, as gods. [Exit.]

1 i. e. a man who practices riot as if he had made it an oath or duty.

2 He charges them obliquely with being usurers.
Thus in a subsequent passage:—

'—banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.'

3 Remembrances is here used as a word of five syllables. In the singular Shakespeare uses k as a word of four syllables only:

'And lasting in her sad remembrance.'

Twelfth Night, Act I. Sc. 1.

4 Base for dishonoured.

5 This, says Steevens, I believe, means 'not to put ourselves into any tumour of rage, take our definitive resolution.' So in King Henry VIII. Act III. Sc. 1:—

'The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms.'

SCENE VI.—A magnificent Room in Timon's House. Music. Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter divers Lords, at several doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.

2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think, this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring,¹ when we encountered: I hope, it is not so low with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1 Lord. I should think so: He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my im-portunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?

1 Lord. A thousand pieces.

2 Lord. A thousand pieces!

1 Lord. What of you?

3 Lord. He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.

Enter TIMON, and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both:—And how fare you?

1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing, than we your lordship.

Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter;
such summer-birds are men.—Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay: feast your ears with the music awhile; if they will fare so harshly on the trumpet's sound: we shall to't presently.

1 Lord. I hope, it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you.

2 Lord. My noble lord,——

Tim. Ah, my good friend! what cheer?

[The Banquet brought in.]
2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e'en sick of shame, that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on't, sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,— Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance.²
—Come, bring in all together.

2 Lord. All covered dishes!

1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

3 Lord. Doubt not that, if money, and the season can yield it.

2 Lord. How do you? What's the news?

3 Lord. Alcibiades is banished: Hear you of it?

1 & 2 Lords. Alcibiades banished!

3 Lord. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1 Lord. How? how?

2 Lord. I pray you, upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?

3 Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.³

I think we might read with advantage:

'—And not to quell our spirit.'

i. e. not to repress or humble it.

6 To lay for hearts, is to endeavour to win the affections of the people.

7 'Upon that were my thoughts feeding or most anxiously employed.'

8 i. e. 'your good memory.' Shakespeare and his contemporaries often use the comparative for the positive or superlative. Thus in King John:—

'Nay, but make haste the better foot before.'

9 i. e. near at hand, or in prospect. So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'We have a foolish trifling banquet towards'

2 Lord. This is the old man still.

3 Lord. Will't hold? will't hold?

2 Lord. It does: but time will—and so—

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool, with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike.¹ Make not a city feast of it, to let the most cool ere we can agree upon the first place: Sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts, make yourselves praised: but reserve still to give, lest your deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another: for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the most be beloved, more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: If there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are.—The rest of your less,² O gods,—the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people,—what is comes in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends,—as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing they are welcome. Uncover, dogs, and lap.

[The dishes uncovered are full of warm water.

Some speak. What does his lordship mean?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better feast never behold, You knot of mouth-friends! smoke, and lukewarm water

Is your perfection.³ This is Timon's last; Who stuck and spangled you with flatteries, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces [Throwing water in their faces.

Your reeking villany. Live loath'd, and long, Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites, Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears, You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's flies,⁴ Cap and knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks!⁵ Of man, and beast, the infinite malady Crust you quite o'er!—What, dost thou go? Soft, take thy physic first—thou too,—and thou;—

[Throws the dishes at them, and drives them out.

Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none.—

What, all in motion? Henceforth be no feast,

Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest.

Burn, house; sink, Athens! henceforth hated be

Of Timon, man, and all humanity! [Exit.

Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords and Senators.

1 Lord. How now, my lords?⁶

2 Lord. Know you the quality of Lord Timon's fury?

3 Lord. Fish! did you see my cap?

4 Lord. I have lost my gown.

3 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and nought but humour sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat:—Did you see my jewel?

4 Lord. Did you see my cap?

2 Lord. Here 'tis.

4 Lord. Here lies my gown.

1 Lord. Let's make no stay.

2 Lord. Lord Timon's mad

3 Lord.

I feel't upon my bones.

4 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones.⁷ [Exeunt.

1 'In all places alike.' This alludes to the mode in which guests were formerly placed at table according to rank.

2 Warburton and Mason say we should read foes instead of fees, which is the reading of the old copy. I have ventured to substitute lees, a more probable word to be misprinted fees, the long f and l being easily mistaken for each other. Timon means to call the senators the lees and dregs of the city, Sordes et fæx urbis, on account of their vile propensities.

3 I. e. the highest of your excellence.

4 I. e. flies of a season. Thus before:—

— one cloud of winter showers,

These flies are couch'd.

6 Minute-jacks, are the same as jacks of the clock-house, automaton figures appended to clocks: but the

ACT IV

SCENE I. Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall, That girdlest in those wolves! Dive in the earth, And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent; Obedience fail in children! slaves, and fools, Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench, And minister in their steads! to general filths¹ Convert o' the instant, green virginity! Do't in your parents' eyes; bankrupts, hold fast; Rather than render back, out with your knives, And cut your trusters' throats! bound servants steal!

Large-handed robbers your grave masters are, And pill by law: maid, to thy master's bed; Thy mistress is o' the brothel! son of sixteen, Pluck the lin'd crutch from the old limping sire, With it beat out his brains! piety, and fear, Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth, Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood, Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries,² And yet confusion live!—Plagues, incident to men. Your potent and infectious fevers heap

On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold scitica, Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty³ Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth; That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive, And drown themselves in riot! itches, blains, Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop Be general leprosy! breath infect breath; That their society, as their friendship, may Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee, But nakedness, thou detestable town! Take thou that too, with multiplying bans!⁴ Timon will to the woods; where he shall find The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind. The gods confound (hear me, you good gods all,) The Athenians both within and out that wall! And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow To the whole race of mankind, high and low! Amen. [Exit.

SCENE II. Athens. A Room in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with two or three Servants.

1 Serv. Hear you, master steward, where's our master?

Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?

Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you? Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,

I am as poor as you.

1 Serv. Such a house broke!

So noble a master fallen! All gone! and not

One friend, to take his fortune by the arm,

And go along with him!

2 Serv. As we do turn our backs term was used for 'time serving busy bodies, who had their oar in every man's boat, or hand in every man's dish.'

6 This and the next speech is spoken by the newly-arrived lords.

7 In the old MS. play of Timon, painted stones are introduced as part of this mock banquet. It seems probable that Shakespeare was acquainted with this ancient drama. Timon has thrown nothing at his guests, but warm water and dishes.

8 Steevens explains this 'common sewers,' which is quite ludicrous, unless he meant it metaphorically. General filths means common strumpets: filthiness, and obscenity were synonymous with our ancestors.

9 I. e. contraries, whose nature it is to waste or destroy each other.

— as doth a galled rock

O'erhang and jutty his confounded base.

King Henry V.

10 Liberty here means licentiousness or libertinism.

So in the Comedy of Errors:—

'And many such like liberties of sin.'

11 I. e. accumulated curses. Multiplying for multiplied, the active participle with a passive signification.

From our companion, thrown into his grave;
So his familiars to his buried fortunes¹
Sink all away; leave their false vows with him,
Like empty purses pick'd: and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin'd house.

3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,
That see I by our faces; we are fellows still,
Serving alike in sorrow: Leak'd is our bark;
And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
Hearing the surges' threat: we must all part
Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,

The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.
Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake,
Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads, and say,
As 'twere a knell unto our master's fortunes.

We have seen better days. Let each take some;

[Giving them money.]
Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.²

[Exeunt Servants.]

O, the fierce³ wretchedness that glory brings us!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since riches point to misery and contempt?
Who'd be so mock'd with glory? or to live
But in a dream of friendship?
To have his pomp, and all what state compounds,
But only painted, like his varnish'd friends?
Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart;
Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood.⁴
When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!
Who then dares to be half so kind again?
For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men.
My dearest lord,—bless'd, to be most accur'd,
Rich, only to be wretched!—thy great fortunes
Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord!
He's stung in rage from this ungrateful seat
Of monstrous friends: nor has he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it.
I'll follow, and inquire him out:
I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The Woods. Enter Timon.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb⁵

1 'So those who were familiar to his buried fortunes, who in the most ample manner participated them, sink
all away,' &c.

2 This conceit occurs again in King Lear—
'Fairer Cordelia, thou art most rich, being poor.'
Johnson observes, that 'Nothing contributes more to the exaltation of Timon's character than the zeal and fidelity of his servants; nothing but real virtue can be honoured by domestics; nothing but impartial kindness can gain affection from dependants.'

3 Fierce here means vehement.

4 Blood is here used for passion, propensity, affection.
Malone asserts that 'blood is used for natural propensity or disposition throughout these plays;' but he has not given a single instance, while we have many passages where it can mean nothing but passion or affection.

5 That is, the moon's—this sublunary world.

6 Brother, when his fortune is enlarged, will scorn brother: such is the general depravity of mankind. Not even beings besieged with misery can bear good fortune without contemning their fellow creatures, above whom accident has elevated them.' But is here used in its exceptive sense, and signifies without.

7 This is the reading of the old copy. Steevens reads 'denied.' It has been said that there is no antecedent to which 'deny it' can be referred. I think that it clearly refers to great fortune in the preceding sentence, with which I have now connected it; by placing a colon instead of a period at nature. The construction will be,
'Raise me this beggar to great fortune, and deny it to that lord,' &c.

8 The folio of 1623 reads:—

'It is the pasture lards the brother's sides,

The want that makes him leave.'

The second folio changes leave to leave. The probable

Infest the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,—
Whose procreation, residence, and birth, Scarce is dividant,—touch them with several fortunes;

The greater scorns the lesser. Not nature,
To whom all sorcs lay siege, can bear great fortune,
But by contempt of nature:—

Raise me this beggar, and deny't that lord;

The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
The beggar nature honour.

It is the pasture lards the brother's sides,
The want that makes him lean.⁶ Who dares, who dares,

In purity of manhood stand upright,

And say, This man's a flatterer? if one be,

So are they all; for every grize¹⁰ of fortune

Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate

Ducks to the golden fool: All is oblique;

There's nothing level in our cursed natures,
But direct villany. Therefore, be abhorr'd

All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!

His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains:

Destruction flang¹¹ mankind! Earth, yield me roots!

[Digging.]

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate

With thy most operant poison! What is here?

Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold? No, gods,

I am no idle votarist.¹² Roots, you clear heavens!¹³

Thus much of this, will make black, white; foul, fair;

Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward, valiant.

Ha, you gods! why this? What this, you gods?

Why this

Will lug your priests and servants from your sides;¹⁴

Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads:¹⁵

This yellow slave

Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd,

Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves,

And give them title, knee, and approbation,

With senators on the bench: this is it,

That makes the wappen'd¹⁶ widow wed again;

She, whom the spital-house, and ulcerous sores,

Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices

To the April day again.¹⁷ Come, damned earth,

Thou common whore of mankind, that put'st odds

Among the rout of nations, I will make thee

Do thy right nature.¹⁸—[March after of.]—Ha! a drum? Thou'rt quick,

But yet I'll bury thee: Thou'lt go, strong thief,

When gossy keepers of these cannot stand:—

Nay, stay thou out for earnest. [Keeping some gold.]

meaning of the passage as it now stands is, 'Men are courted and flattered according to their riches.' It is the possessions of a man that makes sycophants, 'enlarges his fat-already pride;' if he wants wherewith to pasture his flatterers, his vanity will be starved. The poet is still thinking of the rich and poor brother he had before mentioned.

9 This man does not refer to any particular person, but to any supposed individual. So in As You Like It:

'Who can come in and say that I mean her,

When such a one as she such is her neighbour.'

10 Grize, step or degree.

11 i. e. seize, gripe.

12 No insincere or inconstant supplicant: gold will not serve me instead of roots.

13 You clear heavens, is you pure heavens. So in Lear—

'—the clearest gods, who make them honour

Of men's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee.'

14 Aristophanes, in his Plutus, makes the priest of Jupiter desert his service to live with Plutus.

15 This alludes to an old custom of drawing away the pillow from under the heads of men, in their last agonies, to accelerate their departure.

16 It is not clear what is meant by wappen'd in this passage; perhaps sworn out, debailitated. In Fletcher's

Two Noble Kinsmen, (which tradition says was written in conjunction with Shakespeare,) we have unswapp'd in a contrary sense.

17 'Restores to all the freshness and sweetness of youth.' Youth is called by the old poets the 'April' of man's life.' Young Fenton, in the Merry Wives of Windsor, 'smells April and May.'

18 i. e. lie in the earth, where nature laid thee: thou'rt quick, means thou hast life and motion in thee.

Enter ALCIBIADES, with drum and Ast. in worshipful manner; PERYPLIA and TIMANDRA.

Alcib. What art thou there?

Speak.

Tim. A boast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy heart,

For showing me again the eyes of man!

Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to thee,

That art thyself a man?

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.

For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog,

That I might love thee something.

Alcib. I know thee well; But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.

Tim. I know thee, too; and more, than that I know thee,

I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;

With man's blood paint the ground, gules:

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;

Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine

Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,

For all her cherubin look.

Per. Thy lips rot off!

Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns To thine own lips again!

Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this change?

Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give: But then renew I could not, like the moon;

There were no suns to borrow of.

Alcib. Noble Timon, What friendship may I do thee?

Tim. None, but to Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?

Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: If Thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for Thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee, For thou'rt a man!

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.

Tim. Thou saw'st them, when I had prosperity.

Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed time.

Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of harlots.

Timon. Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world

Voic'd so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timon. Yes.

Tim. Be a whore still! they love thee not, that use thee;

Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.

Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves

For tubs, and baths; bring down rose-cheeked youth To the tub-fast, and the diet.¹

Timon. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.—

I have but little gold of late, brave Timon, The want whereof doth daily make revolt

In my penurious band: I have heard, and griev'd, How curs'd Athens, mindless of thy worth,

Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states, But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them,—

1 This alludes to the old erroneous prevalent opinion, that infection communicated to another left the infecter free. 'I will not,' says Timon, 'take the rot from thy lips by kissing thee.' See the fourth satire of Donne.

2 See Act ii. Sc. 2. The diet was a customary term for the regimen prescribed in these cases. So in The Mæstive, a Collection of Epigrams:—

'She took not diet nor the sweat in season.'

3 Warburton justly observes, that this passage is 'wonderfully sublime and picturesque.' The same image occurs in King Richard II.

'Devouring penulience hangs in our air.'

4 Cutting.

5 By window-bars the poet probably means 'the pallet, gorget, or kerchief, which women put about their neck, and pin down over their paps,' sometimes called a siced, and translated Mamillare or facia pectoralis: and described as made of fine linen: from its semitransparency arose the simile of window bars. This is the best explanation I have to offer. The late Mr. Boswell thought that window was used to signify a woman's

Tim. I pry'thee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone.

Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.

Tim. How dost thou pity him, whom thou dost trouble?

I had rather be alone.

Alcib.

Here's some gold for thee.

Tim. Keep't, I cannot eat it

Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—

Tim. Warr'st thou against Athens?

Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have cause

Tim. The gods confound them all! thy conquest: and

These after, when thou hast conquer'd!

Alcib.

Why me, Timon?

Tim. That,

By killing villains, thou wast born to conquer

My country.

Put up thy gold; Go on,—here's gold,—go on;

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove

Will o'er some high-wic'd city hang his poison

In the sick air:³ Let not thy sword skip one:

Pity not honour'd age for his white beard,

He's an usurer; Strike me the counterfeit matron;

It is her habit only that is honest,

Herself's a bawd: Let not the virgin's cheek

Make soft thy trenchant sword; for these milk-

paps,

That through the window-bars⁴ bore at men's eyes,

Are not within the leaf of pity writ,

But set them down horrible traitors: Spare not the babe

Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their mercy:

Think it a bastard,⁵ whom the oracle

Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut,

And mimic it same remorse: Swear against objects;⁶

Put armour on thine ears, and on thine eyes;

Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,

Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding,

Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers:

Make large confusion; and, thy fury spent,

Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.

Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou giv'st me,

Not all thy comesel.

Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse upon thee!

Per. & Timon. Give us some gold, good Timon:

Hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade,

And to make whores, a bawd.⁸ Hold up, you sluts,

Your aprons mountant: You are not oathable.

Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear,

Into strong shudders, and to heavenly agues,

The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths

I'll trust to your conditions:⁹ Be whores still;

And he whose pious breath seeks to convert you,

Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up;

Let your close fire predominate his smoke,

And be no turncoats: Yet may your pains, six months,

Be quite contrary:¹⁰ And thatch your poor thin roofs breasts, in a passage he has cited from Weaver's Plantagenet's Tragicall Story, but it seems to me doubtful. I can hardly think the passage warrants Johnson's explanation, 'The virgin shows her bosom through the lattice of her chamber.'

8 An allusion to the tale of Edipus.

9 I. e. against objects of charity and compassion. So in Troilus and Cressida, Ulysses says:—

'For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes

To tender objects.'

8 That is, 'enough to make whores leave whoring, and a bawd leave making whores.'

9 Conditions for dispositions.

10 The meaning of this passage appears to be as Steevens explains it—'Timon had been exhorting them to follow constantly their trade of debauchery, but he interrupts himself and imprecates upon them that for half the year their pains may be quite contrary, that they may suffer such punishment as is usually inflicted upon harlots. He then continues his exhortations.'

With burdens of the dead;—some that were hang'd,¹
No matter:—wear them, betray with them: whose still;

Paint till a horse may mire upon your face:
A pox of wrinkles!

Phr. & Timon. Well, more gold;—What then?—
Believe't, that we'll do any thing for gold.

Tim. Consumptions sow
In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp shins,
And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice,
That he may never more false title plead,
Nor sound his quilllets² shrilly: hoarse the flamen,³
That scolds against the quality of flesh,
And not believes himself: down with the nose,
Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to foresee,
Smells from the general weal:⁴ make cur'd-pate
ruffians bald;

And let the unscar'd braggarts of the war
Derive some pain from you: Plague all!;
That your activity may defeat and quell
The source of all erection.—There's more gold:—
Do you damn others, and let this damn you,
And ditch graves⁵ you all!

Phr. & Timon. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon.

Tim. More whore, more mischief first; I have given you earnest.

Alcib. Strike up the drum, towards Athens. Farewell, Timon;

If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again.

Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more.

Alcib. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spek'st well of me.

Alcib. Call'st thou that harm?

Tim. Men daily find it such. Get thee away,
And take thy beegies with thee.

Alcib. We but offend him.—
Strike. [Drum beats. Exeunt ALCIBIADES, PERYNNIA, and TIMANDRA.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness,
Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou,
[Digging.

Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,⁶
Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm,⁷
With all the abhorred births below crisp⁸ heaven,
Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine;
Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate,
From forth thy plebeious bosom, one poor root!
Ensear thy fertile and conceptions womb,⁹

¹ The fashion of periwigs for women, which Stowe informs us were brought into England about the time of the massacre of Paris, seems to have been a fertile source of satire. Stubbes, in his Anatomy of Abusee, says that it was dangerous for any child to wander, as nothing was more common than for women to entice such as had fine locks into private places, and there to cut them off.

² Quilllets are subtleties, nice and frivolous distinctions. See Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 1.

³ The old copy reads 'hoar the flamen,' which Steevens suggests may mean, give him the hoary leprosy. I have not scrupled to insert Upton's reading of hoarse into the text, because I think the whole construction of the speech shows that is the word the poet wrote. To afflict him with leprosy would not prevent his scolding, to deprive him of his voice by hoarseness might.

⁴ To 'foresee his particular' is 'to provide for his private advantage, for which he leaves the right scent of public good.'

⁵ To grave is to bury. The word is now obsolete, but was familiar to our old writers. Thus Chapman in his version of the fifteenth Iliad:—

—the throats of dogs shall grave
His manless limbs.

⁶ This image (as Warburton ingeniously supposes) would almost make one imagine that Shakspeare was acquainted with some personifications of nature similar to the ancient statues of Diana Ephesia. Multumamnia. The serpent which we, from the smallness of the eye, call the blind-worm, and the Latin cacilia. So in Macbeth—

'Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting'

Let it no more bring out ingrateful man!
Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears;
Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward face
Hath to the marbled mansion all above!¹⁰
Never presented!—O, a root,—Dear thanks!
Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas;
Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts,
And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
That from it all consideration slips!

Enter APEMANTUS.

More man? Plague! plague!

Apem. I was directed hither: Men report,
Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them.

Tim. 'Tis, then, because thou dost not keep a dog
Whom I would imitate. Consumption catch thee!

Apem. This is in thee a nature but affected;
A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
From change of fortune. Why this spade? this place?

This slavish habit? and these looks of care?
Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft;
Hug their diseas'd perfumes,¹¹ and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods,

By putting on the cunning of a carper!¹²
Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive

By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee,¹³
And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,

Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strain,
And call it excellent: Thou wast told thus;

Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters, that bid welcome,

To knaves and all approachers: 'Tis most just,
That thou turn rascal; hadst thou wealth again,

Rascals should have't. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself.

Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like
thyself;

A madman so long, now a fool: What, think'st
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm? Will these moss'd trees,

That have outliv'd the eagle,¹⁴ page thy heels,
And skip when thou poust'st out? Will the cold brook,

Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? call the creatures
Whose naked natures live in all the spite

Of wreakful heaven; whose bare unhoused trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,

Answer mere nature,¹⁵—bid them then flatter thee;
O! thou shalt find——

Tim. A fool of thee: Depart.

⁸ Perhaps Shakspeare meant curled (which was synonymous with crisp) from the appearance of the clouds in the Tempest, Ariel talks of skiting 'on the cur'd clouds.' Chaucer, in his House of Fame, says:—

'Her heere that was owndie and crispe.'

⁹ a. weay and curled. Again, in the Philosopher's Satires, by Robert Anton—

'Her face as beauteous as the crisp'd morn.'

¹⁰ Thus Milton, b. iii. l. 564:—
'Through the pure marble air.'

¹¹ Now by yon marble heaven.'

¹² a. e. their diseased perfumed mistresses. Thus in Othello:—

'Tis such another fitchew; marry, a perfum'd one.'

¹³ 'Cunning of a carper' is the fastidiousness of a critic. Shame not these words, says Apemantus, by coming here to find fault. Carping monnaes was a general term for ill-natured critics. Beatrice's sarcastic railery is thus designated by Ursula in Much Ado About Nothing:—

'Why sure such carping is not commendable.'

¹⁴ 'To crook the pregnant kings of the knee.'

Hamlet

¹⁵ Apollus Senectus is a proverb. Tuberville, in his Book of Falconry, 1675, says that the great age of this bird has been ascertained from the circumstance of its always building its eyrie or nest in the same place.

¹⁶ 'And with presented nakedness offence
The winds.'

King Lear, Act ii. Sc. 2.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem.

Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Apem. I flatter not; but say, thou art a calist.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem.

To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's.

Dost please thyself in't?

Apem.

Ay.

Tim.

What! a knave too?

Apem. If thou didst put this sour cold habit on To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou Dost it enforcedly; thou'dst courtier be again, Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery Outlives uncertain pomp, is crown'd before:¹ The one is filling still, never complete; The other, at high wish: Best state, contentless, Hath a distracted and most wretched being, Worse than the worst, content. Thou should'st desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath,² that is more miserable. Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm With favour never clasp'd; but bred a dog. Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath,³ proceeded

The sweet degrees that this brief world affords To such as may the passive drudge of it⁴ Freely command, thou would'st have plung'd thyself In general riot; melted down thy youth In different beds of lust; and never learn'd The icy precepts of respect,⁵ but follow'd The sugar'd game before thee. But myself, Who had the world as my confectionary; The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men

At duty, more than I could frame employment;⁶ That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare For every storm that blows;—I, to bear this, That never knew but better, is some burden: Thy nature did commence in suifrance, time Hath made thee hard in't. Why should'st thou hate men?

They never flatter'd thee: What hast thou given? If thou wilt curse,—thy father, that poor rag, Must be thy subject: who, in spite, put stuff To some she-beggar, and compounded thee, Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!— If thou hadst not been born the worst of men, Thou hadst been a knave and flatterer.⁷

Apem. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.

1 To have wishes crowned is to have them completed, to be content. The highest fortunes, if contentless, have a wretched being, worse than that of the most abject fortune accompanied by content.

2 By his breath means by his voice, i. e. sufrage.

3 I. e. from infancy, from the first swathe-band with which a new-born infant is enveloped. 'There is in this speech a sullen haughtiness and malignant dignity, suitable at once to the lord and the man-hater. The impatience with which he bears to have his luxury reproached by one that never had luxury within his reach, is natural and graceful.' Johnson. On sic omnia. In the conception and expression of this note (says Mr. Fyfe) we trace the mind and the pen of the author; a collection of such notes by Johnson would have been indeed a commentary worthy the critic and the poet. Johnson has adduced a passage somewhat resembling this from a letter written by the unfortunate favourite of Elizabeth, the Earl of Essex, just before his execution. 'I had none but divines to call upon me, to whom I said, if my ambition could have entered into their narrow hearts, they would not have been so humble; or if my delights had been once tasted by them, they would not have been so precise.' The rest of this admirable letter is, as Johnson justly observes, 'too serious and so lean to be inserted here without irreverence.' It was very likely to make a deep impression upon Shakespeare's mind. But indeed no one can read it without emotion. Johnson copied his extract from Birch's Memoirs of Queen Elizabeth, and has erroneously printed deceivers for divines.

Apem. I, that I was

No prodigal.

Tim.

I, that I am one now;

Were all the wealth I have, shut up in thee, I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.— That the whole life of Athens were in this!

Thus would I eat it.

[Eating a root.]

Apem.

Here; I will mend thy feast.

[Offering him something.]

Tim. First mend my company, take away thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of thine.

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botch'd; If not, I would it were.

Apem. What would'st thou have to Athens?

Tim. These thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt, Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim.

The best, and truest:

For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

Apem. Where 'y'st o' nights, Timon?

Tim.

Under that's above me.

Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather, where I eat it.

Tim. 'Would poison were obedient, and knew my mind!

Apem. Where would'st thou send it?

Tim. To sance thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends: When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity;⁹ in thy rage thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate, I feed not.

Apem. Dost hate a medlar?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou hadst hated meddlers sooner, thou should'st have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know unthrift, that was beloved after his means?

Tim. Who, without those means thou talkest of, didst thou ever know beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What would'st thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

4 The old copy reads 'The passive drugges of it.' Drug or drugge, is only a variation of the orthography of drudge, as appears by Barret's Alvearie.

5 The cold admonitions of cautious prudence. Respect is regardful consideration:—

'Reason and respect

Makes livers pale, and lustihood deject.'

Troilus and Cressida.

6 I. e. more than I could frame employment for.

7 'O summer friendship,

Whose flaxing leaves that shadow'd us in our Prosperity, with the least gust drop off In the autumn of adversity.'

Massinger's Maid of Honour.

8 Dryden has quoted two verses of Virgil to show how well he could have written satires. Shakespeare has here given a specimen of the same power, by a line better beyond all bitterness, in which Timon tells Apemantus that he had not virtue enough for the vices which he condemns. Dr. Warburton explains worst by lowest, which somewhat weakens the sense, and yet leaves it sufficiently vigorous.

I have heard Mr. Burke commend the subtlety of dis crimination with which Shakespeare distinguishes the present character of Timon from that of Apemantus, whom, to vulgar eyes, he would seem to resemble Johnson.

9 Curiosity is scrupulous exactness, finical niceness Barret explains it picked diligence, Accuratus corporis cultus. 'A waiting gentlewoman should see affection or curiosity,' (i. e. affection or overniceness)—it sometimes means scrupulous anxiety, precision.

Tim. Would'st thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apen. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee; and still thou livest but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou should'st hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou would'st be kill'd by the horse: wert thou a horse, thou would'st be seized by the leopard: wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion,¹ and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remotion,² and thy defence, absence. What beast could'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation?

Apen. If thou could'st please me with speaking to me, thou might'st have hit upon it here: The commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Apen. Yonder comes a poet and a painter: The plague of company light upon thee: I will fear to catch it, and give way: When I knew not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog, than Apemantus.

Apen. Thou art the cap³ of all the fools alive.

Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon.

Apen. A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All villains, that do stand by thee, are pure.⁴

Apen. There is no leprosy but what thou speak'st.

Tim. If I name thee—

I'll beat thee,—but I should infect my hands.

Apen. I would, my tongue could rot them off!

Tim. Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!

Cholar does kill me, that thou art alive;

I swoon to see thee.

Apen. 'Would thou would'st burst.

Tim. Away, Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry, I shall lose a stone by thee. [Throws a stone at him.]

Apen. Beast!

Tim. Slave!

Apen. Toad!

Tim. Rogue, rogue, rogue!

[APEMANTUS retreats backward as going.]

I am sick of this false world; and will love nought

But even the mere necessities upon it.

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;

Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat

1 Alluding to the unicorn's being sometimes overcome from striking his horn into a tree in his furious pursuit of an enemy. See Gesner's History of Animals, and Julius Caesar. Act II. Sc. 1.

2 This seems to imply that the lion 'bears, like the Turk, no brother near the throne.'

3 Both Steevens and Malone are wrong in their explanation of remotion here; which is neither 'removing from place to place,' nor 'remoteness;' but 'removing away, removing afar off. Remotio.'

4 I. e. the top, the principal.

5 See Act III. Sc. 4.

6 Warburton remarks that the imagery here is exquisitely beautiful and sublime.

7 Touch for touchstone:—

'O Buckingham, now do I play the touch, To try if thou be'st current gold.'

8 The old copy reads, 'Enter the Banditti.'

9 The old copy reads:—

'Your greatest want is, you want much of meat.'

Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph, That death in me at others' lives may laugh. O thou sweet king-killer, and dear divorce

[Looking on the gold.] Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright defiler Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars! Thou ever young, fresh, lov'd, and delicate wooer, Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god, That soldier'st close impossibilities, And mak'st them kins! that speak'st with every tongue,

To every purpose! O thou touch⁷ of hearts! Think, thy slave man rebels; and by thy virtue Set them into confounding odds, that beasts May have the world in empire!

Apen. 'Would 'twere so;— But not till I am dead!—I'll say thou hast gold: Thou wilt be throng'd to shortly.

Tim. Throng'd to?

Apen. Ay.

Tim. Thy back, I pry thee.

Apen. Live and love thy misery!

Tim. Long live so, and so die!—I am quit.—

[Exit APEMANTUS.]

More things like men?—Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

Enter Thieves.⁸

1 Thief. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder: The mere want of gold, and the falling from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy.

2 Thief. It is noised, he hath a mass of treasure.

3 Thief. Let us make the assay upon him; if he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall'st get it?

2 Thief. True; for he bears it not about him, 'tis hid.

1 Thief. Is not this he?

Thieves. Where?

2 Thief. 'Tis his description.

3 Thief. He; I know him.

Thieves. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves?

Thieves. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women's sons.

Thieves. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of men.

Why should you want? Behold the earth hath roots;

Within this mile break forth a hundred springs:

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips:

The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush

Lays her full meat before you. Want? why want?

1 Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water,

As beasts, and birds, and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes.

You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con, That you are thieves profess'd; that you work not In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft In limited⁹ professions. Rascal thieves,

Theobald proposed 'you want much of meat,' i. e. much of what you ought to be, much of the qualities befitting you as human creatures. Steevens says, perhaps we should read:—

'Your greatest want is, you want much of me.' Your greatest want is that you expect supplies from me, of whom you can reasonably expect nothing. Your necessities are indeed desperate, when you apply to one in my situation. Dr. Farmer would point the passage differently, thus:—

'Your greatest want is, you want much. Of meat Why should you want,' &c.

10 Limited professions are allowed professions. Thus in Macbeth:—

'I'll make so bold to call, for 'tis my limited service.' I will request the reader to correct my explanation of limited in Macbeth, where I have unintentionally allowed the old glossarial explanation to stand, which interprets it appointed.

Here's gold : Go, suck the subtle blood of the grape
Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging : trust not the physician ;
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob : take wealth and lives together ;
Do villany, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery :
The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction
Robs the vast sea : the moon's an arrant thief,
And her pale fire she snatches from the sun :
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into salt tears : the earth's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stol'n
From general excrement : each thing's a thief ;
The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power
Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves : away ;
Rob one another. There's more gold : Cut throats ;
All that you meet are thieves : To Athens, go,
Break open shops ; for nothing can you steal,
But thieves do lose it : Steal not less, for this
I give you ; and gold confound you howsoever !
Amen.

[Timon retires to his Cave.]
3 Thief. He has almost charmed me from my profession, by persuading me to it.

1 Thief. 'Tis in the malice of mankind, that he thus advises us ; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2 Thief. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

1 Thief. Let us first see peace in Athens : There is no time so miserable, but a man may be true.

[Exit Thieves.]

Enter FLAVIUS.

Flav. O you gods !
Is yon despis'd and ruinous man my lord ?
Full of decay and failing ? O monument
And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd !
What an alteration of honour ' has Desperate want made !
What viler thing upon the earth, than friends,
Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends !
How rarely ' does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was wish'd ' to love his enemies :
Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo
Those that would mischief me, than those that do !
He has caught me in his eye : I will present
My honest grief unto him ; and, as my lord,
Shall serve him with my life.—My dearest master !
Timon comes forward from his Cave.

Tim. Away ! what art thou ?

Flav. Have you forgot me, sir ?

Tim. Why dost ask that ? I have forgot all men ;
Then, if thou grant'st thou'rt a man, I have forgot thee.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then

I know thee not : I ne'er had honest man
About me, I ; that all that I kept were knaves,
To serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,
Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief
For his undone lord, than mine eyes for you.

1 The moon is called the moiet star in Hamlet, and the poet in the last scene of The Tempest has shown that he was acquainted with her influence on the tides. The watery beams of the moon are spoken of in Romeo and Juliet. The sea is therefore said to resolve her into salt tears, in allusion to the flow of the tides, and perhaps of her influence upon the weather, which she is said to govern. There is an allusion to the lachrymose nature of the planet in the following apposite passage in King Richard III :—

' That I, being govern'd by the wat'ry moon,
May bring forth plenteous tears to drown the world.'
2 I. e. compost, manure.

3 ' There is no hour in a man's life so wretched but he always has it in his power to become true, I. e. honest.'

4 An alteration of honour, is an alteration of an honourable state to a state of disgrace.

5 How rarely, I. e. how admirably. So in Much Ado About Nothing, Act III. Sc. 1, 'how rarely featur'd.'

6 I. e. desired. Friends and enemies here mean those who profess friendship and profess enmity. The proverb 'Defend me from my friends, and from my

Tim. What, dost thou weep ?—Come nearer ;— then I love thee,
Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankind ; whose eyes do never give,
But thorough lust and laughter. Pity's sleeping,
Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping !

Flav. I beg of you to know me, good my lord,
To accept my grief, and, whilst this poor wealth lasts,
To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward so true, so just, and now
So comfortable ? It almost turns
My dangerous nature mild. Let me behold
Thy face.—Surely this man was born of woman.—
Forgive my general and exceptless rashness,
You perpetual-sober gods ! I do proclaim
One honest man,—mistake me not,—but one :
No more, I pray,—and he is a steward.—
How fain would I have hated all mankind,
And thou redeem'st thyself : But all, save thee,
I fell with curses.

Methodists thou art more honest now, than wise ;
For, by oppressing and betraying me,
Thou might'st have sooner got another service :
For many so arrive at second masters,
Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true
(For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,)
Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous,
If not a usurious kindness ; and as rich men deal

gifts,
Expecting in return twenty for one ?

Flav. No, my most worthy master, in whose breast
Doubt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late :
You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast :

Suspect still comes where an estate is least.
That which I show, heaven knows, is merely love,
Duty and zeal to your unmatched mind,
Care of your food and living : and, believe it,
My most honour'd lord,
For any benefit that points to me,
Either in hope, or present, I'd exchange
For this one wish, That you had power and wealth
To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 'tis so !—Thou singly honest man,

Here ; take :—the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich, and happy ;
But thus condition'd ; Thou shalt build from men ;
Hate all, curse all : show charity to none ;
But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar : give to dogs
What thou deny'st to men ; let prisons swallow them, Debts wither them to nothing : Be men like blasted woods,

And may diseases lick up their false bloods !
And so farewell, and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay,
And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hat'st
Curses, stay not ; fly whilst thou'rt bless'd and free :
Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.

[Exit severally.]

enemies I will defend myself,' is a sufficient comment on this passage.

7 To give is to yield, to give way to tears

8 The old copy reads :—

It almost turns

My dangerous nature wild.
The emendation is Warburton's. Timon's dangerous nature is his savage wildness, a species of frenzy induced by the baseness and ingratitude of the world. It would be idle to talk of turning a 'dangerous nature wild' ; the kindness and fidelity of Timon's steward was more likely to soften and compose him ; and he does indeed show himself more mild and gentle to Flavius in consequence, being moved by the tears of his affectionate servant.

9 I think with Mr. Tyrwhitt that If not has slipped in here by an error of the compositor, caught from the It not of the preceding line. Both sense and metre would be better without it.

10 I. e. away from human habitation

ACT V.

SCENE I. The same. Before Timon's Cave.—Enter Poet and Painter;¹ Timon behind, unseen.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he is so full of gold?

Pain. Certain: Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'Tis said, he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else; you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore, 'tis not amiss, we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travel for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him? Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation: only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o' the time: it opens the eyes of expectation; performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying² is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable: performance is a kind of will or testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking, what I shall say I have provided for him: It must be a personating³ of himself: a satire against the softness of prosperity; with a discovery of the infinite flatteries, that follow youth and opulency.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? Wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him:

Then do we sin against our own estate,
When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Pain. True;

When the day serves, before black-corner'd night,⁴
Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light.
Come.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's gold, That he is worship'd in a baser temple,
Than where swine feed!

'Tis thou that rigg'st the bark, and plough'st the foam;

Settlest admired reverence in a slave:

To thee be worship! and thy saints for aye

Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey!

'Fit I do meet them. [Advancing.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master.

Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest men?

Poet. Sir,

Having often of your open bounty tasted,
Hearing you were retir'd, your friends fall'n off,
Whose thankless natures—O abhorred spirits!

Not all the whips of heaven are large enough—

What! to you!

Whose starlike nobleness gave life and influence
To their whole being: I'm rapt, and cannot cover
The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude
With any size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see't the better;
You, that are honest, by being what you are,
Make them best seen, and known.

Pain. He, and myself,
Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Aye, you are honest men.

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service.

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I requite you?

Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service.

Tim. You are honest men: You have heard that I have gold:

I am sure you have: speak truth; you are honest men.

Pain. So it is said, my noble lord: but therefore Come not my friend, nor I.

Tim. Good honest men:—Thou draw'st a counterfeit!

Best in all Athens: thou art, indeed, the best;
Thou counterfeit'st at most lively.

Pain. So, so, my lord.

Tim. Even so, sir, as I say:—And for thy fiction,
[To the Poet.

Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth,

That thou art even natural in thine art.—

But, for all this, my honest natur'd friends,

I must needs say you have a little fault:
Marry, 'tis not monstrous in you; neither wish I,
You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour,
To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you, indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's no'er a one of you but trusts a knave,

That mightily deceives you.

Both. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him discomble,

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,

Keep in your bosom: yet remain assur'd,

That he's a made-up villain.⁵

Pain. I know none such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,

Rid me these villains from your companies:

Hang them, or stab them, drown them in a draught,

Confound them by some course, and come to me,

I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this, but two in company:—

Each man apart, all single and alone,

⁴ 'Black-corner'd night.' Many conjectures have been offered about this passage, which appears to me a corruption of the text. Some have proposed to read black-corned, alluding to the conical form of the earth's shadow; others black-crown'd, and black-cover'd. It appears to me that it should be black-certain'd. We have 'the blanket of the dark,' in Macbeth, 'Night's black mantle,' in the Third Part of King Henry VI, and the First Part of the same drama:—
"night is dead,"

Whose pitchy mantle overveil'd the earth.

I cannot think with Stevens that 'Night as obscure as a dark corner,' is meant.

⁵ It should be remembered that a portrait was called a counterfeit.

⁶ i. e. complete, a finished villain.

⁷ i. e. a joke

¹ The poet and painter were within view when Apemantus parted from Timon: they must therefore be supposed to have been wandering about the woods in search of Timon's cave, and to have heard in the interim the particulars of Timon's bounty to the thieves and the steward. 'But (as Malone observes) Shakespeare was not attentive to these minute particulars, and if he and the audience knew these circumstances, he would not scruple to attribute the knowledge to persons who perhaps had not yet an opportunity of acquiring it.'

² The doing of that we have said we would do. Thus in Hamlet—

'As he in his peculiar act and force
May give his saying deed.'

³ Personating for representing simply. The subject of this projected satire was Timon's case, not his person.

Yet an arch villain keeps him company.¹
If, where thou art, two villains shall not be,
[To the Painter.
Come not near him.—If thou wouldst not reside
[To the Poet.
But where one villain is, then him abandon.—
Hence! pack! there's gold, ye came for gold, ye slaves:
You have done work for me, there's payment:
 hence!²
You are an alchemist, make gold of that:—
Out, rascal dogs!

SCENE II. The same. Enter FLAVIUS, and two Senators.

Flew. It is in vain that you would speak with Timon;
For he is set so only to himself,
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
Is friendly with him.

1 Sen. Bring us to his cave :
It is our part, and promise to the Athenians,
To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike Men are not still the same: 'Twas time, and grief

That fram'd him thus; time, with his fairer hand,
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him: Bring us so him,
And chance it as it may.

Flav. Here is his cave.
Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
Look out, and speak to friends: The Athenians,
By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee:
Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter TIMON.
Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak and be hang'd:

For each true word, a blister! and each false
Be as a can't'izing to the root o' the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking!

1 Sen. Worthy Timon—
Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, T-

Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague,

Could I but catch it for them.

1 Sen. O, forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators, with one consent of love,³
Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. They confess,
Toward thee, forgetfulness too general, gross :
Which⁴ now the public body,—which doth seldom
Play the recanter,—feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of it's own fall,⁵ restraining aid to Timon ;

1 The plain and simple meaning of this is, 'where each of you is, a villain must be in his company, because you are both of you arch villains,' therefore a villain goes with you every where. Thus in Promos and Cassandra, 1378. 'Go, and a knave with thee.'

2 The word done is omitted by accident in the old copy. This line is addressed to the painter, the next to the poet.

3 With one united voice of affection. So in Stern-hold's version of the hundredth Psalm.—

4. Which should be and. It is now vain to inquire whether the mistake be attributable to the poet, or to a careless transcriber or printer, but in such a glaring error as this, it is but charitable to suppose of the last.

5 The Athenians have a sense of the danger of their own fall by the arms of Alcibiades, by their withholding aid that should have been given to Timon.

6 Render is confession. So in Cymbeline, Act iv.

'——— may drive us to a render
Where we have liv'd.'

And send forth us, to make their sorrow'd render;^a
Together with a recompense more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the dram;
Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth,
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it ;
 Surprise me to the very brink of tears :
 Lend me a fool's heart, and a woman's eyes,
 And I'll bewEEP these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with us,
And of our Athens (thine, and ours) to take
The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,
Allow'd^d with absolute power, and thy good name
Live with authority:—so soon we shall drive back
Of Alcibiades the approaches wild;
Who, like a boar to savage, doth root up
His country's peace.^a

2 Sen. And shakes his threat'ning sword
Against the walls of Athens.

Therefore, Timon,—
Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir;
Thus—

Thus,—
If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That—Timon cares not. But if he sack fair Athens.

And take our goodly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war ;
Then, let him know,—and tell him, Timon speaks it,
In pity of our aged, and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him, that—I care not,
And let him take't at worst; for their knives care not,
While you have throats to answer ; for myself,
There's not a whistle⁹ in the unruly camp,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverend'st throat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous gods,¹⁰
As thieves to keepers.

Flaw. Stay not all's in vain.

Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph,
It will be seen to-morrow ; My long sickness
Of health, " and living, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still ;
Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough !

1 Sen. We speak in vain.

Tim. But yet I love my country; and am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common bruit¹⁸ doth put it.

1 Sen. That's well spoke

1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them.

2 Sen. And enter in our ears, like great triumphs
In their applauding gates.

Time. Commend me to them ;
And tell them, that to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love,¹³ with other incident throes

7 Allowed here signifies confirmed. 'To approve or confirm. Ratum habere aliquid.' Baret. This word is generally used by our old writers in the sense of approved, and I am doubtful whether it has been rightly explained in other places in these dramas by licensed. An allowed fool, I think, means an approved fool, a confirmed fool.

8 This image may have been caught from Psalm LXXX. 18.

9 A whittle is a clasp knife. The word is still provincially in use.

10 'The prosperous gods' undoubtedly here mean the propitious or favourable gods, Dii secundi. Thus in Othello, Act i. Sc. 3.

'To my unfolding lend your prosperous ear.'
In which passage the quarto of 1623 reads 'a gracious ear.'

11 He means 'the disease of life begins to promise me a period.'

13 Compare this part of Timon's speech with part of the celebrated soliloquy in Hamlet.

That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do
them:

I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.
2 Sen. I like this well, he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,
That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it; Tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that whose please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself:—I pray you, do my greeting.

Flav. Trouble him no further, thus you still shall find him.

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Whom once a day with his embossed froth¹
The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.—
Lips, let our words go by, and language end:
What is amies, plague and infection mend!
Graves only be men's works; and death their gain!
Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign!

[Exit TIMON.]

1 Sen. His discontents are unremoveably
Coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear² peril.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The Walls of Athens. Enter Two Senators and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd; are his
As full as thy report?

Mess. I have spoke the least:
Besides, his expedition promises
Present approach.

2 Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend:
Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speak like friends:—this man was riding

From Alcibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which imported
His fellowship i' the cause against your city,
In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter Senators from TIMON.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers.

3 Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.—
The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scouring
Doth choke the air with dust: in and prepare;
Ours is the fall, I fear, our foes, the snare.

[Exeunt.]

1 This was suggested by a passage in Plutarch's Life of Antony, where it is said Timon addressed the people of Athens in similar terms from the public tribune in the market-place. See also The Palace of Pleasure, vol. 1. Nov. 23.

2 The first folio reads who. It was altered to which in the second folio. Malone reads whom, saying it refers to Timon, and not to his grave; as appears from The Palace of Pleasure:—By his last will he ordained himself to be interred upon the seashore, that the waves and surges might beate and vex his dead carcas.

Embossed froth is foaming, puffed or blown up froth. Among our ancestors 'a boss or a bubble of water when it raineth, or the pot seetheth,' were used indifferently.

3 So in Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1:—

'Whom thou in terms so bloody and so dear
Hast made thy enemies.'

4 This passage Steevens, with great reason, considers corrupt, the awkward repetition of the verb made, and the obscurity of the whole, countenance his opinion. Might we not read:—

'Yet our old love had a particular force,
And may'st us speak like friends.'

SCENE IV. The Woods. Timon's Cave, and a Tombstone seen. Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sol. By all description this should be the place.
Who's here? speak, ho!—No answer?—What is this?

Timon is dead, who hath outstretch'd his span:
Some beast rear'd this; there does not live a man.
Dead, sure; and this his grave.—
What's on this tomb I cannot read; the character
I'll take with wax.

Our captain hath in every figure skill;
An ag'd interpreter, though young in days:
Before proud Athens he's set down by this,
Whose fall the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.]

SCENE V. Before the Walls of Athens. Trumpets sound. Enter ALCIBIADES, and Forces.

Alab. Sound to this coward and lascivious town
Our terrible approach. [A parley sounded.]

Enter Senators on the Walls.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the time
With all licentious measure, making your wills
The scope of justice; till now, myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our traver's'd arms,⁶ and breath'd

Our sufferance vainly: Now the time is flush,⁷
When crouching marrow, in the bearer strong,
Cries of itself, No more: now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease;
And purry insolence shall break his wind,
With fear and horrid flight.

1 Sen. Noble and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit,
Ere thou hadst power, or we had cause of fear,
We sent to thee; to give thy rages balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with loves
Above their quantity.⁸

2 Sen. So did we woo
Transformed Timon to our city's love,
By humble message, and by promis'd means;⁹
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.

1 Sen. These walls of ours
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You have receiv'd your griefs: nor are they such,
That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall

For private faults in them.

2 Sen. Nor are they living.
Who were the motives that you first went out:¹⁰
Shame, that they wanted cunning,¹¹ in excess
Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord,

5 The old copy has 'Some beast read this.' The emendation is Warburton's. It is evident that the soldier, when he first sees Timon's everlasting dwelling, does not know it to be a tomb. He concludes Timon must be dead, because he receives no answer. It is evident that when he utters the words some beast, &c. he has not seen the inscription. 'What can this be? (says the soldier,) Timon is certainly dead: Some beast must have rear'd this; a man could not live in it. Yes, he is dead: sure enough, and this must be his tomb; What is this writing upon it?'

6 Traver's'd arms are arms crossed. The image occurs in The Tempest:—

'His arms in this sad knot.'

7 Flush is mature, ripe, or come to full perfection.
8 Their refers to griefs. 'To give thy rages balm,' must be considered as parenthetical.

9 I. e. by promising him a competent subsistence.

10 'The motives that you first went out,' i. e. those who made the motion for your exile. This word is used in the same manner in Troilus and Cressida:—

—her wanton spirits look out

At every joint and motive of her body.'

11 Cunning is used in its old sense of skill or wisdom, extremity of shame that they wanted wisdom in procuring their banishment hath broke their hearts. Theobald had nearly thus interpreted the passage; and Johnson thought he could improve it by reading—

'Shame that they wanted, coming in excess
Hath broke their hearts.'

Johnson perhaps was not aware of the old meaning of cunning.

Into our city with thy banners spread :
By decimation, and a tithe'd death
(If thy revenges hunger for that food,
Which nature loathes,) take thou the destin'd tenth;
And by the hazard of the spotted die,
Let die the spotted.

1 Sen. All have not offended :
For those that were, it is not square,¹ to take,
On those that are, revenges : crimes, like lands,
Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage :
Spare thy Athenian cradle,² and those kin,
Which in the bluster of thy wrath, must fall
With those that have offended : like a shepherd,
Approach the fold, and cull the infected forth,
But kill not all together.

2 Sen. What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile,
Than how to't with thy sword.

1 Sen. Set but thy foot
Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall ope ;
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say thou'lt enter friendly.

2 Sen. Throw thy glove ;
Or any token of thine honour else,
That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress,
And not as our confusion, all thy powers
Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alcib. Then there's my glove ;
Descend, and open your uncharged ports ;³
Those enemies of Timon's and mine own,
Whom you yourself shall set out for reproof,
Fall, and no more : and,—to atone⁴ your fears
With my more noble meaning,—not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be remedied, to your public laws,
At heaviest answer.⁵

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.
Alcib. Descend, and keep your words.

1 i. e. not regular, not equitable.

2 — Jovis incunabula Crete. Ovid Metam. viii. 99.

3 i. e. Unattacked gates.

4 i. e. to rectify them to it. The general sense of this word in Shakespeare. Thus in Cymbeline :—'I was glad I did atone my countryman and you.'

5 All attempts to extract a meaning from this passage as it stands, must be vain. We should certainly read :—

'But shall be remedied to your public laws
At heaviest answer.'

It is evident that the context requires a word of this import : remanded might serve. The comma at remedied is not in the old copy. Remedied to, as Steevens ob-

The Senators descend, and open the gates. Enter a Soldier.

Sol. My noble general, Timon is dead :
Entomb'd upon the very hem of the sea :
And on his gravestone, this insculpture ; which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression
Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. [Reads.] Here lies a wretched corpse, of wretched soul bereft :

Seek not my name : A plague consumes you wicked
catiffs left !

Here lie I, Timon : who alive, all living men did hate :
Pass by, and curse thy fill ; but pass, and stay not here thy goit.⁶

These well express in thee thy latter spirits :
Though thou abhorrest in us our human griefs,
Scorn'st our brains' flow,⁷ and those our droplets
which

From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead
Is noble Timon ; of whose memory
Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city
And I will use the olive with my sword :
Make war breed peace ; make peace stint⁸ war ;
make each

Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.⁹
Let our drums strike. [Exeunt.]

THE play of Timon is a domestic tragedy, and therefore strongly fastens on the attention of the reader. In the plan there is not much art, but the incidents are natural, and the characters various and exact. The catastrophe affords a very powerful warning against that ostentatious liberality, which scatters bounty, but confers no benefits ; and buys flattery, but not friendship.

In this tragedy are many passages perplexed, obscure, and probably corrupt, which I have endeavoured to rectify or explain with due diligence ; but having only one copy, cannot promise myself that my endeavours shall be much applauded. JOHNSON.

serves, is nonsense. Johnson's explanation will then serve. 'Not a soldier shall quit his station, or commit any violence, but he shall answer it regularly to the law.' This epithet is formed out of two distinct epithets in North's Plutarch. The first couplet is there said to have been composed by Timon himself ; the second by the poet Callimachus. The epithet catiff, was probably suggested by another epiphem, to be found in Kendall's Flowers of Epigrammes, 1577, and in the Palace of Pleasure, vol. i. Nov. 23.

7 So in Drayton's Miracles of Mæcus :—

'But he from rocks that fountains can command,
Cannot yet stay the fountains of his brain.'

CORIOLANUS.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

IN this play the narration of Plutarch, in the Life of Coriolanus, is very exactly followed ; and it has been observed that the poet shows consummate skill in knowing how to seize the true poetical point of view of the historical circumstances, without changing them in the least degree. His noble Roman is indeed worthy of the name, and his mob such as a Roman mob doubtless were ; such as every great city has possessed from the time of the polished Athenians to that of modern Paris, where such scenes have been exhibited by a people collectively considered the poliest on earth, as shows that 'the many-headed multitude' have the same turbulent spirit, when there is an exciting cause, in all ages.

Shakespeare has extracted amusement from this popular humour, and with the aid of the pleasant satirical vein of Menenius has relieved the serious part of the play with some mirthful scenes, in which it is certain the people's folly is not spared.

The character of Coriolanus, as drawn by Plutarch, was happily suited to the drama, and in the hands of Shakespeare could not fall of exciting the highest interest and sympathy in the spectator. He is made of that stern unbending stuff which usually enters into the composition of a hero : accustomed to conquest and triumph, his inflexible spirit could not stoop to solicit by flattering condescension what it felt that its worthy services ought to command :

— he was

A noble servant to them ; but he could not

Carry his honours even :—

—commanding peace

Even with the same austerity and garb

As he controll'd the war.¹

He hated flattery ; and his sovereign contempt for the people arose from having witnessed their pusillanimity ; though he loved 'the bubble reputation,' and would have grappled with fate for honour, he hated the breath of vulgar applause as 'the reek of the rotten fens.'

He knew that his actions must command the good opinion of men ; but his modesty shrunk from their open declaration of it: he could not bear to hear 'his nothings monstered.'

'— Pray you, no more; my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me.'

But yet his pride was his greatest characteristic:

'Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man.'

This it was that made him seek distinction from the ordinary herd of popular heroes; his honour must be won by difficult and daring enterprise, and worn in silence. It was this pride which was his overthrow; and from which the moral of the piece is to be drawn. He had thrown himself with the noble and confiding magnanimity of a hero into the hands of an enemy, knowing that the truly brave are ever generous; but two suns could not shine in one hemisphere; Tullius Aufidius found he was darkened by his light, and he exclaims:—

'He bears himself more prouder
Even to my person than I thought he would
When I did first embrace him: Yet his nature
In that's no changeling.'

The closeness with which Shakespeare has followed his original, Sir Thomas North's translation of Plutarch, will be observed upon comparison of the following passage, with the parallel scene in the play, describing Coriolanus's flight to Antium, and his reception by Aufidius. 'It was even twilight when he entered the city of Antium, and many people met him in the streets, but no man knew him. So he went immediately to Tullius Aufidius' house; and when he came thither he got him up straight to the chimney hearth, and sat him down, and spake not a word to any man, his face all muffled over. They of the house spying him, wondered what he should be, and yet they durst not bid him rise. For ill-favourably muffled and disguised as he was, yet there appeared a certain majesty in his countenance and in his silence; whereupon they went to Tullius, who was at supper, to tell him of the strange disguising of this man. Tullius rose presently from the board, and, coming towards him, asked him what he was, and wherefore he came. Then Martius unmuffled himself, and, after he had paused awhile, making no answer, he said unto himself, 'If thou knowest me not yet, Tullius, and seeing me, dost not perhaps believe me to be the man I am indeed, I must of necessity discover myself to be that I am. I am Caius Martius, who hath done to thyself particularly, and to all the Volscians generally, great hurt and mischief, which I cannot deny for my surname of Coriolanus that I bear. For I never had other benefit of the true and painful service I have done, and the extreme dangers I have been in, but this surname: a good memory and witness of the malice and displeasure thou shouldst bear me. Indeed the name only remaineth with me; for the rest, the envy and cruelty of the people of Rome have taken from me, by the sufferance of the dastardly nobility and magistrates, who have forsaken me, and let me be banished by the people. This extremity hath now driven me to come as a poor suitor, to take thy chimney-hearth, not of any hope I have to save my life thereby. For if I feared death, I would not have come hither to put myself in hazard; but pricked forward with desire to be revenged of them that have thus banished me, which now I do begin, by putting my person in the hands of their enemies. Wherefore if thou hast any heart to be wreaked of the injuries thy enemies have done thee, speed thee now, and let my misery serve thy turn, and so use it as my service may be a benefit to the Volscians; promising thee that I will fight with better good-will for all you, than I did when I was against you, knowing that they fight more valiantly who know the furies of the enemy, than such as have never proved it. And if it be so that thou dare not, and that thou art weary to prove fortune any more, then am I also weary to live any longer. And it were no wisdom in thee to save the life of him who hath been heretofore thy mortal enemy, and whose service now can nothing help or pleasure thee.—Tullius, hearing what he said, was a marvellous glad man, and, taking him by the hand, he said to him, "Stand up, O Martius, and be of good cheer, for in proferring thyself unto us, thou dost us great honour: and by this means thou mayest hope also of greater things at all Volscian hands." So he feared him for that time, and entertained him in the honourablest manner he could, talking with him of no other matter at that present; but within a few days after they fell to consultation together in what sort they should begin their wars.'

In the scene of the meeting of Coriolanus with his wife and mother, when they come to supplicate him to spare Rome, Shakespeare has adhered very closely to his original. He felt that it was sufficient to give it merely a dramatic form. The speech of Volumnia, as we have observed in a note, is almost in the very words of the old translator of Plutarch.

The time comprehended in the play is about four years; commencing with the accession to the Roman Sacre, in the year of Rome 262, and ending with the death of Coriolanus, A. U. C. 295.

Malone conjectures it to have been written in the year 1610.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street. Enter a Company of mutinous Citizens, with Staves, Clubs, and other Weapons.

1 Citizen.

BEFORE we proceed any further, hear me speak.

Cit. Speak, speak. [Several speaking at once.]

1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die, than to famish?

Cit. Resolved, resolved.

1 Cit. First you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

Cit. We know't, we know't.

1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is't a verdict

Cit. No more talking on't; let it be done: away, away.

2 Cit. One word, good citizens.

1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians, good: What authority suits us, would relieve us; if they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess, they relieved us humanely; but they think, we are too dear: the leanliness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become

1 Good, in a commercial sense. As in Eastward Hoe:—

— known good men, well mounted. Again in the Merchant of Venice:—

'Antonio's a good man.'

rakes:¹ for the gods know, I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

2 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

Cit. Against him first; he's a very dog to the commonalty.

2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

1 Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

2 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft-conscienc'd men can be content to say, it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

2 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him: You must in no way say, he is covetous.

1 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen: Why stay we praying here? To the Capitol.

Cit. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft; who comes here?

Enter MENENIUS AGRIPPA.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.

1 Cit. He's one honest enough; 'Would, all the rest were so!

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand?

Where go you

With bats and clubs? The matter? Speak, I pray you.

1 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling, this fortnight, what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say, poor suiters have strong breaths; they shall know, we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours, Will you undo yourselves?

1 Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you. For your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves, as lift them Against the Roman state; whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong link asunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment: For the dearth, The gods, not the patricians, make it; and Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack, You are transported by calamity Thither where more attends you; and you slander The belms o' the state, who care for you like fathers, When you curse them as enemies.

1 Cit. Care for us!—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their store-houses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers: repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you A pretty tale; it may be, you have heard it; But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture To stale't a little more.

1 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir: yet you must not think to fob off our disgrac^e with a tale: but, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the body's members

Rebell'd against the belly: thus accus'd it:— That only like a gulf it did remain 'T' the midst o' the body, idle and inactive, Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing Like labour with the rest; where' the other instruments Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel, And, mutually participate, did minister Unto the appetite and affection common Of the whole body. The belly answered,—

1 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile, Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even thus (For, look you, I may make the belly smile,⁴ As well as speak,) it tauntingly replied To the discontented members, the mutinous parts That envied his receipt; even so most fitly⁵ As you malign our senators, for that .

They are not such as you.

1 Cit. Your belly's answer? What?

Men. The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye, The counsellor heart,⁶ the arm our soldier, Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter, With other muniments and petty helps In this our fabric, if that they—

1 Cit. What then?

Men. 'Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then? Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,

Who is the sink o' the body,—— Well, what then? The former agents, if they did complain, What could the belly answer?

Men. I will tell you;

If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little,) Patience, a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

1 Cit. You are long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend; Your most grave belly was deliberate, Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd. True is it, my incorporate friends, quoth he, That I receive the general food at first, Which you do live upon: and fit it is; Because I am the store-house, and the shop Of the whole body: But if you do remember, I send it through the rivers of your blood, Even to the court, the heart,—to the seat o' the brain;⁹

1 It should be remembered that 'as lean as a rake' is an old proverbial expression. There is, as Warburton observes, a miserable joke intended:—'Let us now revenge this with forks, before we become rakes'; a pike, or pike-fork, being the ancient term for a pitchfork. The origin of the proverb is doubtless 'as lean as a rack or racc,' (pronounced rake), and signifying a greyhound.

2 Thus in Othello—

'I have made my way through more impediments Than twenty times your stop.'

3 'The old copies have "scale" a little more;" for which Theobald judiciously proposed stale. To this Warburton objects petulantly enough, it must be confessed, because to scale signifies to weigh; so indeed it does, and many other things; none of which, however, bear any relation to the text. Stevens too prefers scale, which he proves from a variety of authorities to mean 'scatter, disperse, spread': to make any of them, however, suit his purpose, he is obliged to give an unfaithful version of the text. "Though some of you have heard the story, I will spread it yet wider, and diffuse it among the rest." There is nothing of this in Shakespeare; and indeed I cannot avoid looking upon the whole of his long note as a feeble attempt to justify a palpable error of the press, at the cost of taste and sense.—Gifford's Massinger, vol. i. p. 204, ed. 1813.

4 Disgraces are hardships, injuries.

5 Where for whereas.

6 'And so the belly, all this notwithstanding, laughed at their folly and said,' &c.—North's Plutarch.

7 a.s. exactly.

8 The head was anciently esteemed the seat of the understanding. See the next note. There has been strange confusion in the appropriation of some parts of this dialogue in all editions, even to the last by Mr. Bowell. Not to encumber the page, I must request the reader to compare this with the former editions, and have no doubt he will approve the transposition of names which has been here made.

9 Shakespeare uses seat for throne. 'I send it (says

*And through the cranks¹ and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that natural competency
Whereby they live: And though that all at once,
You, my good friends, (this says the belly,) mark
me,—*

1 Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. *Though all at once cannot
See what I do deliver out to each;
Yet I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flower of all,
And leave me but the bran.* What say you to't?

1 Cit. It was an answer: How apply you this?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,
And you the mutinous members: For examine
Their counsels, and their cares; digest things rightly,
Touching the weal of the common; you shall find,
No public benefit which you receive,
But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you,
And no way from yourselves.—What do you think?
You, the great toe of this assembly?—

Cit. I the great toe? Why the great toe?

Men. For that being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:

Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,²

Lead'st first to win some vantage.—

But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs;

Rome and her rats are at the point of battle,

The one side must have bale.³ Hail, noble Marcius.

Enter CAIUS MARCIUS.

Mar. Thanks.—What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,

That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,

Make yourselves scabs?

1 Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to thee, will flatter

Beneath abhorring.—What would you have, you curs,

That like nor peace, nor war? the one affrights you,

The other makes you proud.⁴ He that trusts you,

Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;

Where foxes, geese: You are no surer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,

Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is,

To make him worthy, whose offence subdues him,

And curse that justice did it.⁵ Who deserves greatness,

Deserves your hate: and your affections are

A sick man's appetite, who desires most that

Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,

And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye!

Trust ye?

With every minute you do change a mind;

And call him noble that was now your hate,

Him vile, that was your garland. What's the matter,

That in these several places of the city

You cry against the noble senate, who,

Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else

Would feed on one another?—What's their seeking?

(the belly) through the blood, even to the royal residence, the heart, in which the kingly-crowned understanding sits enthroned.⁶ The poet, besides the relations in Plutarch, had seen a similar fable in Camden's Remaines; Camden copied it from John of Salisbury, De Nugis Curialium, b. vi. c. 24. Mr. Douce, in a very curious note, has shown the high antiquity of this apologue, 'which is to be found in several ancient collections of Æsopian Fables: there may be, therefore, as much reason for supposing it the invention of Æsop, as there is for making him the parent of many others.'

¹ Cranks are windings; the meandering ducts of the human body.

² Rascal and in blood are terms of the forest, both here used equivocally. The meaning seems to be, 'thou worthless scoundrel, though thou art in the worst plight for running of all this herd of plebeians, like a deer not in blood, thou takest the lead in this tumult in order to obtain some private advantage to thyself.'

³ Worm in blood has a secondary meaning of lowest in condition. The modern editions have erroneously a semina at blood, which obscures the sense.

Men. For corn at their own rates; whereof, they say,
The city is well stor'd.

Mar. Hang 'em! They say?

They'll sit by the fire, and presume to know
What's done i' the Capitol; who's like to rise, Who thrives, and who declines: side factions, and give out

Conjectural marriages; making parties strong,
And feeling such as stand not in their liking,
Below their cobbled shoes. They say there's grain enough?

Would the nobility lay aside their ruth,⁶
And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry⁷
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
As I could pick⁸ my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded;

For though abundantly they lack discretion,
Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you,
What says the other troop?

Mar. They are dissolved: Hang 'em!
They said, they were an hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs;

That, hunger broke stone walls; that, dogs must eat;

That, meat was made for mouths; that, the gods sent not

Corn for the rich men only:—With these shreds
They vented their complainings; which being an-swer'd,

And a petition granted them, a strange one
(To break the heart of generosity,⁹ And make bold power look pale,) they threw their caps

As they would hang them on the horns o' the moon,
Shouting their emulation.¹⁰

Men. What is granted them?

Mar. Five tribunes to defend their vulgar wisdoms,
Of their own choice: One's Junius Brutus,

Sicinius Velutus, and I know not.—Sdeath!

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,

Ere so prevail'd with me: it will in time

Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes

For insurrection's arguing.¹¹

Men. This is strange.

Mar. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where's Caius Marcius?

Mar. Here: What's the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volces are in arms.

Mar. I am glad on't; then we shall have means to vent

Our musty superfluity;—See, our best editors.

Enter COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, and other Senators; JUNIUS BRUTUS, and SICINIUS VELUTUS.

1 Sen. Marcius, 'tis true, that you have lately told us;

The Volces are in arms.

³ Bale is evil or mischief, harm or injury. The word is pure Saxon, and was becoming obsolete in Shak-speare's time.

⁴ Coriolanus does not use these two sentences consequently; but first reproaches them with unsteadiness, then with their other occasional vices.

⁵ 'Your virtue is to speak well of him whom his own offences have subjected to justice; and to rail at those laws by which he whom you praise was punished.'

⁶ I. e. pity, compassion.

⁷ Quarry or querre signified slaughtered game of any kind, which was so denominated from being deposited in a square enclosed space in royal hunting.

⁸ Pick, peck, or picke, I. e. pick; still in provincial use. The fact is, that, in ancient language, to pick was used for to cast, throw, or hurl; to pick was to set or fix any thing in a particular spot.

⁹ Generosity, in the sense of its Latin original, for nobleness, high birth. Thus in Measure for Measure:—
'The generous and gravest citizens.'

¹⁰ Emulation is factious contention.

¹¹ For insurgents to debase upon.

Mar. They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to't.
I sin in envying his nobility:
And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.

Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears, and he

Upon my party, I'd revolt to make
Only my wars with him: he is a lion
That I am proud to hunt.

I Sen. Then, worthy Marcius,
Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is;
And I am constant.—Titus Lartius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face:
What, art thou stiff? stand'st out?

Tu. No, Caius Marcius:
I'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with the other,
Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true bred!

I Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I
know,
Our greatest friends attend us.

Tu. Lead you on:
Follow, Cominius; we must follow you;
Right worthy you priority.²

Com. Noble Lartius!

I Sen. Hence! To your homes, be gone.

Mar. Nay, let them follow:
The Voices have much corn; take these rats thither,
To gnaw their garners:—Worshipful mutineers,
Your valour puts well forth: pray, follow.

[Escort Senators, Com. Mar. Tit. and

Men. Citizens steal away.]

Sic. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius?

Bru. He has no equal.

Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for the people,—

Bru. Mark'd you his lip, and eyes?

Sic. Nay, but his taunts.

Bru. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods.

Sic. Bemock the modest moon.

Bru. The present wars devour him: he is grown Too proud to be so valiant.³

Sic. Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon: But I do wonder,
His insolence can brook to be commanded
Under Cominius.

Bru. Fame, at the which he aims,—
In whom already he is well grac'd,—cannot Better be held, nor more attain'd than by
A place below the first: for what miscarries
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure

1 I. e. Immoveable in my resolution. So in Julius
Cæsar:—

'But I am constant as the northern star.'

2 You being right worthy of precedence.

3 The old copy has Marcius.

4 That is, You have in this muddy shown fair blossoms of valour. So in King Henry VIII:—

'To-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,' &c.

5 A gird is a cut, a sarcasm, or stroke of satire. See

King Henry IV. Part II. Act I. Sc. 2.

6 'The present wars' Shakespeare uses to express the pride of Coriolanus, grounded on his military prowess; which kind of pride, Brutus says, devours him. In Troilus and Cressida, Act II. Sc. 2. we have:—

'He that's proud eats up himself.'

Perhaps the meaning of the latter member of the sentence is, 'He is grown too proud of being so valiant to be endured.' It is still a common expression to say,
'eat up with pride.'

7 Demerits and merits had anciently the same meaning

'—and my demerits

May speak,' &c.

Othello.

Thus in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, p. 200, ed. 1925:

2 C

Will then cry out of Marcius, O, if he
Had borne the business!

Sic. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall
Of his demerits' rob Cominius.

Bru. Come:
Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius,
Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults
To Marcius shall be honours, though, indeed,
In ought he merit not.

Sic. Let's hence, and hear
How the despatch is made: and in what fashion,
More than in singularity,⁴ he goes
Upon his present action.

Bru. Let's along. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Corioli. The Senate House. Enter
TULLUS AUFIDIUS, and certain Senators.

I Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,
And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?
What ever hath been thought on in this state,⁵
That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome
Had circumvention! 'Tis not four days gone,
Since I heard thence; these are the words: I think,
I have the letter here; yes, here it is: [Reads.

*They have prest⁶ a power, but it is not known Whether for east or west: The dearth is great;
The people mutinous: and it is remour'd,
Cominius, Marcius, your old enemy,
(Who is of Rome worse hated than of you),
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three lead on this preparation
Whither 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you:*

I Sen. Our army's in the field:
We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly,
To keep your great pretences veil'd, till when They needs must show themselves; which in the hatching,
It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,
We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was,
To take in⁷ many towns, ere, almost, Rome
Should know we were about.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius,
Take your commission; hie you to your bands:
Let us alone to guard Corioli:
If they set down before us, for the remove⁸
Bring up your army; but I think you'll find
They have not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O, doubt not that;
I speak from certainties. Nay, more,
Some parcels of their powers are forth already,
And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,
'Tis sworn between us, we shall never strike
Till one can do no more.

—'I have not promoted and preferred you to condign preferments according to your demerits.'

8 Perhaps the word singularity implies a sarcasm on Coriolanus, and the speaker means to say—after what fashion beside that in which his own singularity of disposition invests him, he goes into the field. So in Twelfth Night:—

'—Put thyself into the trick of singularity.'

9 The old copy reads:—

'What have been ever thought on in this state.
We must either suppose this an ellipsis for 'What things have,' &c. or read with Steevens, hath, as in the text.

10 I. e. ready; from the old French prest. Thus in the Merchant of Venice, Act I. Sc. 1:—

'—say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it.'

11 To take in was formerly used as we now use to take for to subdue, to conquer. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'—cut the Ionian seas,

And take in Toryne.'

12 'If the Romans besiege us, bring up your army to remove them.'

All. The gods assist you!

Auf. And keep your honours safe!

1 Sen. Farewell.

2 Sen.

All. Farewell.

Farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. Rome. An Apartment in Marcius' House. Enter VOLUMINA and VIRGILIA: They sit down on two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort: If my son were my husband, I should freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way; when, for a day of kings' entreaties, her mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I,—considering how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak.¹ I tell thee, daughter,—I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam? how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely: Had I a dozen sons,—each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius,—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Genl. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire² myself.

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks, I hear hither your husband's drum; See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair; As children from a bear, the Volces shunning him: Methinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—Come on, you cowards, you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome: His bloody brow With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes; Like to a harvest-man, that's task'd to mow Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O, Jupiter, no blood!

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man, Than gilt³ his trophy: The breasts of Hecuba, When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood At Grecian swords' contending.—Tell Valeria, We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Genl.

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee, And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with VALERIA and her Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam,—

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What, are you sewing here? A fine spot,⁴ in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

1 Attracted the attention of every one toward him.

2 The crown given by the Romans to him that saved the life of a citizen, which was accounted more honourable than any other.

3 This verb active (signifying to withdraw) occurs in The Tempest:—

'I will thence

Retire me to my Milan.'

4 Gilt means a superficial display of gold. The word is now obsolete.

'Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirched.'

King Henry V.

Vol. He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his school master.

Vol. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly, and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; caught it again: or whether his fall enraged him, or how 'twas, he did so set his teeth, and tear it; O, I warrant, how he mammoeked⁵ it!

Vol. One of his father's moods.

Vol. Indeed la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack⁶,⁷ madam.

Vol. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Vol. Not out of doors!

Vol. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.

Vol. Fye, you confine yourself most unreasonably; Come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Vol. You would be another Penelope: yet they say, all the yarn she spun, in Ulysses' absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come, I would, your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Vol. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

Vol. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Vol. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Volces have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think she would:—Fare you well, then.—Come, good sweet lady.—Pr'ythee, Virginia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No: at a word, madam; indeed, I must not. I wish you much mirth.

Vol. Well, then, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Before Corioli. Enter, with Drum and Colours, MARCIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Officers and Soldiers. To them a Messenger.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—A wager, they have met.

Lart. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. 'Tis done.

Lart.

Agreed.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy?

s i.e. a handsome spot of embroidery. We often hear of spotted muslin.

6 To mammoek is to tear or cut in pieces.

7 A crack signifies a sprightly forward boy; it is often used by Jonson and his contemporaries:—

'If we could get a witty boy, now, Eugene,

That were an excellent crack, I could instruct him To the true height.'

Devil is an Ass.

'A notable dissembling lad, a crack.'

Four Prentices of London, 1614

Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll not sell, nor give him: lend you him, I will,

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee make us quick in work;
That we with smoking swords may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy blast.

They sound a parley. Enter, on the walls, some Senators, and others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he,⁵ That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums

[Alarums afar off.]
Are bringing forth our youth: We'll break our walls,
Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates,
Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes,
They'll open of themselves. Hark you, far off;

[Other Alarums.]
There is Aufidius; list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it!

Lart. Their noise be our instruction.—Ladders, ho!

The Voices enter and pass over the Stage.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.
Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields.—Advance, brave Titus:

They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath.—Come on, my fellows;

He that retires, I'll take him for a Volce,
And he shall feel mine edge.

Alarum, and several Romans and Voices, fighting.
The Romans are beaten back to their trenches.
Re-enter MARCIUS.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you;
You shames of Rome! you herd of²—Boils and plagues

Plaster you o'er; that you may be abhorr'd
Further than seen, and one infect another
Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run
From slaves that apes would beat? Pluto and hell!
All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale
With flight and agued fear! Mend, and charge home,

Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe,
And make my wars on you: look to't: Come on;
If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives,
As they us to our trenches followed.

Another Alarum. The Voices and Romans re-enter, and the fight is renewed. The Voices retire into Corioli, and MARCIUS follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are ope:—Now prove good seconds:

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fiers: mark me, and do the like.

[He enters the gates, and is shut in.]

1 i. e. our friends who are in the field of battle.

2 The poet means—No, nor a man that fears you more than he; but he often entangles himself in the use of less and more.

3 'You herd of—cowards!' Marcius would probably have said, but his rage prevents him.

4 The old copy reads:—

'Who sensibly outdare'—

Sensible is here having sensation. So before:—'I would your cambrick were as sensible as your finger.' Though Coriolanus has the feeling of pain like other men, he is more hardy in daring exploits than his senseless sword; for after it is bent, he yet stands firm in the field.

1 Sol. Fool-hardness; not I.

2 Sol. Nor I.

3 Sol. See, they

Have shut him in. [Alarum continues.]

All. To the pot, I warrant him.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS.

Lart. What is become of Marcius?

All. Slain, sir, doubtless.

1 Sol. Following the fiers at the very heels,
With them he enters: who, upon the sudden,
Clapp'd-to their gates; he is himself alone,
To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow!

Who, sensible,⁴ outdares his senseless sword,
And, when it bows, stands up! Thou art left, Marcius:

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art,
Were not so rich a jewel.⁵ Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish,⁶ not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks, and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble.⁷

Re-enter MARCIUS bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

1 Sol. Look, sir.

Lart. 'Tis Marcius:

Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.⁸

[They fight, and all enter the City.]

SCENE V. Within the Town. A Street. Enter certain Romans, with spoils.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome

2 Rom. And I this.

3 Rom. A murrain on't! I took this for silver.

[Alarum continues still afar off.]

Enter MARCIUS, and TITUS LARTIUS, with a Trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers, that do prize their hours⁹

At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons, Iron of a doit, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up:—down with them.

And hark, what noise the general makes!—To him:—

There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans: Then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city;
Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste
To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st;

Thy exercise hath been too violent for
A second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not:

My work hath yet not warm'd me: Fare you well.
The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus
I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers' swords? Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest! So farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius!

[Exit MARCIUS.]

5 We have a similar thought in Othello:—

'If heaven had made me such another woman,
Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have ta'en it from her.'

6 The old copy has erroneously 'Calues wish': the error would easily arise: Shakespeare wrote, according to the mode of his time, 'Calues wish,' omitting to cross the t, and forming the o inaccurately. Cato was not born till the year of Rome 519, that is, 235 years after the death of Coriolanus; but the poet was led into the anachronism by following Plutarch.

7 —some say the earth

Was feverous, and did shake. Macbeth.

8 'Make remain, is an old manner of speaking, which means no more than remain.

9 i. e. their time. Johnson adopted Pope's reading —honours; for which there was no necessity.

Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;
Call thither all the officers of the town,
Where they shall know our mind. Away. (Exeunt.)

SCENE VI. Near the Camp of Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS and Forces, retreating.

Com. Breathe you, my friends; well fought: we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. While we have struck,
By interims, and conveying gusts, we have heard
The charges of our friends:—The Roman gods,
Lead their successes as we wish our own;
That both our powers, with smiling fronts encourtering,

Enter a Messenger.

May give you thankful sacrifice!—Thy news?

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued,
And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle:
I saw our party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth,
Methinks, thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'Tis not a mile; briefly we heard their
drums:

How could'st thou a mile confound¹ an hour,
And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volces
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir,
Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter MARCIUS.

Com. Who's yonder,
That does appear as he were slay'd? O Gods!
He has the stamp of Marcus; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,

More than I know the sound of Marcus' tongue
From every meaner man's.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip you
In arms as sound, as when I woo'd; in heart
As merry, as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burn'd to bedward.²

Com. Flower of warriors,
How is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile;
Ransoming him, or pitying,³ threat'ning the other;
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave,
Which told me they had beat you to your trenches?
Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone,
He did inform the truth: But for your gentlemen,
The common file (A plague!—Tribunes for them!)

¹ So in King Henry VI. Part I. Act I. Sc. 3.—

² He did confound the best part of an hour,' &c.
Confound is here used not in its common acceptation,
but in the sense of to expend: conterere tempus.

³ I. e. towards bed or rest, or the time of resting.
Compounds were formerly made at pleasure, by sub-joining ward to the thing towards which the action tended.

⁴ I. e. remitting his ransom.

⁵ I. e. in the front are the soldiers of Antium. Shakspeare uses Antiates as a trisyllable, as if it had been written Antiaia.

⁶ I. e. 'do not let slip the present time.'

⁷ The old copy reads Leaven. The reading of the text was introduced by Steevens. His person means his personal danger. We have nearly the same sentiment in Troilus and Cressida:—

'If there be one among the fairest of Greece
That holds his honour higher than his ease.'

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think—
Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' the field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com.

Marcus,

We have at disadvantage fought, and did
Retire, to win our purpose.

Mar. How lies their battle? Know you on which side

They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com.

As I guess, Marcus,

Their bands in the vaward are the Antiates,⁴
Of their best trust: o'er them Aufidius,
Their very heart of hope.

Mar.

I do beseech you,

By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we have shed together, by the vows
We have made to endure friends, that you directly
Set me against Aufidius, and his Antiates:
And that you not delay the present;⁵ but,
Filling the air with swords advanc'd, and darts,
We prove this very hour.

Com.

Though I could wish

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking; take your choice of those
That best can aid your action.

Mar.

Those are they

That most are willing;—If any such be here
(As it were sin to doubt,) that love this painting
Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear
Lesser his person than an ill report;⁶
If any think, brave death outweighs bad life,
And that his country's dearer than himself;
Let him, alone, or so many, so minded,
Wave thus [waving his hand,] to express his disposition,

And follow Marcus.

[They all shout and wave their swords; take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.

O me, alone! Make you a sword of me?

If these shows be not outward, which of you

But is four Volces? None of you but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius

A shield as hard as his. A certain number,

Though thanks to all, must I select from all: the rest

Shall bear the business in some other fight,

As cause will be obey'd. Please you to march;

And four shall quickly draw out my command,

Which men are best inclin'd.⁷

Com.

March on, my fellows:

Make good this ostentation, and you shall

Divide in all with us. (Exeunt.)

SCENE VII. The Gates of Corioli. TITUS LAR-TIUS, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with a drum and trumpet toward Cominius and Caius Marcus, enters with a Lieutenant, a Party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So, let the ports⁸ be guarded: keep your duties,

As I have set them down. If I do read, despatch
Those centuries⁹ to our aid; the rest will serve
For a short holding: If we lose the field,
We cannot keep the town.

Lien.

Fear not our care, sir.

⁷ From the obscurity of this passage there is good reason to suspect its correctness. Perhaps we might read some instead of four, words easily confounded in old MSs.; and then the last line may be interrogative, thus:

— Please you to march,

And some shall quickly draw out my command:

Which men are best inclin'd?

The passage as it stands in the old copy has been thus explained:—'Coriolanus means to say, that he would appoint four persons to select for his particular, or party, those who are best inclin'd; and, in order to save time, he proposes to have this choice made while the army is marching forward.' The old translation of Plutarch only says:—'Wherefore, with those that willingly offered themselves to follow him, he went out of the city.'

⁸ Gates.

⁹ Companies of a hundred men

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us.—
Our guiler, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volcan Camps. Alarum. Enter MARCIUS and AUFIDIUS.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike;

Not Afric owns a serpent, I abhor
More than thy fame and envy:¹ Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after!

Auf. If I fly, Marcus,
Halloo me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleas'd; 'Tis not my blood,
Wherein thou seest me mask'd; for thy revenge,
Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector,
That was the whip² of your bragg'd progeny,
Thou should'st not scape me here.—

[They fight, and certain Voices come to the aid of AUFIDIUS.]

Officious, and not valiant—you have sham'd me
In your condemned seconds.⁴

[Exeunt fighting, driven in by MARCIUS.]

SCENE IX. The Roman Camp. Alarum. A Retreat is sounded. Flourish. Enter at one side, COMINIUS, and Romans; at the other side, MARCIUS, with his arm in a scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,
Thou'dst not believe thy deeds; but I'll report it,
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles;
Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,
I' the end, admire; where ladies shall be frighted,
And, gladly quak'd,⁵ hear more; where the dull
tribunes,

That, with the fusty plebeians, hate thine honours,
Shall say, against their hearts—*We thank the gods,
Our Rome hath such a soldier!*—
Yet cam'st thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS, with his Power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison:⁶
Hadst thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done,
As you have done; that's what I can; induc'd
As you have been; that's for my country:⁷
He, that has but effected his good will,
Hath overta'en mine act.⁸

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving; Rome must know

1 The construction here appears to be, 'Not Afric owns a serpent I more abhor and envy than thy fame.' The verb to envy, in ancient language, signified to hate.

2 Thus in Macbeth—

'And damn'd be he that first cries, Hold, enough!'

3 I. e. the whip that your bragg'd progenitors were possessed of. Stevens suggests that whip might be used as crack has been since, to denote any thing peculiarly boasted of; as the crack house in the country, the crack boy of the school, &c.

4 'You have to my shame sent me help, which I must condemn as intrusive, instead of applauding it as necessary.'

5 I. e. thrown into grateful trepidation. To quake is used as a verb active by T. Heywood in his Silver Age, 1613:—

We'll quake them at the bar,
Where all souls wait for sentence.'

6 This is an odd enunciation. The meaning is, 'This man performed the action, and we only filled up the show.'

7 Country is used here and in other place as a trisyllable.

The value of her own: 'twere a concealment worse than a theft, no less than a traducement, To hide your doings; and to silence that, Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd, Would seem but modest: Therefore, I beseech you, (In sign of what you are, not to reward What you have done), before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not,⁹
Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses (Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store,) of all The treasure, in this field achiev'd, and city, We render you the tenth; to be ta'en forth, Before the common distribution, at Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it; And stand upon my common part with those That have beheld the doing.

[A long Flourish. They all cry, Marcus! Marcus! cast up their caps and lances; COMINIUS and LARTIUS stand bare.]

May these same instruments, which you profane,
Never sound more! When drums and trumpets shall I' the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing: When steel grows Soft as the parasite's silk, let him be made An overture for the wars!¹⁰ No more, I say; For that I have not wash'd my nose that bleed, Or foil'd some debile¹¹ wretch,—which, without note,

Here's many else have done,—you about me forth In exclamations hyperbolic;
As if I lov'd my little should be dieted In praises sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you;
More cruel to your good report, than grateful To us that give you truly: by your patience, If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you (Like one that means his proper harm) in manacles, Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it known,

As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcus Wears this war's garland: in token of the which My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him, With all his trim belonging; and, from this time, For what he did before Corioli, call him, With all the applause and clamour of the host, CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS.— Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.]

All. Caius Marcus Coriolanus

Cor. I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush, or no: Howbeit, I thank you:—

8 That is, 'has done as much as I have done, inasmuch as my ardour to serve the state is such that I have never been able to effect all that I wished.' So in Macbeth—

'The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed goes with it.'

9 That is, not be remembered.

10 The old copy reads:—

—When steel grows
Soft as silk, let him be made
An overture for the wars!

I think with Mr. Tyrwhitt that we should read a coverture. The personal pronoun him is not unfrequently used by old writers instead of it, the neuter. The sense of the passage will then be complete and apt:— 'When steel grows soft as silk, let armour be made of silk instead of steel.' Notwithstanding Malone's ingenious argument, it is impossible to extract sense from the word overture, which anciently, as now, meant 'a motion, or offer made, an opening, or entrance.'

11 Weak, feeble.

I mean to stride your steed ; and, at all times,
To undercrest your good addition,¹
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent :
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius, Must to Corioli back : send us to Rome
The best with whom we may articulate²
For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.
Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I that now
Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take it : 'tis yours.—What w't ?

Cor. I sometime lay, here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house ; he us'd me kindly :
He cried to me ; I saw him prisoner ;
But then Aufidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity : I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd !
Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free, as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcius, his name ?
Cor. By Jupiter, forgot :—
I am weary ; yea, my memory is tir'd.—
Have we no wine here ?

Com. Go we to our tent :
The blood upon your visage dries : 'tis time
It should be look'd to : come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X. The Camp of the Volces. A Flourish.
Cornes. Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

Auf. The town is ta'en !
1 Sol. 'Tis deliver'd back on good condition.

Auf. Condition ?—
I would, I were a Roman ; for I cannot,
Being a Volce,³ be that I am.—Condition !—
What good condition can a treaty find
I the part that is at mercy ? Five times, Marcius,
I have fought with thee ; so often hast thou beat me :
And would'st do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat.—By the elements,
If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,
He is mine, or I am his : Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't, it had ; for where⁴
I thought to crush him in an equal force
(True sword to sword,) I'll potch⁵ at him some way ;
Or wrath, or craft, may get him.

1 Sol. He's the devil.
Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle : My valour's poison'd,⁶

With only suffering stain by him ; for him
Shall fly out of itself : nor sleep, nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick ; nor fane, nor Capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements⁷ all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Marcius ; where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother's guard,⁸ even there,

1 'To undercrest your good addition,
To the fairness of my power'— appears to mean, 'he will endeavour to support the honourable distinction conferred upon him to the fair extent of his power.'

2 I. e. the chief men of Corioli, with whom we may enter into articles. Bullokar has the word 'articulate', to set down articles, or conditions of agreement. We shall retain the word capitulate, which anciently had nearly the same meaning, viz. 'To article or agree upon articles.'

3 The Volces are called Volscæ throughout the old translation of Plutarch, which Shakspeare followed.

4 Where for whereas, as in other places before noticed.

5 To potch is to thrust at with a sharp pointed instrument. Thus in Carew's Survey of Cornwall, p. 31 :—
'They use to potch them [i. e. fish] with an instrument somewhat like a salmon spear.' It is from the Fr.
pocher.

6 Mr. Tyrwhitt proposed to read :—
'My valour poison'd, &c.'
And the context seems to require this emendation. 'To mischief him my valour should deviate from its native generosity.'

Against the hospitable canon, would I Wash my fierce hand in his heart. Go you to the city ;

Learn how 'tis held ; and what they are that must Be hostages for Rome.

1 Sol. Will not you go ?

Auf. I am attend'd⁹ at the cypress grove.

I pray you,
(Tis south the city mills,) bring me word thither
How the world goes ; that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey.

1 Sol. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Rome. A Public Place. Enter.
MENEVIUS, SECESTUS, and BRUTUS.

Men. The angurer tells me, we shall have news to-night.

Br. Good or bad ?
Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love ?¹

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him ; as the hungry plo-beians would the noble Marcius.

Br. He's a lamb indeed, that bays like a bear.

Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb.
You two are old men ; tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor in,² that you two have not in abundance ?

Br. He's poor in no one fault but stored with all.
Sic. Especially, in pride.

Br. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange, now : Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o' the right hand file ? Do you ?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured ?

Men. Because you talk of pride now,—Will you not be angry ?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 'tis no great matter ; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience : give your disposition the reins, and be angry at your pleasures ; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame Marcius for being proud !

Br. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone : or your helps are many ; or else your actions would grow wondrous single : your abilities are too infant-like, for doing much alone. You talk of pride—
O, that you could turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks,³ and make but an interior survey of your good selves ! O, that you could !

Br. What then, sir ?

7 Embarquements, as appears from Cotgrave and Sherwood, meant not only an embarkation, but an embargoing ; which is evidently the sense of the word in this passage.

8 I. e. In my own house, with my brother posted to protect him.

9 Attend'd is waited for. So in Twelfth Night :—

'Thy interposer attends thee as the orchard and.'

10 Malone observes that Shakspeare often introduces these minute local descriptions, probably to give an air of truth to his pieces. The poet alluded not to the anachronism of mills near Andium. Lydgate has placed corn-mills near to Troy.

11 When the tribune, in reply to Menenius's remark on the people's hate to Coriolanus, had observed that
'even beasts know their friends,' Menenius asks,
'whom does the wolf love ?' implying that there are beasts which love nobody, and that among those beasts are the people.

12 It has been already observed that pleonasm of this kind were by no means unfrequent in Shakspeare's age.

13 With allusion to the fable, which says, that every man has a bag hanging before him, in which he puts his neighbour's faults ; and another behind him, in which he stows his own.

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates (alias fools,) as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying¹ Tyber in't; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint: hasty, and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttock of the night, than with the forehead of the morning.² What I think, I utter; and spend my malice in my breath: Meeting two such weak-men as you are (I cannot call you Lycurguses,) if the drink you give me, touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I cannot say, your worships have delivered the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the main part of your syllables: and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they lie deadly, that tell you, you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm,³ follows it, that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson⁴ conspectuities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Brū. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs;⁵ you wear out a good wholesome forenoon, in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fasset-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience.⁶ —When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the colic, you make faces like mummies; set up the bloody flag against all patience;⁷ and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause, is, calling both the parties knaves: You are a pair of strange ones.

Brū. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table, than a necessary bench in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are.⁸ When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave, as to stuff a butcher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcus is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Deucalion; though peradventure, some of the best of them were hereditary hangmen. Good e'en to your worships; more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsmen of the beastly plebeians. I will be bold to take my leave of you.

[Brū. and Sic. retire to the back of the Scene.]

1 Lovelace, in his Vermes to Althea, from Prison, has borrowed this expression:—

'When flowing cups run swiftly round,
With no allaying Thames,' &c.

2 Rather a late ller down than an early riser. So in Lovelace's Labour's Lost:—'In the posterior of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.' Again in King Henry IV. Part II.:—

'—Thou art a summer bird,
Which even in the haunch of Winter sings.
The lifting up of day.'

3 So in King Lear:—
'Strives in this little world of men.'

Microcosm is the title of a poem by John Davies of Hereford.

4 Bisson is blind. Thus in Hamlet:—

'Ran barefoot up and down, threatening the flames
With bisson rheum.'

5 That is, for their obsequies showed by bowing to you.

6 It appears from this whole speech that Shakspeare mistook the office of præfectus urbis for the tribune's office.

7 That is, declare war against patience. Johnson

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and VALERIA, &c.
How now, my as fair as noble ladies, (and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler,) whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcus approaches; for the love of Juno, let's go.

Men. Ha! Marcus coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most precious approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee:

—Hoo! Marcus coming home?

Two Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him; the state hath another, his wife another: and, I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night:—A letter for me?

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I saw it.

Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in *Galen*¹⁰ is but empiricitch, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded, I thank the gods for't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much:—Brings 'a victory in his pocket?—The wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows, Menenius: he comes the third time home with the oak leaf garland.¹¹

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes,—they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an he had staid by him, I would not have been so fidused for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed¹² of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go:—Yes, yes, yes: the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Vol. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous? ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true?

Vol. True? pow, wow.

Men. True? I'll be sworn they are true:—Where is he wounded? God says your good worships! [To the Tribunes, who come forward.] Marcus is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.—Where is he wounded?

Vol. P the shoulder, and i' the left arm: There will be large cicatrices to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquín, seven hurts i' the body.

justly observes, that 'there is not wit enough in this satire to recompense its grossness.'

8 So in Much Ado About Nothing:—'Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.'

9 'Shakspeare so often mentions throwing up caps in this play, that Menenius may well enough be supposed to throw up his cap in thanks to Jupiter.—Johnson.

10 In this mention of Galen there is an anachronism of near 650 years. Menenius flourished about 493 years before the birth of our Lord, Galen about 180 years after it. The word empiricitch (empiricist) in the old copy is evidently formed by the poet from empirick, a quack.

11 Volumnia answers Menenius without taking notice of his last words.—'The wounds become him.' Menenius had asked, 'Brings a victory in his pocket?' He brings it, says Volumnia, on his brow; for he comes the third time home brown-bound with the oak leaf garland, the emblem of victory. So afterwards:—

'He prov'd best man o' the field, and for his meed
Was brown-bound with the oak.'

12 Possessed is fully informed.

'I have possessed your grace of what I purpose.'
Merchant of Venice

Men. One in the neck, and two in the thigh,—there's nine that I know.¹

Vol. He had before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Mes. Now it's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave: [A Shout, and Flourish.] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him

He carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears; Death, that dark spirit, in's nerry arm doth lie; Which being advanc'd, declines; and then men die.²

A Sennet. Trumpets sound. Enter COMINIUS and TITUS LARTIUS; between them, CORIOLANUS, crowned with an oaken Garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight

Within Corioli's gates: where he hath won, With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these In honour follows, Coriolanus: Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

[Flourish.

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. No more of this, it does offend my heart: Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother,—

Cor. O!

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods For my prosperity. [Kneels.

Vol. Nay, my good soldier up

My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius, and By deed-achieving honour newly nam'd, What is it? Coriolanus, must I call thee?

But O, thy wife,—

Cor. My gracious silence,³ hail!

Would'st thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home,

That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear, And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now the gods crown thee!

Cor. And live you yet?—O my sweet lady, pardon. [To VALERIA.

Vol. I know not where to turn:—O, welcome home;

And welcome, general:—And you are welcome all.

Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep,

And I could laugh; I am light, and heavy; Welcome:

A curse begin at very root of his heart, That is not glad to see thee!—You are three, That Rome should dote on: yet, by the faith of men, We have some old crab-trees here at home, that will not

1 The old man is minutely particular: 'Seven wounds? let me see: one in the neck, two in the thigh—Nay, I am sure there are nine that I know of.'

2 Volumnia, in her boasting strain, says that her son, to kill his enemy, has nothing to do but to lift his hand and let it fall.

3 By 'gracious silence' it is probable the poet meant, 'thou whose silent tears are more eloquent and grateful to me than the clamorous applause of the rest.' Thus in Love's Cure, or The Martial Maid, by Beaumont and Fletcher:—

'A lady's tears are silent orators,
Or should be so at least, to move beyond
The honey-tongued rhetorician.'

4 By these words it should seem that Coriolanus means to say, 'Menenius is still the same affectionate friend as formerly.' So in Julius Caesar:—'For always I am Caesar.'

5 'Change of honours' is variety of honours, as change of raiment is variety of raiment. Theobald would read change.

6 A rapture anciently was synonymous with a fit or trance. Thus Torriano:—'Rato, s. a rapture or trance of the mind, or a distraction of the spirits.' This is confirmed by Steevens's quotation from the Hospital for London Follies, 1602, where gossip Luce says, 'Your darling will weep itself into a rapture, if you do not take heed.'

Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors; We call a nettle, but a nettle; and The faults of fools, but folly.

Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.⁴

Her. Give way, there, and go on.

Cor. Your hand, and yours: [To his Wife and Mother.

Ere in our own house I do shade my head, The good patricians must be visited; From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings, But with them change of honours.⁵

Vol. I have lived

To see inherited my very wishes, And the buildings of my fancy: only there Is one thing wanting, which I doubt not, but Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Knew, good mother, I had rather be their servant in my way, Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. On to the Capitol.

[Flourish. Cornets. Escort in state, as before. The Tribunes remain.

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights

Are spectacl'd to see him: Your prattling nurse Into a rapture⁶ lets her baby cry, While also chats him: the kitchen malkin⁷ pines Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy⁸ neck, Clambering the walls to eye him: stalks, bulks, windows,

Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd With variable complexions; all agreeing In earnestness to see him: seld⁹ shown flames Do press among the popular throngs, and puff To win a vulgar station;¹⁰ our veil'd dames Commit the war of white and damask,¹¹ in Their nicely-gawded cheeks, to the wanton spoil Of Phoebus' burning kisses; such a pother, As if that whatsoever god, who leads him, Were sily crept into his human powers, And gave him graceful posture.¹²

Sic. On the sudden,

I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may,

During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honours

From where he should begin, and end;¹³ but will Lose those that he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not, the commoners, for whom we stand,

But they, upon their ancient malice, will

Forget, with the least cause, these his new honours;

Which that he'll give them, make as little question As he is proud to do't.¹⁴

7 A malkin or maulkin was a kind of mop made of rags, used for sweeping ovens, &c.; a figure made of clouts to scare birds was also so called: hence it came to signify a dirty wench. The scullion very naturally takes her name from this utensil, her French title es-cuillon being only another name for a malkin.

Lockram was a kind of coarse linen.

8 Reechy is fumant with sweat or grease.

9 Seld is seldom, often so used by old writers.

10 'A vulgar station' is a common standing-place among the vulgar.

11 So in Tarquin and Lucrece:—

'The silent war of lilles and of roses,

Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field.'

12 That is, as if that god who leads him, whatsoever god he be. So in Shakespeare's 26th Sonnet:—

'Till whatsoever star that guides my moving,

Points on me graciously with fair aspect.'

13 The meaning, though obscurely expressed, is, 'He cannot carry his honours temperately from where he should begin, to where he should end.' We have the same phraseology in Cymbeline:—

'—the gap

That we shall make in time, from our hence going
And our return, to excuse.'

14 'Proud to do't,' is the same as 'proud of doing it.'

Bru. I heard him swear,
Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put
The napless¹ vesture of humility;
Nor, showing (as the manner is) his wounds
To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'Tis right.

Bru. It was his word: O, he would miss it, rather

Than carry it, but by the suit o' the gentry to him,
And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better,
Than have him held that purpose, and to put it
In execution.

Bru. 'Tis most like he will.

Sic. It shall be to him, then, as our good wills;²
A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out
To him, or our authorities. For an end,
We must suggest³ the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them: that, to his power, he would⁴

Have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders, and Disproportioned their freedoms: holding them,
In human action and capacity,
Of no more soul, nor fitness for the world,
Than camels in their war; who have their pro-
viant⁵

Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say, suggested
At some time when his soaring insolence Shall teach the people,⁶ (which time shall not want,

If he be put upon't; and that's as easy,
As to set dogs on sheep,) will be his fire
To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru. What's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'Tis thought,

That Marcius shall be consul: I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To hear him speak: matrons flung gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs,⁷
Upon him as he pass'd: the nobles banded,
As to Jove's statue; and the commons made
A shower, and thunder, with their caps and shouts;
I never saw the like.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time,
But hearts for the event.⁸

Sic. Have with you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. The Capitol. Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions.

1 Off. Come, come, they are almost here: How many stand for consulships?

2 Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of every one, Coriolanus will carry it.

1 Off. That's a brave fellow: but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. 'Faith, there have been many great men

1 i. e. threadbare.

2 i. e. 'as our advantage requires.' Wills is here a verb.

3 i. e. prompt.

4 'That to the utmost of his power he would,' &c.

5 'Than camels in their war: who have their proviant.' We should probably read the war. Proviant is proceder.

6 Theobald reads, 'Shall teach the people,' &c.
'Teach the people, may however mean, 'instruct the people in favour of our purposes.'

7 Shakespeare here attributes some of the customs of his own times to a people who were wholly unacquainted with them. This was exactly what occurred at tilings and tournaments when a combatant had distinguished himself.

8 That is, 'let us observe what passes, but keep our hearts fixed on our design of crushing Coriolanus.'

9 i. e. 'he would have warred indifferently,' &c.

10 Their adversary's or opponent.

that have flatter'd the people, who ne'er loved them;
and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground: Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition; and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see't.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he waded indifferently⁹ 'twixt doing them neither good, nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him: and leaves nothing undone, that may fully discover him their opposite.¹⁰ Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country.
And his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those,¹¹ who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonnetted,¹² without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report:
but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury; to report otherwise were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

1 Off. No more of him; he is a worthy man.
Make way, they are coming.

*A Sennet. Enter, with Lictors before them, COMI-NIUS, the Consul, MENENIUS, CORIOLANUS, many other Senators, SICIINIUS and BRUTUS.
The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.*

Men. Having determin'd of the Volces, and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains,
As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service, that Hath thus stood for his country: Therefore, please
you,

Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present consul, and last general
In our well found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Marcius Coriolanus; whom
We meet here, both to thank, and to remember
With honours like himself.

1 Sen. Speak, good Cominius:
Leave nothing out for length, and make us think,
Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out.¹³ Masters o' the people,
We do request your kindest ears: and, after,
Your loving motion toward the common body,¹⁴
To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are contented
Upon a pleasing treaty; and have hearts
Inclined to honour and advance'
The theme of our assembly.¹⁵

Bru. Which the rather
We shall be bless'd to do, if he remember
A kinder value of the people, than
He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off;¹⁶

11 As the ascent of those.

12 Bonnetted is here a verb, as bonnetter, Fr. to pull off the cap.

13 'Rather say that our means are too defective to afford an adequate reward, than our Inclinations defective to extend it toward him.'

14 i. e. your kind interposition with the common people.

15 Shakespeare was probably not aware that until the promulgation of the Lex Atinia, which is supposed to have been in the time of Quintus Metellus Macedonicus, the tribunes had not the privilege of entering the senate, but had seats placed for them near the door, on the outside of the house. But in our ancient theatres the imagination of the spectators was frequently called upon to lend its aid to illusions much more improbable than that of supposing they saw the inside and outside of the same building at once.

16 i. e. 'that is nothing to this purpose.'

I would you rather had been silent: Please you
To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly:
But yet my caution was more pertinent,
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bedfellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place.

[CORIOLANUS rises, and offers to go away.]
1 Sen. Sit, Coriolanus: never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon;
I had rather have my wounds to heal again,
Than hear say how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope
My words disbench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir: yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not: But, your
people,

I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.
Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the sun,
When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd.

[Exit CORIOLANUS.]
Men. Masters o' the people,
Your multiplying spawns how can he flatter,
(That's thousand to one good one,) when you now see,

He had rather venture all his limbs for honour,
Than one of his ears to hear it?—Proceed, Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be utter'd feebly.—It is held,
That valour is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver: if it be,
The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome,¹ he fought
Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him: he bestrid
An o'er-press'd Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee:² in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,³
He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,⁴
He lurch'd⁵ all swords o' the garland. For this last,
Before and in Corioli, let me say,
I cannot speak him home: He stopp'd the fiends;
And, by his rare example, made the coward
Turn terror into sport: as waves⁶ before

A vessel under sail, so men obey'd,
And fell below his stem: his sword (death's stamp)
Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd⁷ with dying cries: alone he enter'd
The mortal gate⁸ o' the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny, aidless came off,
And with a sudden reinforcement struck
Corioli, like a planet: now all's his:
When by-and-by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense: then straight his doubled spirit
Requicken'd what in flesh was fatigate,⁹
And to the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetual spoil: and, till we call'd
Both field and city oars, he never stood
To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man!
1 Sen. He cannot but with measure sit the honours

Which we devise him.¹⁰

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at;
And look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' the world; he covets less
Than misery¹¹ itself would give; rewards
His deeds with doing them; and is content
To spend the time, to end it.

Men. He's right noble;
Let him be call'd for.

1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Of. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still

My life, and services.
Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.¹²

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat there,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage:
please you,

That I may pass this doing.
Sen. Sir, the people
Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't:
Pray you, go fit you to the custom: and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your form.¹

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that?

Cor. To brag unto them,—Thus I did, and thus;—

1 When Tarquin, who had been expelled, raised a power to recover Rome.

2 This does not mean that he gave Tarquin a blow on the knee, but gave him such a blow as occasioned him to fall on his knee: 'ad terram duplicato poplite Turnus.'

3 It has been before mentioned that the parts of women were, in Shakespeare's time, represented by the most smooth-faced young men to be found among the players. This is a palpable anachronism: there were no theatres at Rome for the exhibition of plays until about two hundred and fifty years after the death of Coriolanus.

4 Plutarch says, 'seventeen years of service in the wars, and many and sundry battles' but from Coriolanus's first campaign to his death was only a period of eight years.

5 To lurch is to win or carry off easily the prize or stake at any game. It originally signified to devour greedily, from turco, Lat.; then to purloin, subtract, or withdraw any thing from another. Thus in Ben Jonson's Silent Woman—'You have lurch'd your friends of the better half of the garland.' Cole, in his Latin Dictionary, 1679, has 'A lurch, duplex palma facilis victoria.'

6 Thus the second folio. The first folio 'as weeds.'

7. which Malone pertinaciously adheres to. I think with Stevens, that a vessel stemming the waves is an image much more suitable to the prowess of Coriolanus, than that which Malone would substitute.

8 The cries of the slaughtered regularly followed him, as music and a dancer accompany each other.

9 The gate which was made the scene of death.

10 Weighed.

11 No honour will be too great for him; he will show a mind equal to any elevation.

12 Misery for avarice, because a miser signifies avaricious.

13 Coriolanus (as Warburton observes) was banished A. U. C. 262. But till the time of Manlius Torquatus, A. U. C. 393, the senate chose both consuls; and then the people, assisted by the seditious temper of the tribunes, got the choice of one. Shakespeare follows Plutarch, who expressly says in the Life of Coriolanus, that 'it was the custom of Rome at that time, that such as dy'd sue for any office, should for certain days before be in the market-place, only with a poor gown on their backs, and without any coat underneath, to praye the people to remember them at the day of election.'—North's Translation, p. 244.

13 'Your form' is the form which custom prescribes to you.

Show them the unmaking scars which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only:—

Men. Do not stand upon't.—
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose to them;¹ and to our noble consul
Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!
[Flourish. Then exeunt Senators.]

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sic. May they perceive his intent! He will require them,
As if he did contemn what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come, we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market-place,
I know, they do attend us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. The Forum. Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once,² if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do it³ for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them: so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous: and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once⁴ we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some an-burn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured: and truly I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one scull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent⁵ of one direct way should be at once to all the points o' the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way, do you judge, my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will, 'tis strongly wedged up in a blockhead: but if it were at liberty, 'twould, sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return for conscience sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:—You may, you may.⁶

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter CORIOLANUS and MENENIUS.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility; mark his behaviour. We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars: wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content. [Exeunt.]

Men. O, sir, you are not right: have you not known

The worthiest men have done it?

Cor. What must I say?

I pray, sir,—Plague upon 't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace:—Look, sir;—my wounds!—

I got them in my country's service, when
Some certain of your brethren roar'd, and ran
From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods!
You must not speak of that; you must desire them
To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me! Hang 'em!
I would they would forget me, like the virtues
Which our divines lose by them.⁷

Men. You'll mar all;
I'll leave you: Pray you, speak to them, I pray you,
In wholesome manner.⁸ [Exit.]

Enter two Citizens.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces,
And keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a brace.

You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to 't.

Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert!
Cor. Ay, not

Mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?

Cor. No, sir;

'Twas never my desire yet,
To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing,
We hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well, then, I pray, your price o' the consul-ship?

1 Cit. The price is, sir, to ask it kindly Cor. Kindly?

Sir, I pray let me ha't: I have wounds to show you,
Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice,
sir;

What say you?

2 Cit. You shall have it, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir:—

There is in all two worthy voices begg'd:

I have your alms; adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An 'twere to give again.—But 'tis no matter. [Exeunt two Citizens.]

Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul, I have here
the customary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma.

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not,
indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother the people, to earn a flying to every point of the compass, is a just description of the variety and inconsistency of the many-headed multitude.

6 The force of this colloquial phrase appears to be
'You may divert yourself as you please at my expense.'
It occurs again in Troilus and Cressida:—

'Hel. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine fore head.

Par. Ay, you may, you may.'

7 'I wish they would forget me, as they do the vir-tuous precepts which our divines preach to them.' This is another amusing instance of anachronism.

8 So in Hamlet:—'If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer.'

¹ 'We recommend to you, tribunes of the people, to declare our purpose to them,' namely, the appointment of Coriolanus to the consulship.

² I. e. once for all.

³ Power in the first instance here means natural power or force, and then moral power, or right. Davis has used the word with the same variety of meaning:—

'Use all thy powers that heavenly power to praise,
That gave thee power to do.'

⁴ Once signifies here one time, and not as soon as ever, which Malone takes to be its meaning. Rowe inserted when after once, which is indeed elliptically understood.

⁵ Consent is accord, agreement. To suppose that their agreement to go all one way should end in their dearer estimation of them: 'tis a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly: that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal¹ your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily! [Exeunt.]

Cor. Most sweet voices!

Better it is to die, better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve.
Why in this wolvis² gown³ should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick,⁴ that do appear,
Their needless vouches? Custom calls me to't:—
What custom wills, in all things should we do't,
The dust on antique time would lie unswept,
And mountainous error be too highly heap'd
For truth to overpeer. Rather than fool it so,
Let the high office and the honour go
To one that would do thus.—I am half through:
The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices.—

Your voices; for your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices, bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six
I have seen, and heard of; for your voices, have⁵ Done many things, some less, some more: your voices:

Indeed, I would be consul.

5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.

6 Cit. Therefore, let him be consul: The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people!

All. Amen, Amen.—

God save thee, noble consul! [Exeunt Citizens.]

Cor.

Worthy voices!

Re-enter MENENIUS, with BRUTUS and SICINIUS.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice; Remains
That, in the official marks invested, you
Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have discharg'd:⁷
The people do admit you; and are summon'd
To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir.

1 I will not strengthen or complete your knowledge.
The seal is that which ratifies or completes a writing.

2 Thus the second folio. The first folio reads 'wolvis tongue,' apparently an error of the press for tongue; the same mistake having occurred in Othello, where 'tongued consuls' is printed for 'tonged consuls.' By a wolvis gown Coriolanus means a deceitful one; in allusion to the fable of the wolf in sheep's clothing: not that he means to call himself the wolf, but merely to say, Why should I stand here playing the hypocrite, and simulating the humility that is not in my nature? Or, as Shakespeare expresses it in All's Well that Ends Well: 'To wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart.' Brutus afterwards says:—

— With a proud heart he wore

His humble weeds.

3 The poet has here given the names (as in many other places he has attributed the customs) of England to ancient Rome. Hob and Dick were names of frequent occurrence among the common people in Shakespeare's time, and generally used to signify a peasant or poor person.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself again,
Repair to the senate-house.

Men. I'll keep you company.—Will you along?

Br. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well.

[Exeunt CORIOLANUS and MENENIUS.]

He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,

'Tis warm at his heart.

Br. With a proud heart he wore

His humble weeds: Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters? have you chose this man?

1 Cit. He has our voices, sir.

Br. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves.

2 Cit. Amen, sir: To my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us, when he begg'd our voices.

3 Cit. Certainly,
He flouted us downright.

1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mock us.

2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says,
He us'd us scornfully: he should have show'd us
His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for his country.

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.

Cit. No; no man saw 'em.

[Several speak.]

3 Cit. He said, he had wounds, which he could show in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
I would be consul, says he: aged custom,⁸
But by your voices, will not so permit me;
Your voices therefore: When we granted that,
Here was,—I thank you for your voices,—thank you,—

Your most sweet voices:—now you have left your voices,

I have no further wish you:—Was not this mockery?

Sic. Why, either, were you ignorant to see't?⁹
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness

To yield your voices?

Br. Could you not have told him,

As you were lesson'd—When he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,

He was your enemy; ever spake against
Your liberties, and the charters that you bear

I the body of the weal: and now, arriving¹⁰

A place of potency, and sway of the state,

If he should still malignantly remain

Fast foe to the plebeii, your voices might

Be curses to yourselves. You should have said,

That, as his worthy deeds did claim no less

Than what he stood for; so his gracious nature

Would think upon you for your voices,¹¹ and

Translate his malice towards you into love,

Standing your friendly lord.

Sic. Thus to have said,

As you were fore-advic'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And try'd his inclination; from him pluck'd

Either his gracious promise, which you might,

4 Dr. Farmer says, perhaps we should read:—

— battles thrice six

I've seen, and you have heard of; for your voices
Done many things, &c.

Coriolanus seeming now in earnest to petition for the consulate.

5 The Romans (as Warburton observes) had but lately changed the regal for the consular government: for Coriolanus was banished the eighteenth year after the expulsion of the kings. Plutarch, as we have before seen, led the poet into the error concerning this ages custom.

6 'Were you ignorant to see't?' is 'did you was knowledge to discern it?'

7 — arriving

A place of potency.

So in the Third Part of King Henry VI. Act v. Sc. 3 >

— those powers that the queen

Hath rais'd in Gallia have arriv'd our coast.

8 I. e. 'Would retain a grateful remembrance of you,' &c.

As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;
Or else it would have gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article
Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unelected.

Bru. Did you perceive,
He did solicit you in free contempt,¹
When he did need your loves; and do you think
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies
No heart among you? Or had you tongues, to cry
Against the rectorship of judgment?

Sic. Have you,
Ere now, deny'd the asker? and, now again,
On him, that did not ask, but mock, bestow
Your suod-for tongues?²

3 Ck. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2 Ck. And will deny him:
I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1 Ck. I twice five hundred, and their friends to piece 'em.

Bru. Get you hence instantly; and tell those friends,—

They have chose a consul, that will from them take
Their liberties; make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to do so.

Sic. Let them assemble;
And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
Your ignorant election: Enforce³ his pride,
And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed;
How in his suit he scorn'd you: but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,⁴
Which most giblying, ungravelly he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay
A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labour'd (No impediment between) but that you must Cast your election on him.

Sic. Say you chose him
More after our commandment, than as guided
By your own true affections: and that, your minds
Preoccupy'd with what you rather must do
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul: Lay the fault on us.

Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures
to you,

How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued: and what stock he sprang of,
The noble house of the Marcians; from whence came
That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son,
Who, after great Hostilius, here was king:
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
That our best water brought by conduits hither;
And Censorinus, darling of the people,⁵
And nobly nam'd so, being censor twice,
Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did commend

¹ That is, in pure contempt, open and unrestrained.

² 'Your voices, to obtain which so many have hitherto solicited.'

³ Object his pride, and enforce the objection. So afterwards:—

'Enforce him with his envy to the people.'

⁴ I. e. carriage. So in Othello:—

'And portance in my travels' history.'

⁵ Pope supplied this verse, which the context evidently requires, and which is warranted by the narration in Plutarch, from whence this passage is taken:—'The house of the Marcians at Rome was of the number of the patricians, out of which sprung many noble personages, whereof Ancus Marcius was one, King Numa's daughter's son, who was King of Rome after Tullius Hostilius. Of the same house were Publius and Quintus, who brought to Rome their best water they had by conduits. Censorinus came of that familie, that was so surnamed because the people had chosen him censor twice.' Publius and Quintus and Censorinus were not

To your remembrances: but you have found,
Scaling⁶ his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say, you ne'er had done't,
(Harp on that still,) but by our putting on:
And presently, when you have drawn your number,
Repair to the Capitol.

Ck. We will so: almost all [Several speak.
Repent in their election. [Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. Let them go on;
This mutiny were better put in hazard,
Than stay, past doubt, for greater:
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sic. To the Capitol:
Come, we'll be there before the stream of the people,
And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,
Which we have goaded onward. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I. The same. A Street. Cornets. Enter
CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, TITUS
LARTIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

Cor. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head?

Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was, which caus'd

Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then the Voices stand but as at first;
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon us again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul,⁷ so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?

Lart. On safeguard⁸ he came to me; and did curse

Against the Voices, for they had so vilely
Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? what?

Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword:
That, of all things upon the earth, he hated
Your person most: that he would pawn his fortunes
To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?

Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish, I had cause to seek him there
To oppose his hatred fully.—Welcome home {To LARTIUS.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues of⁹ the common mouth. I do despise
them;

For they do prank¹⁰ them in authority,
Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Bru. It will be dangerous to Go on: no further.

the ancestors of Coriolanus, but his descendants. Caius Martius Rutilius did not obtain the name of Censorinus till the year of Rome 487; and the Marcian waters were not brought to the city by aqueducts till the year 613, near 350 years after the death of Coriolanus. Shakspeare has confounded the ancestors and posterity of Coriola-nus together.

⁶ That is, weighing his past and present behaviour.

⁷ I. e. our incitation. So in King Lear:—

'—you protect this course,

And put it on by your allowance.'

⁸ Shakspeare has here again given the usage of England to Rome. In his time the title of lord was given to many officers of state who were not peers, as lords of the council, lord ambassador, lord general, &c.

⁹ That is, with a convoy, a guard appointed to protect him.

¹⁰ So in Measure for Measure, Act II. Sc. 2:—

'Drest in a little brief authority.'

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?
Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the commons?

Bru. Commons, no.

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

1 Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place.

Bru. The people are incens'd against him.

Sic. Stop,
Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?—
Must these have voices, that can yield them now,
And straight disclaim their tongues?—What are your offices?

You, being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?

Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,
To curb the will of the nobility:—

Suffer it, and live with such as cannot rule,
Nor ever will be rul'd.

Bru. Call't not a plot:
The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;
Scandal'd the suppliants for the people; call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Bru. How! I inform them!

Cor. You are like to do such business.

Bru. Not unlike,

Each way to better yours.¹

Cor. Why then should I be consul? By you clouds,

Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow tribune.

Sic. You show too much of that,
For which the people stir: If you will pass
To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;
Or never be so noble as a consul,
Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abus'd:—Set on.—This paltring²

Becomes not Rome: Nor has Coriolanus
Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely³
I' the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!
This was my speech, and I will speak't again;—

Men. Not now, not now.

1 Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My nobler friends,
I crave their pardons:—

For the mutable, rank-scented many,⁴ let them Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves: I say again,
In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle⁵ of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number;
Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that
Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

1 Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How! no more?

As for my country I have shed my blood,
Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those measons,⁶
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought
The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak o' the people,
As if you were a god to punish, not
A man of their inhumanity.

Sic. 'Twere well

We let the people know't.

Men. What, what? his choler?

Cor. Choler!

Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Jove, 'twould be my mind.

Sic. It is a mind,

That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.

Cor. Shall remain!—

Hear you this Triton of the minnows? mark you
His absolute shall?

Com. 'Twas from the canon.

Cor. Shall!

O good,⁷ but most unwise patricians, why,
You grave, but reckless⁸ senators, have you thus Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
That with his peremptory shall, being but
The horn and noise⁹ o' the monsters, wants not spirit

To say, he'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? If he have power,
Then vail your ignorance:¹¹ if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. If you are learned,
Be not as common fools; if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,
If they be senators: and they are no less,
When both your voices blended, the greatest taste
Most palates theirs.¹² They choose their magistrates;

And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece! By Jove himself,
It makes the consuls base: and my soul aches,
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
The one by the other.¹³

Com. Well—on to the market place.

Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth
The corn o' the storehouse gratis, as 'twas us'd
Sometime in Greece,——

Men. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. (Though these the people had more absolute power,)

I say they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why, shall the people give
One, that speaks thus, their voice?

Cor. I'll give my reasons,
More worthier than their voices. They know, the corn

Was not our recompense; resting well assur'd
They ne'er did service for't: Being press'd to the war,

Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,

1 I. e. likely to provide better for the security of the commonwealth than you (whose business it is) will do. To which the reply is pertinent, 'Why then should I be consul?'

2 Paltering is shuffling.

3 I. e. treacherously. The metaphor is from a rub at bowls.

4 I. e. the populace.

5 Cockle is a weed which grows up with and chokes the corn. The thought is from North's Plutarch:—'Moreover, he said, that they nourished against themselves the naughty seed and cockle of insolency and sedition, which had been sowed and scattered abroad among the people,' &c.

6 Mazelet, or mesell, is the old term for a leper, from the Fr maelle

7 So in Loves Labours Lost:—'That base minnow of thy mirth.'

8 The old copy has 'O God, but,' &c. The emendation was made by Theobald.

9 Careless.

10 'The horn and noise,' alluding to his having called him Triton of the minnows before.

11 'If this man has power, let the ignorance that gave him vail or bow down before him.'

12 'The plebeians are no less than senators, when the voices of the senate and the people being blended, the predominant taste of the compound smacks more of the populace than the senate.'

13 'The mischief and absurdity of what is called imperium in imperio is here finely expressed,' says Warburton

That would not thread¹ the gates: this kind of service

Did not deserve corn gratis: being i² the war, Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd Most valour, spoke not for them: The accusation Which they have often made against the senate, All cause unborn, could never be the native³ Of our so frank donation. Well, what then? How shall this bosom multiplied⁴ digest The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express What's like to be their words:—We did request it; We are the greater poll, and in true fear They gave us our demands:—Thus we debase The nature of our seats, and make the rabble Call our cares, fears: which will in time break ope The locks o' the senate, and bring in the crews To peck the eagles.—

Men. Come, enough.

Bru. Enough, with over measure.

Cor. No, take more: What may be sworn by, both divine and human, Seal what I said withal!—This double worship,—Where one part does disdain with cause, the other Insult without all reason; where gentry, title, wisdom

Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no Of general ignorance,—it must omit Real necessities, and give way the while To unstable slightness: purpose so barr'd, it follows,

Nothing is done to purpose: Therefore, beseech you,—

You that will be less fearful than discreet; That love the fundamental part of state, More than you doubt⁵ the change o' it; that prefer

A noble life before a long, and wish To jump⁶ a body with a dangerous physic That's sure of death without it,—at once pluck out The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state Of that integrity which should become it;⁷ Not having the power to do the good it would, For the ill which doth control it.

Bru. He has said enough.

Sic. He has spokes like a traitor, and shall answer

As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee!

What should the people do with these bald tribunes?

On whom depending, their obedience falls To the greater bench: In a rebellion, When what's not meet, but what must be was law, Then were they chosen: in a better hour, Let what is meet, be said it must be meet,⁸ And throw their power i⁹ the dust.

Bru. Manifest treason.

Sic. This a consul? no.

Bru. The Ædiles, ho!—Let him be apprehended.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit Brutus.] is whose name, myself

Attach thee, as a traitorous innovator, A foe to the public weal: Obey, I charge thee, And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Sen. & Pat. We'll surely him.

Com. Aged sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments.¹⁰

Sic. Help, ye citizens.

Re-enter Brutus, with the Ædiles, and a Rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here's he, that would Take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, Ædiles.

Cit. Down with him, down with him!

[Several speak.]

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons!

[They all bustle about CORIOLANUS.]

Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what ho!

Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Cit. Peace, peace, peace; stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath; Confusions¹¹ near: I cannot speak:—You, tribunes

To the people,—Coriolanus, patience:—

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me, people;—Peace.

Cit. Let's hear our tribune:—Peace. Speak, speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties;

Marcus would have all from you; Marcus,

Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fye, fye, fye!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

1 Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.

Sic. What is the city, but the people?

Cit. True,

The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd

The people's magistrates.

Cit. You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Cor. That is the way to lay the city flat,

To bring the roof to the foundation;

And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death.

Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,

Or let us lose it:—We do here pronounce,

Upon the part o' the people, in whose power

We were elected theirs, Marcus is worthy

Of present death.

Sic. Therefore, lay hold of him;

Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence

Into destruction cast him.

Bru. Ædiles, seize him.

Men. Yield, Marcus, yield.

Cit. Hear me one word.

Beseech you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Ædi. Peace, peace.

Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's friend,

And temperately proceed to what you would

Thus violently redress.

Bru. Sir, those cold ways

That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous

Where the disease is violent:—Lay hands upon him,

And bear him to the rock.

1 To thread the gates is to pass through them. So in King Lear:—'Threading dark-eyed night.'

2 Native, if it be not a corruption of the text, must be put for native cause, the producer or bringer forth. Mason's proposed emendation of motive would be very plausible, were it not that the poet seems to have intended a kind of antithesis between cause unborn and native cause.

3 'This bosom multiplied,' is this multitudinous bosom, the bosom of that many-headed monster the people.

4 'No, let me add this further, and may every thing divine and human that can give force to an oath, bear witness to the truth of what I shall conclude with.'

5 To doubt is to fear.

6 To jump a body is apparently 'to risk or hazard a body.' So in Holland's Pliny. b xiv ch. v. p. 319:—

'If we look for good success in our cure by ministering hellebore, &c. for certainly it putteth the patient to a jump or great hazard.'

7 'Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state Of that integrity which should become it.'

8 Judgment is the faculty by which right is distinguished from wrong. Integrity is in this place soundness, uniformity, consistency.

9 'Let it be said by you that what is meet to be done, must be meet, i. e. shall be done and put an end at once to the tribunician power, which was established when irresistible violence, not a regard to propriety, directed the legislature.'

10 'here's a stay, That shakes the rotten carcase of old death Out of his rage!'

K'—John.

Cor. No; I'll die here

[Drawing his Sword.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting;
Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me.

Men. Down with that sword;—Tribunes, withdraw awhile.

Br. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Help, help, Marcius! help,
You that be noble; help him, young, and old!

Cit. Down with him, down with him!

[In this Mutiny, the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and the People, are all beat in.

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone away,
All will be naught else.

2 Sen. Get you gone.

Cor. Stand fast;
We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

Sen. The gods forbid!
I prythee, noble friend, home to thy house;
Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 'tis a sore upon us,
You cannot tent yourself: Begone, 'beseech you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us.

Cor. I would they were barbarians (as they are,
Though in Rome liter'd,) not Romans, (as they are
not,

Though call'd it the porch o' the Capitol.)

Men. Be gone;

Put not your worthy rage into your tongue;
One time will owe another.¹

Cor. On fair ground,
I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself
Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic;
And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands
Against a falling fabric.—Will you hence,
Before the tag² return? whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear.

Men. Pray you, begone:
I'll try whether my old wit be in request
With those that have but little; this must be patch'd
With cloth of any colour.

Com. Nay, come away.

[Exeunt Com. Men. and others.

1 Pat. This man has marr'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for his power to thunder. His heart's his mouth;

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;
And, being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the name of death. [A noise within.
Here's goodly work!

2 Pat. I would they were a-bed!

Men. I would they were in Tyber!—What, the vengeance,
Could he not speak them fair?

Re-enter Brutus and Sicinius, with the Rabble.

Sic. Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes,—

Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial

¹ 'One time will owe another.' I think Menenius means to say, 'Another time will offer when you may be quits with them.' There is a common proverbial phrase, 'One good turn deserves another.'

² The lowest of the populace, tag, rag, and bobtail.

³ We should probably read:—

'He shall, be sure on!'

⁴ This signal for general slaughter was 'not to be pronounced with impunity, but by authority: 'Item que nul sol ait hardy de crier haret, sur peine d'avoir la test coupee.'—Ordonances des Battailes, 9 R. II. Art. 10.
Again, in the Statutes and Ordinances of Warre, printed by Fynson, 1513:—'That no man be so hardy to cry
haret, or any other word, of him that is so founde beguner,

Than the severity of the public power,
Which he so sets at nought.

1 Cit.

He shall well know,
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands

Cit.

He shall, sure on't.³

[Several speak together

Men. Sir,—

Sic. Peace.

Men. Do not cry, havoc,⁴ where you should but hunt

With modest warrant.

Sic.

Sir, how comes it, that you
Have help to make this rescue?

Men.

Hear me speak.—

As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults.

Sic.

Consul!—what consul?

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Br.

He a consul!

Cit. No, no, no, no, no.

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good people,

I may be heard, I'd crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm,⁵
Than so much loss of time.

Sic.

Speak briefly, then,

For we are peremptory, to despatch

This viperous traitor: to eject him hence,

Were but one danger; and, to keep him here,

Our certain death; therefore it is decreed,

He dies to-night.

Men.

Now, the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserved children is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own!

Sic. He's a disease, that must be cut away.

Men. O, he's a limb, that has but a disease;
Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.

What has he done to Rome, that's worthy death?

Killing our enemies? The blood he hath lost,

(Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath,

By many an ounce,) he dropp'd it for his country:

And, what is left, to lose it by his country,

Were to us all, that do't, and suffer it,

A brand to the end o' the world.

Sic.

This is clean harm.⁶

Br. Merely awry: when he did love his country,

It honour'd him.

Men.

The service of the foot
Being once engag'd, is not then respected
For what before it was?

Br.

We'll hear no more:—

Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence;

Least his infection, being of catching nature,

Spread further.

Men.

One word more, one word.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find

The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will, too late,

Tie leaden pounds to his heels. Proceed by process;

Lost parties (as he is belov'd) break out,

And sack great Rome with Romans.

Br. If it were so,—

Sic.

What do ye talk?

Have we not had a taste of his obedience?

Our Ædiles smote? ourselves resisted?—Come:—

to dye therefore, and the remenant to be emprisoned and their bodies to be punished at the kinges wyl.'

⁵ 'The which shall turn you to no further harm.'
This singular expression, occurs again in The Tempest:—

'— my heart bleeds

'To think o' the teen that I have turn'd you to.'

⁶ Deserved for deserving; as delighted for delighting in Othello, and other similar changes of termination in words of like ending.

⁷ Harm is crooked. 'Clean contrarie, quite harmlesse, a contrepoll,' says Coigrave: and the same worthy lexicographer explains 'a croere, cross, cleane harmlesse.'

⁸ I.e. absolutely.

Men. Consider this;—He has been bred i' the wars

Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In boulded language; meal and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
(In peace,) to his utmost peril.

1 Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody; and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer:
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.

Sic. Meet on the market-place:—We'll attend
you there:

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you:
Let me desire your company. [To the Senators.]

He must come,
Or what is worse will follow.

1 Sen. Pray you, let's to him.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room in Coriolanus's House.

Enter CORIOLANUS, and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears; present
me
oath on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;¹
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still
Be thus to them.

Enter VOLUMNIA.

1 Pat. You do the nobler.
Cor. I muse,² my mother

Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats; to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance³ stood up
To speak of peace, or war. I talk of you;

[To VOLUMNIA.]
Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me
False to my nature? Rather say, I play
The man I am.

Vol. O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.
Vol. You might have been enough the man you are,
With striving less to be so: Lesser had been
The thwartings⁴ of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.
Vol. Ay, and burn too.

1 Breaking a criminal on the wheel was a punishment unknown to the Romans; and, except in the single instance of Metius Suffetius, according to Livy, dismemberment by being torn to death by wild horses never took place in Rome. Shakespeare attributes to them the cruel punishments of a later age.

2 I muse, that is, I wonder.

3 Ordinance is here used for rank.

4 The old copy reads 'things of your disposition.' The emendation is Theobald's.

5 Old copy, 'stoop to the heart.' Theobald made the correction. Herd being anciently heard, the error easily crept in. Coriolanus thus describes the people in another passage:—

'You shames of Rome, you herd of——'

6 'Except in cases of extreme necessity, when your resolute and noble spirit, however commendable at other times, ought to yield to the occasion.'

7 'Why urge you this?' So in King Henry VIII:—
'If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy.'

8 The word so, which is wanting in the first folio, was supplied in the second. Malone contends for the

Enter MENENIUS, and Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough:
Something too rough;
You must return, and mend it.

1 Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray be counsel'd:
I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger,
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman:
Before he should thus stoop to the herd,⁴ but that
The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic
For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,
Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.
Cor. Well,
What then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.
Cor. For them!—I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;
Though therein you can never be too noble,
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
P' the war do grow together:⁵ Grant that, and tell

me,
In peace, what each of them by th' other lose,
That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!
Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour, in your wars, to seem
The same you are not, (which, for your best ends,
You adopt your policy,) how is it less, or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war; since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force⁶ you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you to,⁷
But with such words that are but rotes⁸ in
Your tongue, though but bastards, and syllables
Of no allowance, to your bosom's truth.⁹
Now, this no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in¹¹ a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood.—

I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd,
I should do so in honour: I am in this,
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;
And you will rather show our general lowts:¹²
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want¹³ might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!
Come, go with us; speak fair: you may save so,
Not¹⁴ what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I pry'thee now, my son,
Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;

old reading, and Steevens says that we should perhaps read:—

'Nor by the matter which your heart prompts in you' Without some additional syllable the line, as it stands in the first folio, is defective.

9 The old copy reads rotes. Mr. Boswell says, perhaps it should be rooted: we have no example of rotes for got by rote, but it is much in Shakespeare's manner of forming expressions.

10 I. e. of no approbation. Allowance has no connection with the subsequent words, 'to your bosom's truth.' The construction is 'though but bastards to your bosom's truth, not the lawful issues of your heart.' The words 'and syllables of no allowance,' are put in opposition with bastards, and are as it were parenthetical.

11 See Act i. Sc. 2.

12 Common clowns.

13 I. e. the want of their loves.

14 Not seems here to signify not only.

And thus far having stretch'd it (here be with them.)

Thy knee bussing the stones (for in such business Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant More learned than the ears,) waving thy head, Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,¹ Now humble, as the ripest mulberry, That will not hold the handling: Or, say to them, Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils, Hast not the soft way,² which, thou dost confess, Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim. In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far As thou hast power, and person.

Men. This but done, Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours: For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free As words to little purpose.

Vol. Pr'ythee now, Go, and be rul'd: although, I know, thou hadst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf, Than flatter him in a bower.³ Here is Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. I have been i' the market-place: and, sir, 'tis fit

You make strong party, or defend yourself By calmness, or by absence; all's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. I think, 'twill serve, if he Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will:—Pr'ythee, now, say, you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarb'd⁴ sconce? Must I

With my base tongue, give to my noble heart A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do't: Yet were there but this single plot⁵ to lose, This mould of Marc'us, they to dust should grind it, And throw it against the wind.—To the market-place:—

You have put me now to such a part, which⁶ never

I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, sweet son; as thou hast said, My praises made thee first a soldier, so, To have my praise for this, perform a part Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't: Away, my disposition, and possess me Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd, Which quired⁷ with my drum, into a pipe Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice That babies lull asleep! The smiles of knaves Fent⁸ in my cheeks; and schoolboys' tears take up The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd knees,

1 It is probably from want of a more complete acquaintance with the rules of grammar which guided our ancestors, that the use they made of the pronouns appears to us anomalous. Which here, as Malone observes, is to be understood as if the poet had written 'It often,' &c. Steevens pertinaciously insists upon attributing these seeming anomalies of ancient grammar to the incorrectness of ancient printers, whose press-work, he supposes, seldom received any correction; but those who are familiar with the manuscripts of Shakspeare's age will at once acquit the learned and useful body of typographers.

2 Thus in Othello, folio ed. 1623:—

—Rude am I in speech,

And little bless'd with the soft phrase of peace;

And little of this great world can I speak,

More than pertains to feats of broils and battles.

3 Bower was the ancient term for a chamber. Spenser, speaking of the Temple, Prothalamion, st. 8, says:—

'Here now the studious lawyers have their bowers.'

4 Unbarb'd is unarmed, unaccoutred, uncovered. Cotgrave says that a barbute was a ridinghood, or a montero or close hood, and that it also signified the beaver of a helmet. It was probably used for any kind of covering that concealed the head and face. Thus in

Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like him That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't: Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth, And, by my body's action, teach my mind A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice then: To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour Than thou of them. Come all to ruin: let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear Thy dangerous stoutness;⁹ for I mock at death With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list. Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'd'st it from me; But owe'st¹⁰ thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content; Mother, I am going to the market-place; Chide me no more. I'll mountbank¹¹ their loves, Cog their hearts from them, and come home belov'd Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going: Commend me to my wife. I'll return consul; Or never trust to what my tongue can do I' the way of flattery, further.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit. Com. Away, the tribunes do attend you: arm yourself

To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd With accusations, as I bear, more strong Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is, mildly:—Pray you, let us go, Let them accuse me by invention, I Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly. Cor. Well, mildly be it, then; mildly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The same. The Forum. Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Br. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannical power: If he evade us there, Enforce him with his envy¹² to the people; And that the spoil, got on the Antiates, Was ne'er distributed.—

Enter an Ædile.

What, will he come?

Æd. He's coming.

Br. How accompanied?

Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators That always favoured him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue Of all the voices that we have procur'd, Set down by the poll?

Æd. I have; 'tis ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither. And when they hear me say, it shall be so P the right and strength of the commons, be it either For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them, If I say, fine, cry fine; if death, cry death; Insisting on the old prerogative And power, i' the truth o' the cause.

Æd. I shall inform them.

Chaucer, Troilus and Cressida, II. v. 110, Pandarus says to Cressida:—

'Do way your barbe and show your face bare.'

Where Speght explains barbe a mask or visard; Mr. Hawkins, a veil or covering; and Mr. Tyrwhitt, a hood or muffler. It should be remembered that a barbed steed was an accoutred steed, or one covered with trappings.

5 Plot is piece, portion, applied to a piece of earth, and here elegantly transferred to the body, carcass.

6 Some of the modern editors substituted as for which here. Malone has shown that this was Shakspeare's usual phraseology. And Horne Tooke tells us why as and which were convertible words. See note on Julius Cæsar, Act I. Sc. 2.

7 I. e. 'which played in concert with my drum. So in The Merchant of Venice:—

'Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims.'

8 To tent is to dwell, to take up residence.

9 The meaning appears to be, 'Go, do thy worst; let me rather feel the utmost extremity that thy pride can bring upon us than live thus in fear of thy dangerous obstinacy.'

10 I. e. own.

11 Enforce his envy, I. e. offset his hatred.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.

Ed.

Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint,
When we shall hap to give 't them.

Bru.

Go about it.—

[Exit Ædile.]

Put him to choler straight: He hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth
Of contradiction: Being once chaf'd, he cannot Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart; and that is there, which looks
With us to break his neck.²

Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by the volume.³—The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supplied with worthy men! plant love among us!
Throng our large temples with the shows of peace,
And not our streets with war!

I Sen.

Amen, amen!

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter Ædile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people.

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Æd. List to your tribunes; audience: Peace I say.

Both Tri. Well, say.—Peace, ho.

Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this present?

Must all determine here?

Sic.

I do demand,

If you submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and are content
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you?

Cor.

I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says, he is content:
The warlike service he has done, consider;
Think on the wounds his body bears, which show
Like graves 't the holy churchyard.

Cor.

Scratches with briars,

Scars to move laughter only.

Men.

Consider further,

That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier: Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy you.

Com.

Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter,
That being pass'd for consul with full voice,
I am so dishonour'd, that the very hour
You take it off again?

Sic.

Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 'tis true, I ought so.

Sic. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take

From Rome all season'd⁴ office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;
For which, you are a traitor to the people.

1 i.e. his full part or share, as we should now say his pennyworth of contradiction. So in Romeo and Juliet—

2 ——— You take your pennyworth [of sleep] now.

3 'The sentiments of Coriolanus's heart are our coadjutors, and look to have their share in promoting his destruction.'

4 'Will bear being called a knave as often as would fill out a volume.'

5 'Do not take his rougher accents for malicious sounds, but rather for such as become a soldier, than spite or malign you.' See the first note on this scene, Act I. Sc. vii.

6 i.e. wisely tempered office, established by time.

7 Grasp'd. So in Macbeth—

'Come let me clutch thee'

Cor. How! Traitor?

Men.

Nay; temperately: Your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the people!
Call me their traitor!—Thou injurious tribune!
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutch'd⁵ as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,
Thou liest, unto thee, with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Sic.

Mark you this, people?

Cit. To the rock; to the rock with him!

Sic.

Peace.

We need not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal, and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

Bru.

But since he hath

Serv'd well for Rome,——

Cor. What do you prate of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor.

You?

Men.

Is this

The promise that you made your mother?

Com.

Know,

I pray you,——

Cor.

I'll know no further:

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, slaying; Pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
Nor check my courage for what they can give,
To have 't with saying, Good morrow.

Sic.

For that he has

(As much as in him lies) from time to time
Envied⁷ against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power: as⁸ now at last Given hostile strokes, and that not⁹ in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it; In the name o' the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we,
Even from this instant, banish him our city;
In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates: I¹⁰ the people's name,
I say, it shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so, it shall be so; let him away.
He's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Com.

Hear me, my masters, and my common
friends;——

Sic. He's sentenc'd: no more hearing.

Com.

Let me speak:

I have been consul, and can show from¹⁰ Rome,
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy, and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate,¹¹ her womb's increase,
And treasure of my loins; then if I would Speak that——

Sic.

We know your drift: Speak what!

Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is ba-nish'd,

As enemy to the people, and his country.
It shall be so.

7 Showed hatred.

8 As may here be a misprint for has, or and; or it may signify as well as; such elliptical modes of expression are not uncommon in Shakspeare. We have as apparently for as soon as in All's Well that Ends Well.

9 Not is here again used for not only. It is thus used in the New Testament, 1 Thess. iv. 8:—

'He therefore that sleepeth, sleepeth not man, but God.'

10 i.e. received in her service, or on her account.
Theobald substituted for, and supported his emendation
by these passages:—

'To banish him that struck more blows for Rome.'

Again:—

'Good man! the wounds that he does bear for Rome'

11 'I love my country beyond the rate at which I value my dear wife,' &c.

Cil. It shall be so, it shall be so.

Cor. You common cry¹ of curs! whose breath I hate

As reek o'the rotten fens;² whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;³
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till, at length,
Your ignorance, (which finds not, till it feels,) Making but reservation of yourselves,⁴ (Still your own foes,) deliver you, as most Abated⁵ captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt CORIOLANUS, COMINIUS, MENENIUS, Senators, and Patricians.]

Æd. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!

Cil. Our enemy's banish'd! he is gone! Hoo! hoo!

[The People shout, and throw up their Caps.]

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city.

Cil. Come, come, let us see him out at gates:
come:—

The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell:—
the best!

With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd
To say, extremity⁶ was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear;
That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Show'd⁷ mastership in floating; fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded,
craves

A noble cunning:⁸ you were us'd to load me
With precepts, that would make invincible
The heart that could⁹ not then.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I prythee, woman,—

Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in

Rome,
And occupations perish!

¹ Cry here signifies a pack. So in a subsequent scene:

— You have made good work,
You and your cry.

A cry of hounds was the old term for a pack.

² So in the Tempest:

Seb. As if it had lungs, and rattled ones.

Ant. Or, as twere, perum'd by a fen.

³ 'When it was cast in Diogenes' teeth that the Sino-penes had banished him Pontus; yes, said he, I them.' We have the same thought in King Richard II.:

'Think not the king did banish thee,
But thou the king.'

⁴ Thus in the old copy. Malone, following Capell's meddling, changed this line to—

'Making not reservation of yourselves.' &c.

and attempted to defend his reading by a wordy argument, which shows that he did not understand the passage. Dr. Johnson's explanation of the text is as correct as his subsequent remark upon it is judicious. Coriolanus 'imprecates upon the base plebeians that they may still retain the power of banishing their defenders, till their undiscerning folly, which can foresee no consequences, leave none in the city but themselves; so that for want of those capable of conducting their defence, they may fall an easy prey to some nation who may conquer them

Cor.

What, what, what!

I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius,
Droop not; adieu:—Farewell, my wife! my mother!
I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime general,
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hard'ning spectacles; tell these sad women,
'Tis fond¹⁰ to wail inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them.—My mother, you wot
well,

My hazards still have been your solace; and Believe't not lightly, (though I go alone
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen,) your son

Will, or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautious¹¹ baits and practices.

Vol.

My first¹² son,
Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee a while: Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure¹³ to each chance
That starts i'the way before thee.

Cor.

O the gods!

Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us,
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needier.

Cor.

Fare ye well;—

Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full
Of the wars' surfeits, to go rove with one
That's yet unbruised: bring me but out at gate.—
Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch,¹⁴ when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men.

That's worthy

As any ear can hear. Come, let's not weep.—
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
I'd with thee every foot.

Cor.

Give me thy hand:—

Come.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Street near the Gate.

Enter SICIPIUS, BRUTUS, and an Ædile.

Sic. Bid them all home: he's gone, and we'll no further.—

without a struggle. If we were to read as Malone would have us—

'Making not reservation of yourselves,' it would imply that the people banished themselves, after having banished their defenders.

⁵ Abated, is overthrown, depressed. To abate castles and houses, &c. is to overthrow them. See Blount's Glossography, in voca. To abate the courage of a man was to depress or diminish it.

⁶ Horace, speaking of the Roman mob, says:—

'Bellua mulcorum est capium.'

⁷ This is the reading of the second folio; the first folio reads, extremities was, &c.

⁸ 'When fortune strikes her hardest blows, to be wounded, and yet continue calm, requires a noble wisdom.' Cunning is often used in this sense by Shakespeare. Johnson reprehends Warburton for misinterpreting the poet's words, and has himself mistaken the meaning of this.

⁹ Foolish.

¹⁰ Cautious here means insidious.

¹¹ I. e. no less.

¹² Exposure; for which it is probably a typographical error, as we have no other instance of the word exposed here.

¹³ I. e. of true metal. The metaphor from the touchstone for trying metals, is common in Shakespeare

The nobility are vex'd, who, we see have sided
In his behalf.

Br. Now we have shown our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a doing.

Sic. Bid them home:
Say, their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Br. Dismiss them home.
[Exit Edile.]

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILLIA, and MENENIUS.

Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.

Br. Why?

Sic. They say, she's mad.

Br. They have ta'en note of us:
Keep on your way.

Vol. O, you're well met: The hoarded plague
O' the gods
Requite your love!

Men. Peace, peace; be not so loud.

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear,—

Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone!

[To Brutus.]
Vir. You shall stay too: [To Sic.] I would, I had the power

To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you manking?

Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame?—Note but this fool.—

Was not a man my father? Hadst thou foxship?
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words?

Sic. O blessed heavens!

Vol. More noble blows, than ever thou wise
words;

And for Rome's good.—I'll tell thee what:—yet go:—

Nay, but thou shalt stay too:—I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then?

Vir. What then?

He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards, and all.—

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men. Come, come, peace.

Sic. I would he had continu'd to his country,
As he began; and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made.

Br. I would he had.

Vol. I would he had! 'Twas you incens'd the rabble:

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Br. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone:

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear
this:

As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The meanest house in Rome: so far, my son,
(This lady's husband here, this, do you see,) Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Br. Well, well, we'll leave you.

Sic. Why stay we to be baited
With one that wants her wits?

Vol. Take my prayers with you.—
I would the gods had nothing else to do,
[Exeunt Tribunes.]

But to confirm my curses! Could I meet them
But once a day, it would unclasp my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

Men. You have told them home,
And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup
with me?

Vol. Anger's my meat; I sup upon myself,
And so shall starve with feeling.—Come, let's go.
Leave this faint pining, and lament as I do,
In anger, Juno-like. Come, come, come.

Men. Fye, fye, fye! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Highway between Rome and Antium.
Enter a Roman and a Voice meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir, and you know me:
your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vol. It is so, sir: truly I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against them: know you me yet?

Vol. Nicanor? No.

Rom. The same, sir.

Vol. You had more beard, when I last saw you;
but your favour is well appeay'd* by your tongue.
What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volcian state, to find you out there: You have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrection: the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vol. Hath been! Is it ended then? Our state thinks not so; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again. For the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness, to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus banished?

Rom. Banished, sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence.
Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you: You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vol. A most royal one: the centurions, and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment,* and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vol. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.]

mon in our elder language than well appeay'd, i. e. satisfied, contented. The Volcian means to say, 'Your countenance is altered, but your voice perfectly satisfies me.'

'They by thy help: but sin ne'er gives a foe,
'He gains comes; and thou art well appeay'd,'
As well to hear as grant what he hath said.'

'Glad in his heart, and inly well appeay'd,'
That to his court so great a lord was brought.'

Fairfax Tasso ix. 6

* i. e. taken into pay.

1 Mankind is fierce, ferocious. That it had this sense is evident, because we sometimes find it applied to a stubborn or ferocious animal. Volumnia chooses to understand it as meaning a human creature.

2 i. e. mean cunning.

3 The old copy reads, 'Your favour is well appeay'd by your tongue.' For the emendation in the text I am answerable. Warburton proposed appeay'd; Johnson, appeay'd; Stevens, appeay'd; and Malone thought the old reading might be right. No phrase is more com-

SCENE IV. Antium. Before Aufidius's House.
Enter CORIOLANUS, in mean Apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium: City,
 'Tis I that made thy widows; many an heir
 Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars
 Have I heard groan, and drop: then know me not;
 Least that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,

Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle'slay me.—Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will;

Where great Aufidius lies: Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state,

At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, beseech you?

Cit. This, here, before you.

Cor. Thank you sir, farewell.

[Exit Citizen.]

O, world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
 Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise
 Are still together, who twin, as 'twere, in love
 Unseparable, shall within this hour,
 On a dissension of a doit, break out
 To bitterest enmity; so, fellest foes,
 Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep

To take the one the other, by some chance,
 Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear
 friends,

And interjoin their issues. So with me:—
 My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon
 This enemy town.—I'll enter: if he slay me,
 He does fair justice; if he give me way,
 I'll do his country service. [Exit.]

SCENE V. The same. A Hall in Aufidius's House. Music within. Enter a Servant.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here!
 I tunk our fellows are asleep. [Exit.]

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Cotus! my master calls for him.
 Cotus! [Exit.]

Enter CORIOLANUS.

Cor. A goodly house: the feast smells well:
 but I
 Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you: Pray, go to the door.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment,
 In being Coriolanus.¹

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away? Get you away.

Cor. Now thou art troublesome.

2 Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servant. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow's this?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o' the house: Pr'ythee, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow?
 Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your hearth.

3 Serv. What are you?

1 'This fine picture of common friendship is an artful introduction to the sudden league which the poet makes him enter into with Aufidius, and a no less artful apology for his commencing enemy to Rome.'—Warburton.
 2 I. e. in having derived that surname from the sack of Corioli.

Cor. A gentleman.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you; pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function, go!

And batten³ on cold bits. [Pushes him away.]

3 Serv. What, will you not? Pr'ythee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

2 Serv. And I shall. [Exit.]

3 Serv. Where dwellest thou?

Cor. Under the canopy.

3 Serv. Under the canopy?

Cor. Ay.

3 Serv. Where's that?

Cor. 'T' the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. 'T' the city of kites and crows?—What an ass it is!—Then thou dwellest with daws too?

Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

3 Serv. How, sir! Do you meddle with my master?

Cor. Ay; 'tis an honest service than to meddle with thy mistress:

Thou prat'st, and prat'st; serve with thy trencher,
 hence! [Beats him away.]

Enter AUFIDIUS and the second Servant.

Auf. Where is this fellow?

2 Serv. Here, sir; I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auf. Whence comest thou? what wouldst thou?
 Thy name?

Why speak'st not? Speak, man: What's thy name?

Cor. If, Tullus, [Unwillingly.]

Not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not think me the man I am, necessity
 Commands me name myself.

Auf. What is thy name?
[Servants retire.]

Cor. A name unmusical to the Volcians' ears,
 And harsh in sound to thee.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
 Bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn,
 Thou show'st a noble vessel: What's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown: Know'st thou me yet?

Auf. I know thee not:—Thy name?

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done
 To thee particularly, and to all the Volces,
 Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may
 My surname, Coriolanus: The painful service,
 The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
 Shed for my thankless country, are requited
 But with that surname: a good memory,⁴
 And witness of the malice and displeasure
 Which thou should'st bear me: only that name remains;

The cruelty and envy of the people,
 Permitted by our dastard nobles, who
 Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest;
 And suffer'd me by the voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Now, this extremity
 Hath brought me to thy hearth: Not out of hope Mistake me not, to save my life; for if I had fear'd death, of all the men i' the world
 I would have voided thee: but in mere spite,
 To be full quit of those my banishers,
 Stand I before thee here. Then if thou hast
 A heart of wreak⁵ in thee, that will revenge
 Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those mains
 Of shame⁶ seen through thy country, speed thee
 straight,

And make my misery serve thy turn: so use it,

3 Feed.

4 Memory for memorial.

5 Wreak is an old term for revenge. So in Titus Andronicus:

'Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude.'

6 I. e. disgraceful diminutions of territory

That my revengful services may prove
As benefits to thee; for I will fight Against my canker'd country with the spleen
Of all the under fends. But if so be Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more fortunes
Thou art tir'd, them, in a word, I also am
Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice:
Which not to cut, would show thee but a fool;
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast,
And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Ans. O, Marcius, Marcius,
Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my heart

A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter
Should from yon cloud speak divine things, and say,
'Tis true; I'd not believe them more than thee,
All noble Marcius.—O, let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters! Here I clip
The anvil of my sword;¹ and do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
I love the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Bestride my threshold.² Why, thou Mars! I tell
thee,

We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose mine arm for't: Thou hast beat me out³
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dream'd of encounters 'twixt myself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Marcius,

Had we no other quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-beat.⁴ O, come, go in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who san prepar'd against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods.

Ans. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have

The leading of thine own revenges, take
The one half of my commission; and set down,—
As best thou art experienced, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways:

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But, come in:
Let me commend thee first to those, that shall Say, yea, to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand! Most welcome! (Exeunt Cor. and Ans.)

1 Serv. [Advancing.] Here's a strange alteration!

1 To clip is to embrace. He calls Coriolanus the anvil of his sword, because he had formerly laid as heavy blows on him as a smith strikes on his anvil.
Thus in Hamlet:—

'And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
On Mars's armour—
With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword
Now falls on Priam.'

2 Shakespeare was unaware that a Roman bride, on her entry into her husband's house, was prohibited from bestriding his threshold; and that, lest she should even touch it, she was always lifted over it. Thus Lucan, lib.
ii. 339:—

'Talanta vetuit contingere limine planta.'

Stevens.

3 I.e. fully, completely

2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have stricken him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me, his clothes made a false report of him.

1 Serv. What an arm he has! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: He had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

1 Serv. He had so: looking as it were,—— 'Would I were hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn: He is simply the rarest man i' the world.

1 Serv. I think, he is: but a greater soldier than he, you wot one.

2 Serv. Who? my master?

1 Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Serv. Worth six of him.

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. 'Faith, look you, one cannot tell bow to say that: for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third Servant.

3 Serv. O, slaves, I can tell you news; news,
you rascals.

1 & 2 Serv. What, what, what? let's partake.

3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations;
I had as lieve be a condemned man.

1 & 2 Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

3 Serv. Why, here's he that was wont to thwack our general,—Caius Marcius.

1 Serv. Why do you say, thwack our general?

3 Serv. I do not say, thwack our general; but he was always good enough for him.

2 Serv. Come, we are fellows, and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth on't: before Coriolanus, he scotched him and notched him like a carbonado.

2 Serv. An he had been cannibally given, he might have broil'd and eaten him too.

1 Serv. But, more of thy news?

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o' the table: no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him: Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with his hand,⁵ and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i' the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday; for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table.
He'll go, he says, and sowle⁶ the porter of Rome gates by the ears: He will mow down all before him, and leave his passage polled.⁷

2 Serv. And he's as like to do't, as any man I can imagine.

3 Serv. Do't? he will do't: For, look you, sir,
he has as many friends as enemies: which friends,
sir, (as it were,) durst not, (look you, sir,) show themselves, (as we term it,) his friends, whilst he's in directitude.

1 Serv. Directitude! what's that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood,⁸ they will out of their burrows, like conies after rain, and revel all with
him.

4 I think with Steevens that we should read, o'er bear instead of o'er-beat. Thus in Othello:—

'Is of such flood-gate and o'er-bearing nature.'

5 'Considers the touch of his hand as holy; clasps it with the same reverence as a lover would clasp the hand of his mistress.'

6 To sowle is to pull by the ears. It is still provincially in use for pulling, dragging, or lugging.

7 I.e. bared, cleared. To poll is to crop close, to shear; and has all the figurative meanings of tondeo in Latin. To pill and poll was to plunder and strip.

8 See Act I. Sc. 1.

1 Serv. But when goes this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon: 'tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing,¹ but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I; it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it's sprightly, waking, audible, and full of vent.² Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy; muffled,³ deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bastard children, than war's a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'Tis so: and as wars, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher; so it cannot be denied, out peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volcians. They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Rome. A public Place. Enter SICINIUS and BAUTUS.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;

His remedies are tame if the present peace And quietness o' the people, which before Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends Blush, that the world goes well; who rather had, Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold Dissentious numbers pestering streets, than see Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions friendly.

Enter MENENIUS.

Bru. We stood to't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind Of late,—Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus, sir, is not much miss'd, But with his friends: the commonwealth doth stand; And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much better, if

He could have temporiz'd.

Sic. Where is he, hear you?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his wife Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good o'en, our neighbours.

Bru. Good o'en to you all, good o'en to you all.

1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees, Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live, and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours; we wish'd Coriolanus Had lov'd you as we did.

Cit. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Citizens.]
Sic. This is a happier and more comely time, Than when these fellows ran about the streets, Crying, Confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was

A worthy officer i' the war; But insolent, O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking, Self-loving,—

1 We should probably read, 'This peace is good for nothing but,' &c.

2 I. e. full of rumour, full of materials for discourse.

3 Muffled is softened, as wine when it is burnt and sweetened.

4 I. e. he aimed at absolute power, he wanted to sway the state alone, without the participation of the tribunes.

5 We should surely read, 'have found it so;' without this word the construction of the sentence is imperfect.

6 I. e. stood up in his defence. 'Had the expression

Sic. And affecting one sole throne, Without assistance.⁴

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation, If he had gone forth consul, found it so.⁵

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome Sits safe and still without him.

Enter Ædile.

Æd. Worthy tribunes, There is a slave, whom we have put in prison, Reports,—the Voices with two several powers Are enter'd in the Roman territories; And with the deepest malice of the war Destroy what lies before them.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,

Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment, Thrusts forth his horns again into the world: Which were inshell'd, when Marcius stood⁶ for Rome

And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd. It cannot be, The Voices dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!

We have record, that very well it can; And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason' with the fellow, Before you punish him, where he heard this; Lest you should chance to whip your information, And beat the messenger who bids beware Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me:

I know, this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles, in great earnestness, are going All to the senate-house: some news is come, That turns⁷ their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave;—

Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising! Nothing but his report!

Mess. Yes, worthy sir,

The slave's report is seconded; and more, More fearful is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths, (How probable, I do not know,) that Marcius, Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome; And vows revenge as spacious, as between The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish Good Marcius home again.

Sic. The very trick on't.

Men. This is unlikely; He and Aufidius can no more atone,⁸ Than violentest contrariety.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. You are sent for to the Senate: A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius, Associated with Aufidius, rages Upon our territories; and have already, O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and took What lay before them.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. O, you have made good work!

Men. What news? what news?

Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters, and To melt the city leads upon your pates;

To see your wives dishonour'd by your noses;—

in the text (says Steevens) been met with in a learned author, it might have passed for a Latinism:—

—Summis stantem pro turribus Idam.

Æneid. ix. 675.

7 To reason with is to talk with.

8 Changes.

9 I. e. atone, accord, agree. Atone and atoneament are many times used by Shakespeare in this sense.

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burned in their cement; and your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd into an augur's bore.¹

Men. Pray now, your news?—You have made fair work, I fear me:—Pray, your news?

If Marcius should be join'd with Volcians,——

Com. If! He is their god; he leads them like a thing Made by some other deity than nature, That shapes man better: and they follow him, Against us brats, with no less confidence, Than boys pursuing summer butterflies, Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work, You, and your apron men;² you that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules Did shake down mellow fruit:³ You have made fair work!

Bru. But is this true, sir?

Com. Ay; and you'll look pale Before you find it other. All the regions Do smilingly revolt,⁴ and, who resist, Are mock'd for valiant ignorance, And perish constant fools. Who is 't can blame him?

Your enemies, and his, find something in him.

Men. We are all undone, unless The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it? The tribunes cannot do 't for shame; the people Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, *Be good to Rome, they charg'd him*⁵ even

As those should do that had deserv'd his hate, And therein shew'd like enemies.

Men. 'Tis true: If he were putting to my house the brand That should consume it, I have not the face To say, Beseech you, cease.—You have made fair hands,

You, and your crafts! you have crafted fair!

Com. You have brought A trembling upon Rome, such as was never So incapable of help.

Tri. Say not we brought it.

Men. How! Was it we? We lov'd him; but, like beasts,

And cowardly nobles, gave way to your clusters, Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But, I fear They'll roar him in again.⁶ Tullus Aufidius, The second name of men, obeys his points As if he were his officer:—Desperation Is all the policy, strength, and defence, That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troop of Citizens.

Men. Here come the clusters.—And is Aufidius with him?—You are they That made the air unwholesome, when you cast Your stinking, greasy caps, in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming; And not a hair upon a soldier's head, Which will not prove a whip: as many coxcombs, As you throw caps up, will he tumble down,

our fate hid in an augur's-hole:

² i. e. mechanics. See Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2. Horace uses artes for artifices. In a future passage he calls them crafts. To smell of garlic was a brand of vulgarity; as to smell of leeks was no less so among the Roman people:—

—quis tecum scitille porrum

Sutor, et ellixi vervecis labra comedit?

³ A ludicrous allusion to the apples of the Hesperides.

⁴ Revolt with pleasure.

And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter; If he could burn us all into one coal, We have deserv'd it.

Cl. Faith, we hear fearful news.

1 Cl.

For mine own part,

When I said, banish him, I said, 'twas pity.

2 Cl. And so did I.

3 Cl. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us; That we did, we did for the best: and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. You are goodly things, you voices!

Men. You have made Good work, you and your cry!—Shall us to the Capitol?

Com. O, ay; what else?

[Exeunt Com. and Men.]

Sic. Go, masters, get you home, be not dismay'd, These are a side, that would be glad to have This true, which they so seem to fear. Go home, And show no sign of fear.

1 Cl. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said, we were i' the wrong, when we banished him.

2 Cl. So did we all. But come, let's home.

[Exeunt Citizens.]

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol:—'Would, half my wealth

Would buy this for a lie!

Sic. Pray, let us go. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. A Camp; at a small distance from Rome. Enter Aufidius, and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lien. I do not know what witchcraft's in him; but Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat, Their talk at table, and their thanks at end, And you are darken'd in this action, sir, Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now, Unless, by using means, I lame the foot Of our design. He bears himself more proudly Even to my person, than I thought he would, When first I did embrace him: Yet his nature In that's no changeling; and I must excuse What cannot be amended.

Lien. Yet I wish, sir, (I mean for your particular,) you had not Join'd in commission with him: but either Had born the action of yourself, or else To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou sure, When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems, And so he thinks, and is no less apparent To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly, And shows good husbandry for the Volcian state; Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon As draw his sword: yet he hath left undone That, which shall break his neck, or hazard mine, Where'er we come to our account.

Lien. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome?

Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits down; And the nobility of Rome are his:

The senators, and patricians, love him too: The tribunes are no soldiers: and their people Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty To expel him thence. I think, he'll be to Rome, As is the osprey⁷ to the fish who takes it

⁵ 'They charg'd', and therein shew'd, has here the force of 'they would charge, and therein show.'

⁶ 'As they hooted' at his departure, they will roar at his return; as he went out with scoffs, he will come back with lamentations.

⁷ Pack, alluding to a pack of hounds.

⁸ The following account of the osprey shows the justness and beauty of this simile:—

'I will provide thee with a princely osprey, That as she flesh over fish in pools.

By sovereignty of nature. First he was
A noble servant to them; but he could not
Carry his honours even: whether 'twas pride,
Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man: whether defect of judgment,
To fail in the disposing of those chances
Which he was lord of; or whether nature,
Not to be other than one thing, not moving
From the casque to the cushion,¹ but commanding
peace

Even with the same austerity and garb
As he controll'd the war: but, one of these
(As he hath spices of them all, not all;²
For I dare so far free him,) made him fear'd,
So hated, and so banish'd: But he has a merit,
To choke it in the utterance.³ So our virtues
Lie in the interpretation of the time:
And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a hair
To extol what it hath done.⁴

One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Rights by rights fouler,⁵ strengths by strengths do
fall.

Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine,
Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou mine.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V

SCENE I. Rome. A public Place. Enter MEN-ENIUS, COMINIUS, SICINIUS, BRUTUS, and
others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear, what he hath said,

Which was sometime his general; who lov'd him
In a most dear particular. He call'd me, father:
But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him,
A mile before his tent fall down, and kneel
The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd⁶
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men.

Do you hear?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:
I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to: forbad all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name: 'twas fire
Of burning Rome.

Men.

Why so: you have made good work:
A pair of tribunes that have rack'd⁷ for Rome,
To make coats cheap: A noble memory!⁸

Com. I minded him, how royal 'twas to pardon
When it was less expected: He replied,

The fish shall turn their glittering bellies up,
And thou shalt take thy liberal choice of all.
Drayton mentions the same fascinating power of the osprey in Polyolbion, Song xxv. The bird is described in Pennant's British Zoology.

1 Aufidius assigns three probable reasons for the miscarriage of Coriolanus; pride, which easily follows an uninterrupted train of success; unskillfulness to regulate the consequences of his own victories; a stubborn uniformity of nature, which could not make the proper transition from the casque to the cushion, or chair of civil authority; but acted with the same despotism in peace as in war.—Johnson.

2 Not all in their full extent. So in the Winter's Tale:—

'Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it.'

3 But such is his merit as ought to choke the utterance of his faults.

4

So our virtues

Lie in the interpretation of the time;

And power, unto itself most commendable,

Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair

To extol what it hath done.

Thus the old copy. Well Steevens might exclaim that the passage and the comments upon it were equally intelligible. The whole speech is very incorrectly printed in the folio. Thus we have was for was; defect for defect; virtue for virtues; and, evidently, chair for chair. What is the meaning of—

'Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair?'

It was a bare⁹ petition of a state
To one whom they had punish'd.

Men.

Very well:

Could he say less?

Com.

I offer'd to awaken his regard
For his private friends: His answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome, musty chaff: He said, 'twas folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt,
And still to nose the offence.

Men.

For one poor grain
Or two? I am one of these; his mother, wife,
His child, and this brave fellow too, we are the grains:

You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt
Above the moon: We must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: If you refuse your aid
In this so never-heeded help, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. But, sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue,
More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men.

No; I'll not meddle.

Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men.

What should I do?

Br. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome, towards Marcius.

Men.

Well, and say that Marcius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unheard; what then?—

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness? Say't be so?

Sic.

Yet your good will
Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men.

I'll undertake it:
I think, he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well; he had not din'd:¹⁰
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We put upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our blood
With wine and feeding,¹¹ we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch
him

Till he be dieted to my request,
And then I'll set upon him.

Br. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men.

Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge
Of my success. [Exit.]

A Aisir has some propriety, as used for a thing almost invisible. As in The Tempest:—

— not a Aisir perish'd.

I take the meaning of the passage to be, 'So our virtues lie at the mercy of the time's interpretation, and power, which esteems itself while living so highly, hath not when defunct the least particle of praise allotted to it.'

5 'Rights by rights fouler, strengths by strengths do
fall.'

Malone reads fouder, with a worthy but unsatisfactory argument in favour of his reading. I could wish to read, 'Rights by rights fouled,' &c. an easy and obvious emendation. Steevens has given the following explanation of the passage:—'What is already right, and is received as such, becomes less clear when supported by supernumerary proof.'

6 I. e. condescended unwillingly, with reserve, coldness.

7 Harassed by exactions

8 Memorial.

9 Bare may mean palpable, evident; but I think we should read bare.

10 'This observation is not only from nature, and finely expressed, but admirably befits the mouth of one who, in the beginning of the play, had told us that he loved convivial doings.'—Warburton.

11 The poet had the discipline of modern Rome in his thoughts; by the discipline of whose church priests are forbid to break their fast before the celebration of mass, which must take place after sun-rise, and before midday

Com. He'll never hear him.

Sic. Net?

Com. I tell you he does sit in gold;¹ his eye
Red as 'twould burn Rome; and his injury
The gaoler to his pity. A kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said, Rise; dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand: What he would do,
He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
Bound with an oath, to yield to his conditions:²
So, that all hope is vain,
Unless his noble mother, and his wife;³
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. An advanced Post of the Volcan Camp before Rome. The Guard at their Stations. Enter to them, MENENIUS.

1 G. Stay: Whence are you?

2 G. Stand, and go back.

Men. You guard like men; 'tis well: But, by your leave,
I am an officer of state, and come
To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

1 G. You may not pass, you must return: our general

Will no more hear from thence.

2 G. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire,
before

You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks;⁴
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.

1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover:⁵ I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply, amplified;
For I have ever verifi'd⁶ my friends,
(Of whom he's chief,) with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle⁷ ground,
I have tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leasing:⁸ Therefore,
fellow,

I must have leave to pass.

1 G. Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf, as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie, as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.

Men. Prythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary⁹ on the part of your general.

1 So in North's Plutarch:—'He was set in his chair of state, with a marvellous and unspeakable majesty.' The idea expressed by Cornilius occurs in the eighth Iliad. Pope was perhaps indebted to Shakespeare in the translation of the passage:—

'Th' eternal Thunderer sat throned in gold.'

2 None of the explanations or proposed emendations of this passage satisfies me. Perhaps we might read, 'to yield to no conditions.' The sense of the passage would then be, 'What he would do he sent in writing after me; the things he would not do, he bound himself with an oath to yield to no conditions that might be proposed.' It afterwards appears what these were:—

'The things I have forsworn to grant may never be held by you denials. Do not bid me dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate again with Rome's mechanics.'

3 To satisfy modern notions of construction, this line must be read as if written—

'Unless in his noble mother and his wife.'

4 Lots to blanks is chances to nothing. Equivalent to another phrase in King Richard III.:—

'All the world to nothing.'

5 I. e. friend.

6 Verified must here be used for displayed or testified,

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, (as you say, you have,) I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is.

1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy¹⁰ groans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decayed dotard?¹¹ as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemned, our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean, thy general.

1 G. My general cares not for you. Back, I say go, lest I let forth your half pint of blood;—back,—that's the utmost of your having:—back.

Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow,—

Enter CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.

Cor. What's the matter?

Men. Now, your companion, I'll say an errand for you; you shall know now that I am in estimation; you shall perceive that a Jack¹² guardant can not office me from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou stand'st not i' the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueler in suffering; behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee.—The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O, my son! my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured, none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs; and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the drops of it upon this varlet here; this, who like a block, hath denied my access to thee.

Cor. Away!

Men. How! away?

Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs

Are servanted to others: Though I owe my revenge properly, my remission lies in Volcan breasts.¹³ That we have been familiar, Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much.—Therefore, be gone.

If it be not a corruption of the text for notified, or some other word. Mr. Edwards proposed to read varnished, which, as it was anciently written varnished, might easily be mistaken for verified. Shakespeare, however, seems to have made Dogberry use verified for testified; but as he is never orthodox in his meaning, it may be no evidence:—'They have verified unjust things.' Much Ado about Nothing, Act v. Sc. 1.

7 Subtle here means smooth, level. 'Tityus's breast is counted the subtlest bowling ground in all Tartary.'

Ben Jonson's Chlorida, vol. viii. p. 105.

8 I. e. have almost given the lie such a sanction as to render it current.

9 Factionary is adherent, partisan. See Shetwood in v. Faction. Thus in King Henry VI. Part II.:—

'Her faction will be full as strong as ours.'

10 I. e. slight, inconsiderable. So in King Henry VI. Part II. Act v. Sc. 2:—

'—these faults are easy, quickly answer'd.'

11 Dotard.

12 Equivalent to Jack in office, one who is proud of his petty consequence.

13 'Though I have a peculiar right in revenge, in the power of forgiveness the Volcians are joined.'

Mine ears against your suits are stronger, than Your gates against my force. Yet, for¹ I lov'd
these,

Take this along; I writ it for thy sake,

[Gives a Letter.

And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius,
I will not hear thee speak.—This man, Aufidius,
Was my belov'd in Rome; yet thou behold'st—
Auf. You keep a constant temper.

[Exeunt Cor. and Auf.

1 G. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?

2 G. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power: You know the way home again.

1 G. Do you hear how we are absent for keeping your greatness back?

2 G. What cause do you think, I have to swoon?

Mén. I neither care for the world, nor your general: for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, you are so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself,² fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age!
I say to you, as I was said to, away. [Exit.

1 G. A noble fellow, I warrant him.

2 G. The worthy fellow is our general: He is the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The Tent of Coriolanus. Enter
CORIOLANUS, AUFIDIUS, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow

Set down our host.—My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volcan lords, how plainly³
I have borne this business.

Auf. Only their ends
You have respected; stopp'd your ears against
The general suit of Rome; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him: for whose old love, I have (Though I show'd sourly to him,) once more offer'd

The first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only,
That thought he could do more; a very little
I have yielded to: Fresh embassies, and suits,
Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
Will I lend ear to.—He! what about is this?

[Shout within.

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the same time 'tis made? I will not.—

Enter, in mourning habits, VIRGILIA, VOLUMNIA, leading young MARCIUS, VALERIA, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand

1 I. e. cause, or because.

2 I. e. by his own hands.

3 How plainly is how openly, how remotely from artifice or concealment.

4 'Virgilia makes a voluntary misinterpretation of her husband's words. He says, "These eyes are not the same," meaning that he saw things with other eyes, or other dispositions. She lays hold on the word eyes, to turn his attention on their present appearance.'—
Johnson.

5 'As an imperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put beside his part.'

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

6 Juno, the guardian of marriage, and consequently the avenger of connubial perfidy.

7 The hungry beach is the sterile beach; hungry soil, and hungry gravel, are common phrases. If it be necessary to seek a more recondite meaning, the shore hungry, or eager for shipwrecks, litus vorax, will serve.

8 Though the scheme to solicit Coriolanus was originally proposed by Valeria, Plutarch has allotted her no address when she appears with his wife and mother on this occasion. The poet has followed him. Some lady of the name of Valeria was one of the great ex-

The grand child to her blood. But, out, affection!
All bond and privilege of nature, break!
Let it be virtuous, to be obstinate.—
What is that curt'sy worth, or those doves' eyes,
Which can make gods forsworn?—I melt, and am
not

Of stronger earth than others.—My mother bows;
As if Olympus to a molehill should
In supplication nod: and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which Great nature cries, Deny not.—Let the Volcas Plough Rome, and harrow Italy; I'll never
Be such a goosing to obey instinct; but stand,
As if a man was author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband!

Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow, that delivers us thus chang'd,
Makes you thank so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out.¹

Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say,
For that, Purges our Romans.—O, a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!

Now, by the jealous queen² of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. You gods! I pray,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unshut: Sink, my knee, 't the earth;

[Kneels.

Of the deep duty more impressive show
Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up bleed'd!
Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint,
I kneel before thee; and unproperly Show duty, as mistaken all the while
Between the child and parent.

[Kneels.

Cor. What is this?
Your knees to me? to your corrected son?
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach³
Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun;
Murdering impossibility to make
What cannot be, alight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior;
I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle,
That's curbed by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple: Dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which by the interpretation of full time
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove,⁴ inform Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou may'st prove

The shame invulnerable, and stick it⁵ the war
Like a great sear-mark, staining every flaw,⁶
And saving those that eye thee!

amples of chastity held out by the writers of the middle age. The following beautiful lines, from Shirley's Gentleman of Venice, in praise of a lady's chastity, deserve to be cited:—

—thou art chaste

As the white down of heaven, whose feathers play
Upon the wings of the cold winter's gale,
Trembling with fear to touch th' imperious earth.

8 This is inserted with great decorum. Jupiter was the tutelary god of Rome.

10 A flow is a violent blast or sudden gust of wind.
Carew thus describes it, in his Survey of Cornwall:—
'One kind of these storms they call a flow, or smog, which is a mighty gale of wind passing suddenly to the shore, and working strong effects upon whatsoever it encounters in its way.' The word is not obsolete, as stated in Todd's Johnson: it will be found in the interesting Journal of Captain Hall, 1804, vol. i. p. 4, and in Captain Lyon's Narrative of his attempt to reach Republie Bay, 1824. There is a corresponding thought in Shakespeare's hundred and sixteenth sonnet:—
'O no! it is an ever-dreaded mark,
That looks on tempests, and is never shak'd.'

Vol. Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy.

Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself, are suitors to you.

Cor.

I beseech you, peace :

Or, if you'd ask, remember this before ;
The things, I have forsworn to grant, may never
Be held by you demands. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics :—Tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural : Desire not
To allay my rages and revenges, with Your colder reasons.

Vol.

O, no more, no more !

You have said, you will not grant us any thing ;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already : Yet we will ask ;
That, if you fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness : therefore hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volces, mark ; for we'll Hear nought from Rome in private.—Your request ?

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment,

And state of bodies would bewray what life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself,
How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither : since that thy sight, which should

Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,

Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and
sorrow ;

Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
The son, the husband, and the father, tearing
His country's bowels out. And to poor we,
Thine enemy's most capital : thou barr'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy : For how can we,
Alas ! how can we for our country pray,
Whereto we are bound ; together with thy victory,
Whereto we are bound ? Alack ! or we must lose
The country, our dear nurse ; or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had
Our wish, which side should win ; for either thou Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles through our streets, or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin ;
And bear the palm, for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I purpose not to wait on fortune, till
These wars determine :¹ if I cannot persuade thee
Rather to show a noble grace to both parts,
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to assault thy country, than to tread
(Trust to't, thou shalt not,) on thy mother's womb,
That brought thee to this world.

Vol.

Ay, and on mine,

That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name
Living to time.

Boy.

He shall not tread on me ;
I'll run away, till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
Requies not child nor woman's face to see,
I have sat too long.

Vol.

Nay, go not from us thus.

If it were so, that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy
The Volces whom you serve, you might condemn us,
As poisoners of your honour : No ; our suit
Is, that you reconcile them : while the Volces
May say, This mercy we have shew'd ; the Romans,
Thus we receiv'd ; and each in either side
Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, Be bless'd

For making up this peace ! Thou know'st, great son,
The end of war's uncertain ; but this certain,
That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reap, is such a name,
Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses ;
Whose chronicle thus writ,—*The man was noble,
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out ;
Destroy'd his country ; and his name remains
To the ensuing age, abhorr'd.* Speak to me, son :
Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
To imitate the graces of the gods ;
To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air
And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak ?
Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs ?—Daughter, speak you :
He cares not for your weeping.—Speak thou, boy :
Perhaps, thy childishness will move him more
Than can our reasons.—There is no man in the world
More bound to his mother ; yethere he lets me prate
Like one i' the stocks.² Thou hast never in thy life
Shew'd thy dear mother any courtesy :
When she (poor hen !) fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home,
Laden with honour. Say, my request's unjust,
And spurn me back : But, if it be not so,
Thou art not honest ; and the gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away :
Down, ladies ; let us shame him with our knees.
To his surname Coriolanus 'longs more pride
Than pity to our prayers. Down ; an end :
This is the last ;—So we will home to Rome,
And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold us :
This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels, and holds up hands, for fellowship,
Does reason our petition⁴ with more strength
Than thou hast to deny't.—Come, let us go :
This fellow had a Volcian in his mother ;
His wife is in Corioli, and his child
Like him by chance :—Yet give us our despatch ;
I am hush'd until our city be afire,
And then I'll speak a little.

Cor.

O mother, mother !

[Holding VOLUMNIA by the Hands, silent.
What have you done ? Behold, the heavens do open,
The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
They laugh at. O my mother, mother ! O !
You have won a happy victory to Rome :
But, for your son,—believe it, O, believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. But, let it come :—
Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius,
Were you in my stead, say, would you have heard
A mother less ? or granted less, Aufidius ?
Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor.

I dare be sworn, you were :

And, sir, it is no little thing, to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir,
What peace you'll make, advise me : For my part,
I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you ; and pray you Stand to me in this cause.—O, mother ! wife !

Auf.

I am glad, thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour

At difference in thee : out of that I'll work Myself a former fortune.⁵

Cor.

[The Ladies make signs to CORIOLANUS.

Ay, by and by ;

[To VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, &c.
But we will drink together ;⁶ and you shall bear
A better witness back than words, which we,
On like conditions, will have counterseal'd.
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve

¹ This speech is very closely taken from North's Plutarch, the poet has done little more than throw the very words into blank verse.

² I.e. conclude, end. So in King Henry IV. Part II. —

'Tell thy friend sickness have determin'd me.'

³ 'Keeps me in a state of ignominy, talking to no purpose.'

⁴ I.e. does argue for us and our petition.

⁵ 'I will take advantage of this concession to restore myself to my former credit and power.'

⁶ Farmer has suggested that we should perhaps read think. Shakespeare has however introduced drinking as a mark of confederation in King Henry IV. Part II. —

'Let's drink together friendly, and embrace.'
The text therefore may be allowed to stand, though at the expense of female delicacy, which, in the present instance, has not been sufficiently consulted.

To have a temple built you :¹ all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Rome. A public Place. Enter
MENENIUS and SICINIUS.

Men. See you yond² coign o' the Capitol : yond³ corner-stone ?

Sic. Why, what of that ?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him.
But I say, there is no hope in't ; our throats are sentenced, and stay⁴ upon execution.

Sic. Is't possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man ?

Men. There is differency between a grub, and a butterfly ; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcius is grown from man to dragon ; he has wings ; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me : and he no more remembers his mother now, than an eight year old horse. The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes. When he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading. He is able to pierce a corset with his eye ; talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made⁵ for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to throw in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him : There is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a male tiger ; that shall our poor city find : and all this is long of you.

Sic. The gods be good unto us !

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him, we respected not them : and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house ;

The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down ; all swearing, if
The Roman ladies bring not comfort home,
They'll give him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sic. What's the news ?

Mess. Good news, good news :—The ladies have
prevail'd,

The Voices are dislodg'd, and Marcius gone :
A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,
No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend,
Art thou certain this is true ? is it most certain ?

Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire :

Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it ?
Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide,⁶
As the recomforted through the gates. Why, hark
you ;

[Trumpets and Hautboys sounded, and Drums beaten, all together. Shouting also within.]

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,
Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the sun dance. Hark you ! [Shouting again.]

Men. This is good news :

I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia
Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians,
A city full ; of tribunes, such as you,
A sea and land full : You have pray'd well to-day ;
This morning, for ten thousand of your throats
I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy !
[Shouting and Music.]

¹ Plutarch informs us that a temple dedicated to the Fortune of the Ladies was built on this occasion by order of the senate.

² i. e. stay but for it. So in Macbeth :—

'Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.'

Sic. First, the gods bless you for your tidings ; next,

Accept my thankfulness.

Mess. Sir, we have all
Great cause to give great thanks.

Sic. They are near the city ?

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sic. We will meet them,
And help the joy. [Going.]

Enter the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and People. They pass over the Stage.

1 Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome :
Call all your tribes together, praise the gods,
And make triumphant fires ; strew flowers before
them ;

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius,

Repeal⁷ him with the welcome of his mother ;

Cry,—Welcome, ladies, welcome !—

All. Welcome, ladies !

Welcome ! [A Flourish with Drums and Trumpets.]

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Antium. A public Place. Enter TUL-LUS AUFIDIUS, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here :

Deliver them this paper : having read it,

Bid them repair to the market-place ; where I,

Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,

Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse,⁸

The city ports⁹ by this hath enter'd, and

Intends to appear before the people, hoping

To purge himself with words : Despatch.

[Exeunt Attendants.]

Enter Three or Four Conspirators of Aufidius' Faction.

Most welcome !

1 Con. How is it with our general ?

Auf. Even so,

As with a man by his own alms empoison'd,

And with his charity slain.

2 Con. Most noble sir,

If you do hold the same intent wherein

You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you

Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell ;

We must proceed, as we do find the people.

3 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst

'Twixt you there's difference ; but the fall of either

Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it

And my pretext to strike at him admits

A good construction. I raised him, and I pawn'd

Mine honour for his truth : Who being so heighten'd,

He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery,

Seducing so my friends : and, to this end,

He bow'd his nature, never known before

But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3 Con. Sir, his stoutness,

When he did stand for consul, which he lost

By lack of stooping,—

Auf. That I would have spoke of—Being banish'd for't, he came unto my hearth ;

Presented to my knife his throat : I took him ;

Made him joint servant with me ; gave him way

In all his own desires : nay, let him choose

Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,

My best and freshest men ; serv'd his disengagements

In my own person ; help to reap the fame,

Which he did end all his ; and took some pride

To do myself this wrong : till, at the last,

I seem'd his follower, not partner ; and

³ That is, as one made to resemble Alexander.

⁴ 'As through an arch the violent roaring side
Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste.'

Rape of Lacrocia

⁵ Recall.

⁶ i. e. he whom I accuse :—

'I am appointed him to murder you'

The Winter's Tale.

⁷ Ports are gates. See Act I. Sc. 7.

He waged me with his countenance,¹ as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So he did, my lord;
The army marvell'd at it. And, in the last,
When he had carried Rome; and that we look'd
For no less spoil, than glory, —

Auf. There was it; —
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him.²
At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action; Therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

[Drums and Trumpets sound, with great Shouts of the People.]

1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a poet,
And had no welcomes home; but he returns,
Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats
tear,

With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Ere he express himself, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd, shall bury
His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more;
Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it,
But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd
What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear it.
What faults he made before the last, I think,
Might have found easy fines: but there to end
Where he was to begin; and give away
The benefit of our voices, answering us
With our own charge;³ making a treaty, where
There was a yielding; This admits no excuse.

Auf. He approaches, you shall hear him.

Enter CORIOLANUS, with Drums and Colours; a Crowd of Citizens with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know,
That prosperously I have attempted, and
With bloody passage, led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home,

Do more than counterpoise, a full third part,
The charges of the action. We have made peace
With no less honour to the Antisties,
Than shame to the Romans: And we have deliver'd
Subscrib'd by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords;
But tell the traitor, in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor! — How now?

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius.

Cor. Marcius!

Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius; Dost thou think

I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name
Coriolanus in Corioli? —

1 The verb to wage was formerly in general use for to attend, to reward. The meaning is, 'the countenance he gave me was a kind of wages.'

For his defence great store of men I wag'd.

Mirror for Magistrates.

' — I receive thee gladly to my house,

And wage thy stay.'

Heywood's Wise Woman of Hoxton.

2 'This is the point on which I will attack him with all my energy.'

3 'Rewarding us with our own expenses, making the cost of the war its recompense.'

You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,
(I say, your city,) to his wife and mother:
Breaking his oath and resolution, like
A twist of rotten silk; never admitting Counsel o' the war; but at his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory:
That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor.

Hear'st thou, Mars?

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears, —

Cor.

Ha!

Auf. No more.⁴

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart
Too great for what contains it. Boy! O, slave! —
Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever
I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave
lords,

Must give this cur the lie: and his own motion (Who wears my stripes impress'd on him; that must bear

My beating to his grave,) shall join to thrust
The lie unto him.

1 Lord. Peace, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Voices; men and lads,
Stain all your edges on me. — Boy! False hound!
If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,
That like an eagle in a dovecot, I
Flutter'd your Voices in Corioli:
Alone I did it. — Boy!

Auf.

Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart,
'Fore your own eyes and ears?

Cor. Let him die for't. [Several speak at once.]

Cit. [Speaking promiscuously.] Tear him to pieces, do it presently. He killed my son; — my daughter; — He killed my cousin Marcius; — He killed my father. —

2 Lord. Peace, ho; — no outrage; — peace.
The man is noble, and his fame folds in
This orb o' the earth.⁵ His last offence to us
Shall have judicious⁶ hearing. — Stand, Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Cor.

O, that I had him,
With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe,
To use my lawful sword!

Auf.

Insolent villain!
Cor. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

[AUFIDIUS and the Conspirators draw, and kill CORIOLANUS, who falls, and AUFIDIUS stands on him.]

Lords.

Hold, hold, hold, hold.
Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord.

O, Tullus! —
2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him. — Masters all, be quiet;
Put up your swords.

Auf. My lords, when you shall know, (as in this
rage,

Provok'd by him, you cannot,) the great danger
Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice
That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours
To call me to your senate, I'll deliver
Myself your loyal servant, or endure
Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord.

Bear from hence his body,
And mourn you for him: let him be regarded

4 This must be considered as continuing the former speech of Aufidius; he means to tell Coriolanus that he was 'no more than a boy of tears.'

5 'His fame overpreads the world.'

6 'Perhaps judicious, in the present instance, means judicial; such a hearing as is allowed to criminals in courts of justice.' — Steevens. Steevens is right, it appears from Bullock's Expositor that the words were convertible; the same meaning is assigned to both, viz 'belonging to judgment.'

As the most noble corse, that ever herald
Did follow to his urn.¹

2 Lord His own impatience
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.
Let's make the best of it.

Auf. My rage is gone,
And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up :
Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers : I'll be one.—
Beat thou the drum that it speak mournfully :
Trail your steel pikes.—Though in this city be

A dead March sounded.*]

THE tragedy of Coriolanus is one of the most amusing of our author's performances. The old man's merriest in Menenius; the lofty lady's dignity in Volumentia; the bridal modesty in Virgilia; the patrician and military haughtiness in Coriolanus; the plebeian malignity and tribunician insolence in Brutus and Sicilius, make a very pleasing and interesting variety; and the various revolutions of the hero's fortune, fill the mind with anxious curiosity. There is, perhaps, too much bustle in the first Act, and too little in the last.—JOHNSON.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

IT appears from the Appendix to Peck's Memoirs of Oliver Cromwell, &c. p. 14, that a Latin play on this subject has been written : 'Epiologus Cæsari interfecti, quomodo in scenam prodit ea res acta, in Ecclesia Christi, Oxon. Qui epiologus a Magistro Ricardo Eedes, et scriptus, et in proœculo fidei dictus fuit, A. D. 1668.' Meres, in his Wits' Commonwealt, 1696, enumerates Dr. Eedes among the best tragic writers of that time.

From what Polonius says in Hamlet, it seems probable that there was also an English play on the story before Shakspeare commenced writer for the stage. Stephen Gosson, in his School of Abuse, 1579, mentions a play entitled The History of Cæsar and Pompey.

William Alexander, afterwards earl of Sterline, wrote a tragedy of the story of Julius Cæsar; the death of Cæsar, which is not exhibited, but related to the audience, forms the catastrophe of his piece, which appeared in 1607, when the writer was little acquainted with English writers; it abounds with Scotticisms, which the author corrected in the edition he gave of his works in 1637. There are parallel passages in the two plays, which may have arisen from the two authors drawing from the same source; but there is reason to think the coincidences more than accidental, and that Shakspeare was acquainted with the drama of Lord Sterline. It has been shown in a note on The Tempest, that the celebrated passage ('The cloud-capt towers,' &c.) had its prototype in Darius, another play of the same author.

It should be remembered that Shakspeare has many plays founded on subjects which had been previously treated by others; whereas no proof has hitherto been produced that any contemporary writer ever presumed to new model a story that had already employed the pen of Shakspeare. If the conjecture that Shakspeare was indebted to Lord Sterline be just, his drama must have been produced subsequent to 1607, or at latest in that year; which is the date ascribed to it, upon these grounds, by Malone.

Upton has remarked that the real duration of time in Julius Cæsar is as follows:—About the middle of February, A. U. C. 709, a frantic festival sacred to Pan, and called Lupercales, was held in honour of Cæsar, when the regal crown was offered to him by Antony. On the 15th of March in the same year, he was slain. November 27th, A. U. C. 710, the triumphs met at a small island, formed by the river Rhenus near Bononia, and there adjusted their cruel proscription. A. U. C. 711, Brutus and Cassius were defeated near Philipp.

Gildon long ago remarked that Brutus was the true hero of this tragedy, and not Cæsar; Schlegel makes the same observation: the poet has portrayed the character of Brutus with peculiar care, and developed all the amiable traits, the feeling, and patriotic heroism of it with supereminent skill. He has been less happy in personifying Cæsar, to whom he has given several ostentatious speeches, unsuited to his character; if we may judge from the impression made upon us by his own commentaries. The character of Cassius is also touched with great nice and discrimination, and is admirably contrasted to that of Brutus: his superiority 'in independent volition, and his discernment in judging of human affairs, are pointed out; while the purify of mind and conscientious love of justice in Brutus, unite him to be the head of a party in a state entirely corrupted: these amiable failings give, in fact, an unfortunate turn to the cause of the conspirators. The play abounds in well wrought and affecting scenes; it is scarcely necessary to mention the celebrated dialogue between Brutus and Cassius, in which the design of the conspiracy is opened to Brutus. The quarrel between them, rendered doubly touching by the close, when Cassius learns the death of Portia: and which one is surprised to think that any critic susceptible of feeling should pronounce 'cold and unfeeling.' The scene between Brutus and Portia, where she endeavours to extort the secret of the conspiracy from him, in which is that heart-thrilling burst of tenderness, which Portia's heroic behaviour awakens:—

'You are my true and honourable wife,
As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.'

The speeches of Mark Antony over the dead body of Cæsar, and the artful eloquence with which he captivates the multitude, are justly claimed among the happiest effusions of poetic declamation.

There are also those touches of nature interspersed, which we should seek in vain in the works of any other poet. In the otherwise beautiful scene with Lucius, an incident of this kind is introduced, which, though wholly immaterial to the plot or conduct of the scene, is perfectly congenial to the character of the agent, and beautifully illustrative of it. The sedate and philosophic Brutus, decomposed a little by the stupendous cares upon his mind, forgets where he had left his book of recreation:—

'Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so.'

Another passage of the same kind, and of eminent beauty, is to be found in the scene where the conspirators assemble at the house of Brutus at midnight. Brutus, welcoming them all, says:—

'What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night?

Cassius. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.]

Cæsar. Here lies the east: doth not the day break here?

Cæsar. No.

Cinna. O pardon, sir, it doth; and yon gray lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

Cæsar. You shall confess, that you are both deceived:

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises;
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence, up higher toward the north
He first presents his fire; and the high east
Stands as the Capitol, directly here.'

It is not only heroic manners and incidents which the all-powerful pen of Shakspeare has expressed with great historic truth in this play, he has entered with no less penetration into the manners of the fædious plebeians, and has exhibited here, as well as in Coriolanus, the manners of a Roman mob. How could Johnson say, that 'his adherence to the real story, and to Roman manners, seem to have impeded the natural vigour of his genius!'

SCENE I. Rome. A Street. Enter FLAVIUS, MARULLUS, and a Rabble of Citizens.

Flavius.

HENCE; home, you idle creatures, get you home; Is this a holiday? What! know you not, Being mechanical, you ought not walk, Upon a labouring day, without the sign Of your profession? Speak, what trade art thou?

1 Cit. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule? What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—

You, sir; what trade are you?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But what trade art thou? Answer me directly.

Cit. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience: which is indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Mar. What trade, thou knave; thou naughty knave, what trade?

Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me; yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What mean'st thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow?

Cit. Why, sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is, with the awl: I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with awl. I am indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's leather, have gone upon my handy work.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. — But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Cæsar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries follow him to Rome, To grace in captive bonds his chariot-wheels? You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!

O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,

1 The Tyber being always personified as a god, the feminine gender is here, strictly speaking, improper. Milton says that—

‘—— the river of bliss

Rolls o'er Elysian flowers her amber streams.’ But he is speaking of the water, and not of its presiding power or genius. Malone observes that Drayton describes the presiding powers of the rivers of England as females; Spenser more classically represents them as males.

2 Condition, rank.

3 Whether.

4 Honorary ornaments; tokens of respect.

5 We gather from a passage in the next scene what these trophies were. Casca there informs Cassius that Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Cæsar's images, are put to silence.

q q

To towers and windows, yea to chimney tops, Your infants in your arms, and there have sat The live-long day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome;

And when you saw his chariot but appear,

Have you not made an universal shout,

That Tyber trembled underneath her banks,¹

To hear the replication of your sounds,

Made in her concave shores?

And do you now put on your best attire?

And do you now cull out a holiday?

And do you now strew flowers in his way,

That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?

Be gone;

Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,

Pray to the gods to intermit the plague

That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and, for this fault,

Assemble all the poor men of your sort;²

Draw them to Tyber banks, and weep your tears

Into the channel, till the lowest stream

Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

[Exeunt Citizens.]

See, whe'r³ their basest metal be not mov'd;

They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.

Go you down that way towards the Capitol;

This way will I: Disrobe the images,

If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.⁴

Mar. May we do so?

You know it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter; let no images

Be hung with Cæsar's trophies.⁵ I'll about,

And drive away the vulgar from the streets:

So do you too, where you perceive them thick.

These growing feathers pluck'd from Cæsar's wing,

Will make him fly an ordinary pitch;

Who else would soar above the view of men,

And keep us all in servile fearfulness. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A public Place. Enter

in Procession, with Music, CÆSAR, ANTONIUS, for the Courses; CALPHURNIA, PORTIA, DECIVS,

CICERO, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and CASCA, a great

Crowd following, among them a Soothsayer.

Cæs. Calphurnia,—

Casca.

Peace, ho! Cæsar speaks.

[Music ceases.]

Cæs.

Cal. Here, my lord.

Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,⁶

When he doth run his course.—Antonius.

6 This person was not Decius but Decimus Brutus. The poet (as Voltaire has done since) confounds the characters of Marcus and Decimus. Decimus Brutus was the most cherished by Cæsar of all his friends, while Marcus kept aloof, and declined so large a share of his favours and honours as the other had constantly accepted. Lord Sterling has made the same mistake in his tragedy of Julius Cæsar. The error has its source in North's translation of Plutarch, or in Holland's Suetonius, 1606.

7 The old copy reads ‘Antonius' way.’ In other places we have Octavio, Flavio. The players were more accustomed to Italian than Latin terminations, on account of the many versions from Italian novels, and the many Italian characters in dramatic pieces formed

Ant. Cæsar, my lord.

Cæs. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia: for our elders say,
The barren, touch'd in this holy chase,
Shake off their sterility.

Ant. I shall remember:
When Cæsar says, Do this, it is perform'd.

Cæs. Set on; and leave no ceremony out.

[Music.]

Sooth. Cæsar.

Cæs. Ha! who calls?

Casca. Bid every noise be still:—Peace yet again.

[Music ceases.]

Cæs. Who is it in the press, that calls on me?
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,

Cry, Cæsar: Speak; Cæsar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. What man is that?

Brutus. A soothsayer, bids you beware the ides of March.

Cæs. Set him before me, let me see his face.

Cæs. Fellow, come from the throng: Look upon Cæsar.

Cæs. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once again.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. He is a dreamer: let us leave him;—pass.

[Sennet. Exeunt all but BRUTUS and CÆSAR.]

Cæs. Will you go see the order of the course?

Brutus. Not I.

Cæs. I pray you, do.

Brutus. I am not gamesome: I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.
Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;—
I'll leave you.

Cæs. Brutus, I do observe you now of late:
I have not from your eyes that gentleness,
And show of love, as I was wont to have:
You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand
Over your friend that loves you.

Brutus. Cassius,

Be not deceiv'd: if I have veil'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance
Merely upon myself. Vex'd I am,
Of late, with passions of some difference,
Conceptions all proper to myself,
Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behaviours:
But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd,
(Among which number, Cassius, be you one;)
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,
Forgets the shows of love to other men.

Cæs. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion.³

By means whereof, this breast of mine hath buried
Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.
Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

Brutus. No, Cassius: for the eye sees not itself,
But by reflection, by some other thing.

Cæs. 'Tis just:

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you have no such mirrors, as will turn on the same originals. The correction was made by Pope.

The allusion is to a custom at the Lupercalia, 'the which' (says Plutarch) in older time men say the feast of shepherds or herdsmen, and is much like unto the feast Lyceian in Arcadia. But howsoever it is, that day there are diverse noble men's sons, young men (and some of them magistrates themselves that govern them) which run naked through the city, striking in sport them they meet in their way with leather thongs. And many noblemen and gentlewomen also go of purpose to stand in their way, and do put forth their hands to be stricken, persuading themselves that being whil'd they shall have good deliverie: and also being warrn, that it will make them conceive with child. Cæsar sat to behold that sport upon the pulpit for orations, in a chaire of gold, apparelled in triumphal manner. Antonius, who was consul at that time, was one of them that romed this holy course.—North's translation.

1 See King Henry VIII. Act ii. Sc. 4.

2 i. e. the nature of the feelings which you are now suffering. Thus in Timon of Athens was—

'I feel my master's passion

Your hidden worthiness into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I have heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome
(Except immortal Cæsar,) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning underneath this age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

Brutus. Into what dangers would you lead me, Cassius,

That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me?

Cæs. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to hear:
And, since you know you cannot see yourself
So well as by reflection, I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself which you yet know not of.
And be not jealous of me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common laugh, or did use
To stale³ with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protester; if you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself in banqueting
To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish and Shout.]

Brutus. What means this shouting? I do fear, the people

Choose Cæsar for their king.

Cæs. Ay, do you fear it?

Then must I think you would not have it so.

Brutus. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him well:—

But wherefore do you hold me here so long?

What is it that you would impart to me?

If it be aught toward the general good,

Set honour in one eye, and death 't the other,

And I will look on both indifferently:

For, let the gods so speed me, as I love

The name of honour more than I fear death.

Cæs. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,

As well as I do know your outward favour:

Well, honour is the subject of my story.—

I cannot tell what you and other men

Think of this life; but for my single self,

I had as lief not be, as live to be

In awe of such a thing as I myself.

I was born free as Cæsar; so were you.

We both have fed as well: and we can both

Endure the winter's cold, as well as he.

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tyber chafing with her shores,

Cæsar said to me, Dar'st thou, Cassius, now

*Leap with me into this angry flood?*⁴

And swim to yonder point? Upon the word,

Accoutred⁵ as I was, I plunged in,

And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did.

The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews; throwing it aside

And stemming it with hearts of controversy.

But ere we could arrive⁶ the point propos'd,

Cæsar cry'd, Help me, Cassius, or I sink.

I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,

Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder

The old Anchises bear, so, from the waves of Tyber

³ Johnson has erroneously given the meaning of allurement to stale, in this place. 'To stale with ordinary oaths my love,' is 'to prostitute my love, or make it common with ordinary oaths,' &c. The use of the verb to stale here, may be adduced as a proof that in a disputed passage of Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. i, we should read stale instead of scale: see note there.

⁵ 'But ere we could arrive the point propos'd.' The verb arrive, in its active sense, according to its etymology, was formerly used for to approach, or come near. Milton several times uses it thus without the preposition. Thus in Paradise Lost, b. ii.:

'— are we arrive
The happy isle.'

Did I the tired Cæsar: And this man
Is now become a god; and Cassius is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body,
If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.
He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake:
His coward lips did from their colour fly;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,
Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan:
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,
Alas! it cried, Give me some drink, Titinius:
As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper¹ should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone. [Shout. Flourish.]

Brut. Another general shout!
I do believe, that these applauses are
For some new honours that are heap'd on Cæsar.

Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow
world,

Like a Colossus: and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs,² and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.
Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
Brutus, and Cæsar: What should be in that Cæsar?
Why should that name be sounded more than yours?
Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;³
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with them,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar. [Shout.]
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd:
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,
'That her wide walls encompass'd but one man?'
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
'There was a Brutus⁴ once, that would have brook'd
The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome,
As easily as a king.'

Brut. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
What you would work me to, I have some aim;⁵
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter: for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further mov'd. What you have said,
I will consider; what you have to say,
I will with patience hear: and find a time
Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things.
'Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this;
Brutus had rather be a villager,

Than to repete himself a son of Rome,
Under these hard conditions as⁶ this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad that my weak words
Have struck but thus much stow of fire from Brutus.

Re-enter CÆSAR and his Train.

Brut. The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

Cas. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve,
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded, worthy note, to-day.

Brut. I will do so:—But, look you, Cassius,
The angry spot doth glow on Cæsar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train:
Calphurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conference by some senators.

Cas. Casca will tell us what the matter is.

Cas. Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar.

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights:
Yond' Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous:⁷
He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. 'Would he were fatter:—But I fear him
not:

Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much;
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays,
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music:⁸
Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves;
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Than what I fear, for always I am Cæsar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

[Exeunt CÆSAR and his Train. CASCA stays behind.]

Casca. You pull'd me by the cloak; Would you speak with me?

Brut. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd today,
That Cæsar looks so sad.

Casca. Why, you were with him, were you not?
Brut. I should not then ask Casca what hath chanc'd.

Casca. Why, there was a crown offer'd him:⁹
and being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a shouting.

1 This is oddly expressed, but a quibble, alluding to a coward flying from his colours, was intended.

2 Temperament, constitution.

3 'But I the meanest man of many more,
Yet much disdainful unto him to lout,
Or creep between his legs.'

Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. x. st. 19.
4 A similar thought occurs in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece—

'What diapason's more in Tarquin's name
Than in a subject's? Or what's Tullia
More in the sound than should become the name
Of a poor maid?'

5 'Lucius Junius Brutus (says Dion Cassius) would as soon have submitted to the perpetual dominion of a demon, as to the lasting government of a king.'

6 i. e. guess. So in the Two Gentlemen of Verona:—
'But fearing lest my jealous aim might err.'

7 Ruminant on this, consider it at leisure.

8 As, according to Tooke, is an article, and means the same as that, which, or it: accordingly we find it often so employed by old writers; and particularly in our excellent version of the Bible. Thus Lord Bacon also, in his Apophthegmes, No. 210:—'One of the Romans said to his friend; what think you of such a one, as was taken with the manner in adultery?' Like other vestiges of old phraseology it still lingers among the common people:—'I cannot say as I did,' &c. for that I did. I will add an example from Langland, who flourished in the middle of the fourteenth century:—

'The godes of the ground aren like to the grette wawes as [which] wyndes and wederes walwen aboute.'

Piers Ploughman, ed. 1818, p. 168.

9 'When Cæsar's friends complained unto him of Antonius and Dolabella, that they pretended some mischief towards him, he answered, As for those fat men and smooth-combed heads (quoth he,) I never reckon of them; but these pale-visaged and carrion-lean people,
I fear them most; meaning Brutus and Cassius.'

North's Plutarch, 1579.

And in another place:—'Cæsar had Cassius in great jealousy, and suspected him much; whereupon he said on a time to his friends, What will Cassius do, think you? I like not his pale looks.'

10 Shakespeare considered this as an infallible mark of an austere disposition. The reader will remember the passage in The Merchant of Venice so often quoted:—

'The man who hath no music in himself,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils.'

11 Thus in the old translation of Plutarch:—'he came to Cæsar, and presented him a diadem wreathed about with laurel.'

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Caeca. Why, for that too.

Ca. They shouted thrice: What was the last cry for?

Caeca. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Caeca. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by, mine honest neighbours shouted.

Ca. Who offered him the crown?

Caeca. Why, Antony.

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Caeca.

Caeca. I can as well be hanged, as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery. I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown;—yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again: but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time; he put it the third time by: and still as he refused it, the rabblement hooted, and clapped their chapped hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Caesar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Caesar; for he swooned, and fell down at it: And for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.

Ca. But, soft, I pray you: What? did Caesar swoon?

Caeca. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like: he hath the falling-sickness.

Ca. No, Caesar hath it not; but you, and I, And honest Caeca, we have the falling-sickness.

Caeca. I know not what you mean by that; but, I am sure Caesar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him, and hiss him, according as he pleased, and displeased them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he when he came unto himself?

Caeca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me ope his doublet, and offered them his throat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation,¹ if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues: and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, if he had done, or said any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried, Alas, good soul!—and forgave him with all their hearts: But there's no heed to be taken of them; if Caesar had stabbed their mothers, they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that, he came, thus sad, away?

Caeca. Ay.

Ca. Did Cicero say any thing?

Caeca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Ca. To what effect?

Caeca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you in the face again: But those, that understood him, smiled at one another, and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Caesar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Ca. Will you sup with me to-night, Caeca?

Caeca. No, I am promised forth.

Ca. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Caeca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth the eating.

Ca. Good; I will expect you.

Caeca. Do so: Farewell, both. [Exit CAECA.]

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?

He was quick mettle when he went to school.

Ca. So he is now, in execution

Of any bold or noble enterprise,

However he puts on this tardy form.

This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit,

Which gives men stomach to digest his words With better appetite.

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave you:

To-morrow, if you please to speak with me,

I will come home to you: or, if you will,

Come home with me, and I will wait for you.

Ca. I will do so:—till then, think of the world.

[Exit BRUTUS.]

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see,

Thy honourable metal may be wrought

From that it is dispos'd:² Therefore 'tis meet

That noble minds keep ever with their likes:

For who so firm, that cannot be seduc'd?

Caesar doth bear me hard;³ but he loves Brutus:

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,

He should not humour me.⁴ I will this night,

In several hands, in at his windows throw,

As if they came from several citizens,

Writings all tending to the great opinion

That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely

Caesar's ambition shall be glanced at:

And, after this, let Caesar seat him sure;

For we will shake him, or worse days endure.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Street. Thunder and

Lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, CAECA, with his sword drawn, and CICERO.

Cic. Good even, Caeca: Brought you Caesar

home?⁵

Why are you breathless? and why stare you so?

Caeca. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth's

Shakes, like a thing unfirm? O, Cicero,

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds

Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen

The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam

To be exalted with the threatening clouds:

But never till to-night, never till now,

Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.

Either there is a civil strife in heaven;

Or else the world, too saucy with the gods,

Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?

Caeca. A common slave⁶ (you know him well by sight,)

Held up his left hand, which did flame and burn

Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand,

Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.

Besides (I have not since put up my sword,)

Against the Capitol I met a lion,

Who glar'd⁷ upon me, and went surly by, humour signifies to turn and wind by inflaming his passions.

⁶ Did you attend Caesar home? So in Measure for Measure:—

⁷ That we may bring you something on the way.

⁸ The whole weight or momentum of this globe.

⁹ A slave of the souldiers that did cast a marvellous burning flame out of his hands, inasmuch as they that saw it thought he had been burnt; but when the fire was out, it was found that he had no hurt.—North's Plutarch.

¹⁰ The old copies erroneously read:—

'Who glaz'd upon me.'

Malone determined obstinately to oppose himself to Steevens's judicious reading of glar'd, and reads, with less propriety and probability, gar'd. Steevens has

² Had I been a mechanic, one of the plebeians to whom he offered his throat. So in Coriolanus:—

— You have made good work,

You and your apron-men; you that stood so much

Upon the voice of occupation, and

The breath of garlic-eaters.

Men of occupation; Opifices et tabernarii.—Baret.

³ The best metal of temper may be worked into qualities contrary to its disposition, or what it is disposed to.

⁴ Has an unfavourable opinion of me. The same phrase occurs again in the first scene of Act III.

⁵ I think Warburton's explanation of this passage the true one:—If I were Brutus, (said he), and Brutus Cassius, he should not cajole me as I do him. To Without annoying me! And there were drawn Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women,

Transformed with their fear; who swore, they saw
Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets.
And yesterday, the bird of night did sit,
Even at noon-day, upon the market-place,
Roosting, and shrieking. When these prodigies
Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,
These are their reasons,—They are natural;
For, I believe they are portentous things
Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time:
But men may construe things after their fashion,
Clean¹ from the purpose of the things themselves.
Comes Cæsar to the Capitol to-morrow?

Casca. He doth; for he did bid Antonius
Send word to you, he would be there to-morrow.

Cic. Good night, then, Casca: this disturbed sky
Is not to walk in.

Casca. Farewell, Cicero.

[Exit CICERO.]

Enter CASSIUS.

Cas. Who's there?

Casca. A Roman.

Cas. Casca, by your voice.

Casca. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night
is this?

Cas. A very pleasing night to honest men.

Casca. Who ever knew the heavens menace so?

Cas. Those, that have known the earth so full of faults.

For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perilous night:
And, thus unbraced, Casca, as you see,
Have bar'd my bosom to the thunder-stone:²
And, when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heaven, I did present myself
Even in the aim and very flash of it.

Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt the heavens?

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Cas. You are dull, Casca; and those sparks of life

That should be in a Roman, you do want,
Or else you use not: You look pale, and gaze,
And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens:
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why birds, and beasts, from quality and kind;
Why old men, fools, and children calculate;³
Why all these things change, from their ordinance,
Their natures, and performed faculties,
To monstrous quality; why, you shall find,
That heaven hath infus'd them with these spirits,
To make them instruments of fear, and warning,
Unto some monstrous state. Now could I, Casca,
Name to thee a man most like this dreadful night;
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion in the Capitol:
A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In personal action; yet prodigious⁴ grown,
And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.

Casca. 'Tis Cæsar that you mean: Is it not,
Cassius?

clearly shown from the poet's own works that his emendation is the true one.

² What is now, in modern language, called a flamender-bolt.

³ I. e. 'why birds and beasts deviate from their condition and nature; why old men, fools, and children calculate'; I. e. foretell or prophesy. At the suggestion of Sir William Blackstone this last line has been erroneously pointed in all the late editions.—

⁴ Why old men fools, and children calculate.

He observed, that 'there was no prodigy in old men's calculating'; but who were so likely to listen to prophecies as children, fools, and the superstitious old?

⁵ Portentous.

⁶ I. e. sinews, muscular strength. See note on King Henry IV. Part II. Act III. Sc. 2.

Cas. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Have thews¹ and limbs like to their ancestors;
But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits;
Our yoke and suzerance show us womanish.

Casca. Indeed, they say, the senators to-morrow
Mean to establish Cæsar as a king:
And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger then;
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius:
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat:
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit;
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.

If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny, that I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure.

Casca. So can I:

So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.²

Cas. And why should Cæsar be a tyrant, then?

Poor man! I know, he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees the Romans are but sheep:
He were no lion, were not Romans hinds.

Those that with haste will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weak straws: What trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate

So vile a thing as Cæsar? But, O, grief!

Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman: then I know
My answer must be made:³ But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.

Casca. You speak to Casca; and to such a man,
That is no fltering tell-tale. Hold my hand:
Be factious⁴ for redress of all these griefs;
And I will set this foot of mine as far,
As who goes farthest.

Cas. There's a bargain made.

Now know you, Casca, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans,
To undergo, with me, an enterprize
Of honourable-dangerous consequence;
And I do know, by this, they stay for me
In Pompey's porch; for now, this fearful night
There is no stir, or walking in the streets;
And the complexion of the element,
In favours⁵ like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter CINNA.

Casca. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cas. 'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait:

He is a friend.—Cinna, where haste you so?

Cin. To find out you: Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cas. No, it is Casca; one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not staid for, Cinna?

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this?

There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cas. Am I not staid for, Cinna? Tell me.

Cin. Yes,

You are. O, Cassius, if you could but win
The noble Brutus to our party——

⁶ Thus in Cymbeline, Act v. Posthumus, speaking of his chains:—

—— take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds.'

⁷ 'I know I shall be called to account, and must answer for having uttered seditious words.' So in Much Ado about Nothing:—'Sweet prince, let me go no further to mine answer; do you hear me, and let this count kill me.'

⁸ 'Hold my hand' is the same as 'Here's my hand.' 'Be factious for redress,' means, be contentious, enterprising for redress.

⁹ The old copy reads, 'In favours.' Favour here is to resemble, for appearance, look, countenance; to favour is to resemble.

Cæs. Be you content: Good Cinna, take this paper,
And look you lay it in the prætor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window: set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.
Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?

Cin. All but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will hic,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Cæs. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre. [Exit CINNA.]

Come, Casca, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Casca. O, he sits high in all the people's hearts:
And that, which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthiness.

Cæs. Him and his worth, and our great need of him,

You have right well conceited. Let us go,
For it is after midnight; and, ere day,
We will awake him, and be sure of him. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. The same. Brutus's Orchard.¹ Enter
BRUTUS.

Brus. What, Lucius! ho!
I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.—
When Lucius, when? Awake, I say: What,
Lucius!

Enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord?

Brus. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit.]

Brus. It must be by his death: and for my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general. He would be crown'd:—
How that might change his nature, there's the question.

It is the bright day, that brings forth the adder;
And that craves wary walking. Crown him?—
That:—

And then, I grant, we put a sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins Remorse² from power: And, to speak truth of
Cæsar,

I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof,³

¹ Orchard and garden appear to have been synonymous with our ancestors. In Romeo and Juliet, Capu-let's garden is twice called orchard.

² Shakespeare usually uses remorse for pity, tenderness of heart.

³ i. e. a matter proved by common experience.

⁴ 'The aspirer once attain'd unto the top,
Cuts off those means by which himself got up:
And with a harder hand, and straighter rein,
Doth curb that looseness he did find before:
Doubting the occasion like might serve again,
His own example makes him fear the more.'

Daniel's Civil Wars, 1602.
⁵ 'As his kind,' like the rest of his species. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—'You must think this, look you, the worm [i. e. serpent] will do his kind.'

⁶ The old copy erroneously reads, 'the first of March.' The correction was made by Theobald; as was the following.

⁷ Here again the old copy reads, fifteen. This was only the dawn of the fifteenth when the boy makes his report.

⁸ The old copy reads:—

'Are then in council, and the state of a man,' &c.

⁹ There is a long and fanciful, but erroneous note by Warburton on this passage, which is curious, as being

That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face:
But when he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: So Cæsar may;
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel

Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these, and these extremities:
And therefore think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind,¹ grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper, thus seal'd up; and I am sure,
It did not lie there, when I went to bed.

Brus. Get you to bed again, it is not day.
Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?

Luc. I know not, sir.

Brus. Look in the calendar, and bring me word.

Luc. I will, sir. [Exit.]

Brus. The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Give so much light, that I may read by them.

[Opens the Letter, and reads.]

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake, and see thyself.

Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress!

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake,——

Such instigations have been often dropp'd
Where I have took them up.

Shall Rome, &c. Thus must I piece it out;
Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What!
Rome?

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king.
Speak, strike, redress!—Am I entreated
To speak, and strike? O Rome! I make thee promise,

If the redress will follow, thou receivest
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.²

[Knock within.]

Brus. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks. [Exit LUCIUS.]

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cæsar,
I have not slept.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
The genius, and the mortal instruments,
Are then in council; and the state of man,³
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.⁴

one of his earliest comments on Shakespeare, addressed to Concanen, when, in league with Theobald and others, he made war against Pope. The following note, by the Rev. Mr. Blakeway, is quite of another character, and takes with it my entire concurrence and approbation:—

'The genius, and the mortal instruments,' &c.
Mortal is assuredly deadly; as it is in Macbeth:—

'—— Come, you spirits,
That tend on mortal thoughts,'

By instruments, I understand our bodily powers, our members: as Othello calls his eyes and hands his speculative and active instruments: and Menenius, in Cæriolanus, Act I. Sc. 1, speaks of the '—— cranks and offices of man,'

The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins.
So intending to paint, as he does very finely, the inward conflict which precedes the commission of some dreadful crime; he represents, as I conceive him, the genius, or soul, consulting with the body, and, as it were, questioning the limbs, the instruments which are to perform this deed of death, whether they can undertake to bear her out in the affair, whether they can screw up their courage to do what she shall enjoin them. The remutuous commotion of opposing sentiments and feelings, produced by the firmness of the soul contending with the secret misgivings of the body; during which the

Re-enter LUCIUS.

LUC. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door,
Who doth desire to see you.

BRU. Is he alone?

LUC. No, sir; there are more with him.

BRU. Do you know them?

LUC. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their ears.

And half their faces buried in their cloaks,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favour.¹

BRU. Let them enter.

[Exit LUCIUS.]

They are the faction. O, conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most free? O, then, by day,
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;

Hide it in smiles, and affability:
For if thou path thy native semblance² on,
Not Erebus itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention.

Enter CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIVS, CINNA, METEL-
LUS CIMBER, and TREBONIUS.

CAS. I think we are too bold upon your rest;
Good-morrow, BRUTUS: Do you trouble you?

BRU. I have been up this hour; awake, all night.
Know I these men, that come along with you?

CAS. Yes, every man of them; and no man here,
But honours you: and every one doth wish,
You had but that opinion of yourself,
Which every noble Roman bears of you.
This is Trebonius.

BRU. He is welcome hither.

CAS. This, Decius Brutus.

BRU. He is welcome too.

CAS. This, Casca; this, Cinna;
And this, Metellus Cimper.

BRU. They are all welcome.
What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night?

CAS. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.]

DEC. Here lies the east: Doth not the day break here?

CASCA. No.

CIN. O, pardon, sir, it doth; and yon gray lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

CASCA. You shall confess, that you are both deceiv'd.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises:
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence, up higher toward the north
He first presents his fire; and the high east
Stands as the Capitol, directly here.

BRU. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

CAS. And let us swear our resolution.

BRU. No, not an oath: If not the face³ of men, mental faculties are, though not actually dormant, yet in a sort of waking stupor, 'crushed by one overwhelming image,' is finely compared to a phantasm or a hideous dream, and by the state of man suffering the nature of an insurrection. Tibalt has something like it in Romeo and Juliet:—

'Patience perforce with wilful choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.'

² 'If thou walk in thy true form.'

³ Johnson thus explains this passage: in which,
with a view perhaps to imitate the abruptness of discourse, Shakespeare has constructed the latter part without any regard to the beginning. 'The face of men' is the 'countenance, the regard, the esteem of the public; in other terms, honour and reputation: or the face of men may mean 'the dejected look of the people.' Thus Cicero in Catilinam:—'Nihil horum ora vultusque moverunt.'

Gray may perhaps support Johnson's explanation:

'And read their history in a nation's eyes.'

Mason thought we should read, 'the faith of men; to which, he says, the context evidently gives support:—

— what other bond,

Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not utter,' &c.

The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse,—
If these be motives weak, break off betimes,
And every man hence to his idle bed;
So let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery.⁴ But if these,
As I am sure they do, bear fire enough
To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour
The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen,
What need we any spur but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? what other bond,
Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter?⁵ and what other oath,
Than honesty to honesty engag'd,
That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautelous,⁶
Old feeble carrions, and such suffering souls
That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear
Such creatures as men doubt: but do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise,
Nor the insuppressible mettle of our spirits,
To think, that, or our cause, or our performance,
Did need an oath; when every drop of blood,
That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
Is guilty of a several bastardy,
If he do break the smallest particle
Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

CAS. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him
I think, he will stand very strong with us.

CASCA. Let us not leave him out.

CIN. No, by no means.

MET. O, let us have him; for his silver hairs
Will purchase us a good opinion,⁷
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:
It shall be said, his judgment rul'd our hands;
Our youths, and wildness, shall no whit appear
But all be buried in his gravity.

BRU. O, name him not; let us not break⁸ with him;
For he will never follow any thing
That other men begin.

CAS. Then leave him out.

CASCA. Indeed, he is not fit.

DEC. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Cæsar?

CAS. Decius, well urg'd:—I think it is not meet,
Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,
Should outlive Cæsar: We shall find of him
A shrewd contriver; and, you know, his means
If he improves them, may well stretch so far,
As to annoy us all; which to prevent,
Let Antony, and Cæsar, fall together.

BRU. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius
Cassius,
To cut the head off, and then hack the limbs;
Like wrath in death, and envy⁹ afterwards:
For Antony is but a limb of Cæsar.
Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.
We all stand up against the spirit of Cæsar;
And in the spirit of men there is no blood:
O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
And not dismember Cæsar! But, alas,
Cæsar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends,

The speech is formed on the following passage in North's Plutarch:—'The conspirators having never taken oath together, nor taken or given any caution or assurance, nor binding themselves one to another by any religious oaths, they kept the matter so secret to themselves,' &c.

⁴ Stevens thinks there may be an allusion here to the custom of decimation, i. e. the selection by lot of every tenth soldier in a general mutiny for punishment.
The poet speaks of this in Coriolanus:—

'By decimation and a thied death
Take thou thy fate.'

⁵ To palter is to shuffle, to equivocate; to go from engagements once made.

⁶ Though cautelous is often used for wary, circum-spect, by old writers, the context plainly shows that Shakespeare uses it here for artful, insidious; opposed to honesty. It is used in Coriolanus, Act iv Sc 1, in the same sense.

⁷ I. e. character. Thus in King Henry IV. Part i,
Act v. Sc. 4:—

'Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion.'

⁸ Let us not break the matter to him.

⁹ Every here, as almost always by Shakespeare, is used for malice.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully ;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds :¹
And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after seem to chide them. This shall make
Our purpose necessary, and not envious ;
Which so appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.
And for Mark Antony, think not of him ;
For he can do no more than Cæsar's arm,
When Cæsar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I do fear him :
For in the ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar,——

Bru. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him :
If he love Cæsar, all that he can do
Is to himself ; take thought,² and die for Cæsar :
And that were much he should ; for he is given
To sports, to wildness, and much company.

Treb. There is no fear in him ; let him not die ;
For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter.

[Clock strikes.]

Bru. Peace, count the clock.

Cas. The clock hath stricken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet,
Whether Cæsar will come forth to-day, or no :

For he is superstitious grown of late ;
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies :³

It may be, these apparent prodigies,
The unaccustom'd terror of this night,
And the persuasion of his augurers,
May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that : If he be so resolv'd,
I can o'erway him : for he loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with helms,⁴
Lions with toils, and men with flatterers :
But, when I tell him, he hates flatterers,
He says, he does ; being then most flattered.
Let me work :

For I can give him humour the true bent ;
And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.
Bru. By the eighth hour : Is that the uttermost ?

Cas. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Cæsar hard,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey ;
I wonder, none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him :⁵
He loves me well, and I have given him reasons ;
Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.

Cas. The morning comes upon us : We'll leave you, Brutus ;—

And, friends, disperse yourselves : but all remember

1 'Gradive, dedisti,
Ne qua manus vatem, ne quid mortalis bello
Ludere tela queant, sanctum et venerabile Diti

The following passage of the old translation of Plutarch was probably in the poet's thoughts :—'Cæsar turned himself no-where but he was stricken at by some, and still naked swords in his face, and was hacked and mangled among them as a wild beast taken of hunters.'

2 To take thought, is to grieve, to be troubled in mind. See note on Hamlet, Act iv. Sc. 5 ; and Antony and Cleopatra, Act iii. Sc. 2. 'My bodie surely is well, or in good case ; but I take thought, or my minde is full of fancies and trouble.'—Baret.

3 Whether.

4 'Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.'
Main opinion is fixed opinion, general estimation.
Thus in Troilus and Cressida :—

'Why then should we our main opinion crush,
In talent of our best man ?'

Fantasy was used for imagination or conceit in Shakespeare's time ; but the following passage from Lavaterus on Ghosts and Spirits, 1572, may elucidate its meaning in the present instance :—'Suidas maketh a difference between phantasma and phantasia, saying that phantasma is an imagination or appearance of a sight, or thing which is, as are those sights which

What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily ;
Let not our looks put on our purposes ;
But bear it as our Roman actors do,
With untir'd spirits, and formal constancy :
And so, good-morrow to you every one.

[Exeunt all but Brutus.]

Boy ! Lucius !—Fast asleep ?—It is no matter ;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber :
Thou hast no figures,⁶ nor no fantasies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men :
Therefore thou sleepest so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my lord !

Bru. Portia, what mean you ? Wherefore rise you now ?

It is not for your health, thus to commit
Your weak condition to the raw-cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours, neither. You have ungently,
Brutus,

Stole from my bed : And yesternight, at supper,
You suddenly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing, and sighing, with your arms across,
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd upon me with ungentle looks :
I urg'd you further ; then you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot :
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not ;
But, with an angry westure of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you : So I did ;
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled ; and, withal,
Hoping it was but an effect of humour,
Which sometime hath his hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep ;
And, could it work so much upon your shape,
As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,⁷
I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and were he not in health,
He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do :—Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick ? and is it physical

To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning ? What, is Brutus sick
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night ?
And tempt the rheumy and unpurg'd air
To add unto his sickness ? No, my Brutus ;
You have some sick offence within your mind,
Which, by the right and virtue of my place,
I ought to know of : And, upon my knees,
I charm you,⁸ by my once commended beauty, men in their sleeps do think they see ; but that phantasia is the seeing of that only which is in very deeds.'

Ceremonies signify omens or signs deduced from sacrifices or other ceremonial rites. Thus in a subsequent passage :—

'Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me.'

5 Unicorns are said to have been taken by one, who, running behind a tree, eluded the violent push the animal was making at him, so that his horn spent its force on the trunk, and stuck fast, detaining the animal till he was despatched by the hunter. This is alluded to by Spenser, F. Q. b. li. c. 5; and by Chapman, in his Bussy d'Ambois, 1607. Bears are reported to have been surprised by means of a mirror, which they would gaze on, affording their pursuers an opportunity of taking the surer aim. This circumstance is mentioned by Claudian. Elephants were seduced into pitfalls, lightly covered with hurdles and turf, on which a proper bait to tempt them was placed. See Pliny's Natural History, b. viii.

6 I.e. by his house ; make that your way home.

7 'Let not our faces put on, that is, wear or show, our designs.'

8 Shapes created by imagination.

9 Condition is temper, disposition, demeanour.

10 'I charm you.' This is the reading of the old copy, which Pope and Hanmer changed to 'I charge you,' without necessity. To charm is to invoke or en

By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, yourself, your half,
Why you are heavy; and what men to-night
Have had resort to you: for here have been
Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkness.

Brut. Kæsel not, gentle Portia.
Por. I should not need, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
Is it excepted, I should know no secrets
That appertain to you? Am I yourself,
But, as it were, in sort, or limitation;
To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,
And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs

Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.¹

Brut. You are my true and honourable wife;
As dear to me, as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.²

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.

I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman that Lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman well reputed; Cato's daughter.
Think you, I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd, and so husbanded?
Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose them:
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound
Here, in the thigh: Can I bear that with patience,
And not my husband's secrets?

Brut. O ye gods,
Render me worthy of this noble wife!
[Knocking within.]

Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in a while;
And by and by thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart.
All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the character³ of my sad brows:—
Leave me with haste. [Exit PORTIA.]

Enter LUCIUS and LIGARIUS.

Lucius, who is that knocks?
Luc. Here is a sick man, that would speak with you.

Brut. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.— Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius! how?

Lig. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.
Brut. O, what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,

To wear a kerchief? 'Would, you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of honour.⁴

treat by words or other fascinating means. Thus in Cymbeline:—

—his graces
That from my muteest conscience to my tongue
Charms this report out.¹

1 The general idea of this part of Portia's speech is taken from the old translation of Plutarch. Lord Sterling, in his Julius Cæsar, 1807, uses similar language:—

'I was not, Brutus, match'd with thee, to be
A partner only of thy board and bed:

Each servile where in those might equal me,
That did herself to nought but pleasure wed.

No:—Portia spous'd thee with a mind to abide
Thy fellow in all fortunes, good or ill,

With chains of mutual love together tied,
As those that have two breasts, one heart, two souls, one will.'

2 These glowing words have been adopted by Gray in his celebrated Ode:—

'Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart.'

3 Character is defined 'writing by characters or strange marks.' Brutus therefore means that he will divulge to her the secret cause of the sadness marked on his countenance.' In The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. Sc. 1, it is said, 'Fairies use flowers for their character.'

4 This is from Plutarch's Life of Brutus, as translated by North:—'Brutus went to see him being sick in his bed, and said unto him, O Ligarius, in what a time art thou sick?' Ligarius, rising up in his bed and taking

Brut. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before,
I here discard my sickness. Soul of Rome!
Brave son, deriv'd from honourable loins!
Thou, like an exorcist,⁵ hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit. Now bid me run,
And I will strive with things impossible;
Yea, get the better of them. What's to do?

Brut. A piece of work, that will make sick men whole.

Lig. But are not some whole, that we must make sick?

Brut. That must we also. What it is, my Caius,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going
To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot;
And, with a heart new-fir'd, I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it sufficeth,
That Brutus leads me on.

Brut. Follow me, then.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room in Cæsar's Palace. Thunder and Lightning. Enter CÆSAR, in his Night-gown.

Cæs. Nor heaven, nor earth, have been at peace to-night:

Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out,
Help, ho! they murder Cæsar!—Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord?
Cæs. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit.]

Enter CALPHURNIA.

Cal. What mean you, Cæsar? Think you to walk forth?

You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

Cæs. Cæsar shall forth: The things that threaten'd me,

Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall see
The face of Cæsar, they are vanish'd.

Cal. Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies,⁶ Yet now they fright me. There is one within,
Besides the things that we have heard and seem,
Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.
A lioness hath whelp'd in the streets;
And graves have yaw'n'd, and yielded up their dead:⁷

Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
In ranks, and squadrons, and right form of war,⁸

Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol:
The noise of battle hurl'd⁹ in the air,

him by the right hande, sayed unto him, Brutus, if thou hast any great enterprise in hande worthe of thy selfe, I am whole.' Lord Sterling has also introduced this passage into his Julius Cæsar. Shakespeare has given to Romans the manners of his own time. It was a common practice in England for those who were sick to wear a kerchief on their heads, and still continues among the common people in many places. 'If (says Fuller) this county [Cheshire] hath bred no writers in that faculty [physic], the wonder is the less, if it be true what I read, that if any there be sick, they make him a poet and tie a kerchief on his head, and if that will not mend him, then God be merciful to him.'—Worthies, Cheshire, p. 180.

5 Here and in all other places Shakespeare uses exorcist for one who raises spirits, not one who lays them. But it has been erroneously said that he is singular in this use of the word.

6 Never paid a regard to prodigies or omens. The adjective is used in the same sense in The Devil's Charter, 1607:—

'The devil hath provided in his covenant
I should not cross myself at any time,
I never was so ceremonious.'

7 Shakespeare has adverted to this again in Hamlet:—
'A little ere the mighty Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the streets of Rome.'

8 Vires per colum co:currere acies, rutilantia arma, et subito nubium igne collucere.—Æt. Tacitus, Hist. b. v.

9 To hurtle is to clask, or move with violence and noise.

Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan :
And ghosts did shriek, and squeal about the streets.
O, Cæsar ! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cæs. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty gods ?
Yet Cæsar shall go forth ; for these predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Cæsar.

Cal. When beggars die, there are no comets seen ;
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.¹

Cæs. Towards die many times before their deaths ;²
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear ;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come.

Re-enter a Servant.

What say the augurers ?

Serv. They would not have you to stir forth
to-day.

Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cæs. The gods do this in shame of cowardice :³
Cæsar should be a beast without a heart,
If he should stay at home to-day for fear.
No, Cæsar shall not : Danger knows full well,
That Cæsar is more dangerous than he.
We were⁴ two lions litter'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible ;
And Cæsar shall go forth.⁵

Cal. Alas, my lord,
Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence.
Do not go forth to-day : Call it my fear,
That keeps you in the house, and not your own.
We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house ;
And he shall say, you are not well to-day :
Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this.

Cæs. Mark Antony shall say, I am not well ;
And, for thy humour, I will stay at home.

Enter DECIVS.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Dec. Cæsar, all hail ! Good morrow, worthy
Cæsar :

I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

1 This may have been suggested by Suetonius, who relates that a blazing star appeared for seven days together during the celebration of games, instituted by Augustus, in honour of Julius. The common people believed that this indicated his reception among the gods, his statues were accordingly ornamented with its figure, and medals struck on which it was represented ; one of them is engraved in Mr. Douce's Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 62 ; from whence this note is taken. Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, in his Defensative against the Poison of supposed Prophecies, 1683, says, 'Next to the shadows and pretences of experience (which have been met with all at large), they seem to brag most of the strange events which follow (for the most part) after blazing stars ; as if they were the summonses of God to call princes to the seat of judgment. The surest way to shake their painted bulwarks of experience is, by making plain that neither princes always dye when comets blaze, nor comets ever (i. e. always) when princes dye.' In this work is a curious anecdote of Queen Elizabeth, 'then lying at Richmond, being dissuaded from looking on a comet ; with a courage equal to the greatness of her state she caused the windows to be set open, and said, jacla est alea—the dice are thrown.'

2 'When some of his friends did counsel him to have a guard for the safety of his person, he would never consent to it ; but said, it was better to die once than always to be afraid of death.'—North's Plutarch.

3 Lord Essex in a letter to Lord Ruland, observes, 'That as he which dieth nobly doth live for ever, so he that doth live in fear doth die continually.'—And Marston, in his Insatiate Countess, 1613 :—

'Fear is my vassal ; when I frown he flies :

A hundred times in life a coward dies.'

4 Johnson remarks, 'That the ancients did not place courage in the heart.' Mr. Douce observes, that he had

Cæs. And you are come in very happy time,
To bear my greeting to the senators,
And tell them that I will not come to-day :
Cannot, is false ; and that I dare not, falser :
I will not come to-day : Tell them so, Decius.

Cal. Say, he is sick.

Cæs. Shall Cæsar send a message ?
Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell gray-breeds the truth ;
Decius, go tell them, Cæsar will not come.

Dec. Most mighty Cæsar, let me know some cause,

Lest I be laugh'd at, when I tell them so.

Cæs. The cause is in my will, I will not come ;
That is enough to satisfy the senate.

But, for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will let you know ;
Calphurnia here, my wife, stays me at home :
She dreamt to-night she saw my statue,⁶
Which, like a fountain, with a hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood ; and many lusty Romans
Came smiling, and did bathe their hands in it.
And these doth she apply for warnings and portents
And evils imminent ; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day.

Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted ;

It was a vision, fair and fortunate :
Your statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck
Reviving blood : and that great men shall press
For tinctures, stains, relics, and cognizance.⁷
This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

Cæs. And this way have you well expounded it.

Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say ;

And know it now : The senate have concluded
To give, this day, a crown to mighty Cæsar.

If you shall send them word, you will not come,
Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock
Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,

Break up the senate till another time,

When Cæsar's wife shall meet with better dreams.

If Cæsar hide himself, shall they not whisper,

Lo, Cæsar is afraid ?

Pardon me, Cæsar ; for my dear, dear love

To your proceeding bids me tell you this ;

And reason to my love is liable.⁸

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now, Cal phurnia ?

forgotten his classics strangely, as he has shown by several extracts from Virgil and Ovid.

4 The old copy reads, 'We hear,' &c. The emendation was made by Theobald. Upon proposed to read, 'We are,' &c.

5 Steevens observes, that any speech of Cæsar, throughout this scene, will appear to disadvantage, if compared with the following, put into his mouth by May in the seventh book of his Supplement to La can — — Plus me Calphurnia luctus,

Et lachryme movere tuas, quam tristia vatum
Responses, infausæ volucres, aut ulla dierum
Vana superstitio poterant. Omentis timore
Si nunc inciperem, quos non mihi tempora posthac
Anxia transirent ? quæ lux jucunda maneret ?
Aut quæ libertas ? frusira servare timor
(Dum nec luctu frui, nec mortem arcere licebat)
Cogat, et huic capiti quod Roma veretur, arripere
Jus dabit, et vane scempe dominabitur augur.

6 'The old copy reads statue ; but it has been shown by Mr. Reed beyond controversy that statue was pronounced as a trisyllable by our ancestors, and hence generally written statue. Thus in Lord Bacon's Advancement of Learning, ed. 1633, p. 88 :—'It is not possible to have the true pictures or statuæ of Cyrus, Alexander, Cæsar, no, nor of the kings or great personages of much later years.' Again :—'without which the history of the world seems to be as the statue of Polyphemus, with his eye out.'

7 At the execution of several of our ancient nobility, martyrs, &c. we are told that handkerchiefs were twisted with their blood, and preserved as affectionate or salutary memorials of the deceased.

8 'And reason, or propriety of conduct and language, is subordinate to my love.'

I am ashamed I did yield to them.—
Give me my robe, for I will go:—

Enter PUBLIUS, BRUTUS, LIGARIUS, METELLUS, CASCA, TREBONIUS, and CINNA.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.
Pub. Good morrow, Cæsar.

Cas. Welcome, Publius.—
What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?—
Good morrow, Casca.—Caius Ligarius,
Cæsar was ne'er so much your enemy,
As that same ague which hath made you lean.—
What is't o'clock?

Bru. Cæsar, 'tis stricken eight.
Cas. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter ANTONY.

See! Antony, that reveals long e' nights,
Is notwithstanding up:—
Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to meet noble Cæsar.

Cas. Bid them prepare within:—
I am to blame to be thus waited for.—
Now, Cinna:—Now, Metellus:—What, Trebonius!
I have an hour's talk in store for you;
Remember that you call on me to-day:
Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Cæsar, I will:—and so near will I be,

[Aside.

That your best friends shall wish I had been further.
Cas. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine
with me;

And we, like friends, will straightway go together.
Bru. That every like is not the same, O Cæsar,
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon!

[Exit.

SCENE III. The same. A Street near the Capitol.
Enter ARTEMIDORUS, reading a Paper.

Art. Cæsar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cas-sius; come not near Casca; have an eye to Cinna;
trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber;
Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou be'st not immortal, look about you: Security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, ARTEMIDORUS.

Here will I stand, till Cæsar pass along,
And as a suitor will I give him this.
My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.¹

If thou read this, O Cæsar, thou may'st live;
If not, the fates with traitors do contrive.² [Exit.

SCENE IV. The same. Another Part of the same Street, before the House of Brutus. Enter PORTIA and LUCIUS.

Por. I pr'ythee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:
Why dost thou stay?³

Luc. To know my errand, madam.

Por. I would have had thee there, and here again,
Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there.—
O constancy, be strong upon my side!
Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!
I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel!—
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?

Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?
And so return to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look
well,

For he went sickly forth: And take good note,

or factious rivalry. See Troilus and Cressida, Act II.
Sc. 3.

² The fates join with traitors in contriving thy destruction.

³ Shakespeare has expressed the perturbation of King
Richard the Third's mind by the same incident:—
"Dull unmindful villain!"

Why stayest thou here, and go'st not to the duke?

What Cæsar doth, what suitors press to him.

Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por.

Pr'ythee, listen well;
I heard a bustling rumour, like a fray,
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

*Enter Soothsayer.

Por.

Come hither, fellow:
Which way hast thou been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.

Por. What is't o'clock?

Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol?

Sooth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand,
To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou
not?

Sooth. That I have, lady: if it will please Cæsar
To be so good to Cæsar, as to hear me,
I shall beseech him to befriend himself.

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

Good morrow to you. Here the street is narrow:
The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels,
Of senators, of pretors, common suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:

I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. [Exit.

Por. I must go in.—Ah me! how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O, Brutus!

The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!
Sure, the boy heard me:—Brutus hath a suit,⁴

That Cæsar will not grant.—O, I grow faint:
Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord:

Say, I am merry: come to me again,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. *The same. The Capitol; the Senate sitting. A Crowd of People in the Street leading to the Capitol; among them ARTEMIDORUS, and the Soothsayer. Flourish. Enter CÆSAR, BRU-TUS, CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIVS, METELLUS,
TREBONIUS, CINNA, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, POPI-LIUS, PUBLIUS, and others.*

Cas. The ides of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar; but not gone.

Art. Hail, Cæsar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read,
At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Art. O, Cæsar, read mine first; for mine's a suit
That touches Cæsar nearer: Read it, great Cæsar.

Cas. What touches us ourself, shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly.

Cas. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub.

Sirrah, give place.

Cas. What, urge you your petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitol.

CÆSAR enters the Capitol, the rest following. All the Senators rise.

Pop. I wish, your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cas. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop.

Fare you well.

[Advances to CÆSAR.

Bru. What said Popilius Lena?

Cat. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness' pleasure.

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

⁴ Mr. Tyrwhitt says, 'The introduction of the Soothsayer here is unnecessary, and improper. All that he is made to say should be given to Artemidorus; who is seen and accosted by Portia in his passage from his first stand to one more convenient.'

⁵ These words Portia addresses to Lucius, to deceive him, by assigning a false cause for her pretent perturbation.

Cæs. He wish'd, to-day our enterprize might thrive.
I fear our purpose is discover'd.

Brû. Look, how he makes to Cæsar: Mark him.

Cæs. Casca, be sudden, for we fear prevention.—
Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known,
Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back,
For I will slay myself.

Brû. Cassius, be constant:
Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes;
For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cæs. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you,
Brutus,

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exit ANTONY and TREBONIUS. CÆSAR and the Senators take their seats.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go,
And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Brû. He is address'd: I press near, and second him.
Cin. Casca, you are the first that rears your² hand.

Cæs. Are we all ready? What is now amiss,
That Cæsar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant
Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat

An humble heart:— [Kneeling.]

Cæs. I must prevent thee, Cimber.

These couchings, and these lowly courtesies,

Might fire the blood of ordinary men;

And turn pre-ordination,³ and first decree,

Into the law of children.⁴ Be not fond,

To think that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,

That will be thaw'd from the true quality

With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low-crook'd curtsies, and base spaniel fawning.

Thy brother by decree is banished;

If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn for him,

I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.

Know, Cæsar doth not wrong; nor without cause

Will he be satisfied.⁵

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my own,

To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear,

For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Brû. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar;

Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may

Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

1 i. e. he is ready.
2 According to the rules of modern grammar Shakespeare should have written his hand; but other instances of similar false concord are to be found in his compositions. Steevens is angry with Malone for laying them to the charge of the poet, and would transfer them to the player-editors or their printer. Ritson thinks the words 'Are we all ready?' should be given to Cinna, and not to Cæsar.

3 Pre-ordination for ordinance already established.
4 The old copy erroneously reads 'the law of children.' Lane, as anciently written, was easily confounded with lane.

5 Ben Jonson has shown the ridicule of this passage in the Induction to The Staple of News; and notices it in his Discoveries as one of the lapses of Shakespeare's pen; but certainly without that malevolence which has been ascribed to him: and he it observed, that is almost the only passage in his works which can justly be construed into an attack on Shakespeare. He has been accused of quoting the passage unfaithfully; but Mr. Tyrwhitt surmised, and Mr. Gifford is decidedly of opinion, that the passage originally stood as cited by Jonson; thus:—

'Met. Cæsar, thou dost me wrong.
'Cæs. Cæsar, did never wrong, but with just cause.'
Mr. Tyrwhitt has endeavoured to defend the passage by observing, that wrong is not always a synonymous term for injury; and that Cæsar is meant to say, that he doth not inflict any evil or punishment but with just cause. 'The fact seems to be (says Mr. Gifford), that this verse, which closely borders on absurdity, without being absolutely absurd, escaped the poet in the heat of composition; and being one of those quaint slips which are readily remembered, became a jocular and familiar phrase for reproving (as in the passage of Ben Jonson's Induction) the perverse, and unreasonable expectations of the male or female gossips of the day.'

6 i. e. intelligent, capable of apprehending.
7 i. e. 'still holds his place unshaken by suit or solicitation,' of which the object is to swore the person addressed.

Cæs. What, Brutus?

Cæs. Pardon, Cæsar; Cæsar, pardon:
As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall,
To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cæs. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you;
If I could pray to move, prayers would move me:
But I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true-fix'd, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the firmament.
The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,
They are all fire, and every one doth shine;
But there's but one in all doth hold his place:
So, in the world; 'Tis furnish'd well with men,
And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive;
Yet, in the number, I do know but one
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion;⁸ and, that I am he,
Let me a little show it, even in this;
That I was constant, Cimber should be banish'd,
And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O, Cæsar,—

Cæs. Hence! wilt thou lift up Olympus

Dec. Great Cæsar,—

Cæs. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

Casca. Speak, hands, for me.

[CASCA seizes CÆSAR in the neck. CÆSAR catches hold of his arm. He is then stabbed by several other Conspirators, and at last
by MARCUS BRUTUS.]

Cin. Et tu, Brute?—Then, fall, Cæsar.

[Dies. The Senators and People retire in confusion.]

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—
Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cæs. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out,
Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!

Brû. People, and senators! be not affrighted;
Fly not; stand still:—ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.⁹

Dec. And Cassius too.

Brû. Where's Publius?

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Cæsar's

Should chance—

8 Suetonius says, that when Cæsar put Metellus Cimber back 'he caught hold of Cæsar's gown, at both shoulders, whereupon, as he cried out, This is violence, Cæsar came in second, full a foot, and wounded him a little beneath the throat. The Cæsar, catching Cassius by the same, thrust it through with his stile or writing punches; and with that, being about to leap forward, he was met with another wound and stayed.' Being then assailed on all sides, 'with three and twenty he was stabbed, during which time he gave but one groan (without any word uttered), and that was at the first thrust; though some have written, that, as Marcus Brutus came running upon him, he said, and thou my sonne.' Holland's Translation, 1607. Pictarch says that, on receiving his first wound from Cæsar, 'he caught hold of Cæsar's sword, and held it hard; and they both cried out, Cæsar in Latin, O riks traier Casca, what dost thou? and Cæsar, in Greek, to his brother, Brother, help me.' The conspirators, having then compassed him on every side, 'hacked and mangled him,' &c.; 'and then Brutus himself gave him one wound above the privities. Men report also, that Cæsar did still defend himself against the roem, making every way with his bodie; but when he saw Brutus with his sword drawn, in his hands, then he pulled his gowne over his heade, and made no more resistance.' Neither of these writers, therefore, furnished Shakespeare with this exclamation. It occurs in The True Tragedie of Richard Duke of York, 1590; on which he formed the Third Part of King Henry VI.
'Et tu, Brute? Wilt thou stab Cæsar too?'
And is translated in Cæsar's Legend, Mirror for Magistrates, 1567:—

'And Brutus thou my sonne, quoth I, whom erst I loved best.'

The words probably appeared originally in the old Latin play on the Death of Cæsar.

9 We have now taken leave of Casca. Shakespeare knew that he had a sufficient number of heroes on his hands, and was glad to lose an individual in the crowd, Casca's singularity of manners would have appeared a little advantage amid the succeeding war and tumult

Bru. Talk not of standing;—Publius, good cheer; There is no harm intended to your person, Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius.

Cæs. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people, Rushing on us, should do you age some mischief.

Bru. Do so;—and let no man abide this deed, But we the doers.

Re-enter TREBONIUS.

Cæs. Where's Antony?

Tre. Fled to his house amaz'd: Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run, As it were doomsday.

Bru. Fates! we will know your pleasures:— That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time, And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cæs. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life, Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit: So are we Cæsar's friends, that have abridg'd His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop, And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords: Then walk we forth, even to the market-place; And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads, Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cæs. Stoop, then, and wash. How many ages hence,

Shall this our lofty scene be acted over, In states unborn, and accents yet unknown?

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport, That now on Pompey's basis lies along, No worthier than the dust?

Cæs. So oft as that shall be, So often shall the knot of us be call'd The men that gave our country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cæs. Ay, every man away: Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Bru. Soft, who comes here? A friend of Antony's.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel; Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down: And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say: Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest; Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving: Say, I love Brutus, and I honour him; Say, I fear'd Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd him. If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony May safely come to him, and be receiv'd How Cæsar hath deserv'd to lie in death, Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead So well as Brutus living; but will follow The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus, Thorough the hazards of this untrod state, With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman; I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place, He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour, Depart untouch'd.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently.

[Exit Servant.]

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend.

Cæs. I wish we may: but yet have I a mind, That fears him much; and my misgiving still Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

1 Johnson explains this:—'Who else may be supposed to have overtopped his equals, and grown too high for the public safety?' This explanation will derive more support than has yet been given to it, from the following speech of Oliver, in As You Like It, Act I. Sc. II, when incensed at the high bearing of his brother Orlando:—'Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will physic your rankness.'

2 'To you (says Brutus) our swords have leaden points: our arms, strong in the deed of malice they have just performed, and our hearts united like those of brothers in the action, are yet open to receive you with all possible regard.' This explanation by Steevens is, it must be confessed, very ingenious; and yet I think was should read, as he himself suggested:—

'Our arms no strength of malice.'

Re-enter ANTONY.

Bru. But here comes Antony.—Welcome, Mark Antony.

Ant. O, mighty Cæsar! Dost thou lie so low? Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils, Shrunk to this little measure?—Fare thee well.—I know not, gentlemen, what you intend, Who else must be let blood, who else is rank: If I myself, there is no hour so fit As Cæsar's death's hour! nor no instrument Of half that worth, as those your swords, made rich With the most noble blood of all this world. I do beseech you, if you bear me hard, Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke, Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years, I shall not find myself so apt to die: No place will please me so, no mean of death, As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off, The choice and master spirits of this age.

Bru. O, Antony! beg not your death of us. Though now we must appear bloody and cruel, As by our hands, and thus our present act, You see we do; yet see you but our hands, And this the bleeding business they have done: Our hearts you see not, they are painful; Add pity to the general wrong of Rome, (As fire drives out fire, so pity, pity,) Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part, To you our swords have leaden points, Mark Antony:

Our arms in strength of malice, and our hearts, Of brothers' temper, do receive you in With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.³ Cæs. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's, In the disposing of new dignities.⁴

Bru. Only be patient, till we have appeas'd The multitude, beside themselves with fear, And then we will deliver you the cause, Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him, Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom. Let each man render me his bloody hand: First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you:— Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand:— Now, Decius Brutus, yours:—now yours, Metellus; Yours, Cinna;—and, my valiant Cæsar, yours:— Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.

Gentlemen all,—alas! what shall I say? My credit now stands on such slippery ground, That one of two bad ways you must conceit me, Either a coward or a flatterer.— That I did love thee, Cæsar, O, 'tis true: If then thy spirit look upon us now, Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death To see thy Antony making his peace, Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes, Most noble! in the presence of thy corpse? Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds, Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood, It would become me better, than to close In terms of friendship with thine enemies. Pardon me, Julius!—Here wast thou bay'd, brave heart:

Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand, Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe.⁵

which would render the passage clear without a commentary.

3 Mr. Blakeway observes, that Shakespeare has maintained the consistency of Cæsar's character, who, being selfish and greedy himself, endeavours to influence Antony by similar motives. Brutus, on the other hand, is invariably represented as disinterested and generous, and is adorned by the poet with so many good qualities, that we are almost tempted to forget that he was an assassin.

4 Lethe is used by many old writers for death. 'The proud nation that great Asia nurs'd Is now extinct in lethe.'

Heywood's Iron Age, Part II. 1682. It appears to have been used as a word of one syllable in this sense; and is derived from lethum, Lat. Our ancient language was also enriched with the derivatives lethal, lethality, lethiferous, &c.

O world! thou wast the forest to this hart;
And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.—
How like a deer, stricken by many princes,
Dost thou here lie!

Cas. Mark Antony—

Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius:
The enemies of Cæsar shall say this;
Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Cæsar so;
But what compact mean you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our friends;
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was indeed,

Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.
Friends! am I with you all, and love you all;
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons,
Why, and wherein, Cæsar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle:
Our reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seek:
And am moreover suitor, that I may Produce his body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.

Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.—
You know not what you do; Do not consent,

[Aside.]

That Antony speak in his funeral:
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter?

Bru. By your pardon;
I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Cæsar's death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission;
And that we are contented, Cæsar shall
Have all true rites, and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more, than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall; I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Cæsar's body.
You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar;
And say, you do't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral: and you shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;
I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body, then, and follow us.

[Exeunt all but ANTONY.]

Ant. O, pardon me, thou piece of bleeding earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,
That ever lived in the tide of times.¹
Wo to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,—
Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,

¹ This grammatical impropriety is still so prevalent, that the omission of the anomalous a would give some consciousness to the sound of an otherwise familiar expression.

² That is, in the course of times

³ By men, Antony means not mankind in general, but those Romans whose attachment to the cause of the conspirators, or wish to revenge Cæsar's death, would expose them to wounds in the civil wars which he supposed that event would give rise to. The generality of the curse is limited by the subsequent words, 'the parts of Italy,' and 'in these confines.'

⁴ 'Cry Havoc,' and let slip the dogs of war.' Havoc was the word by which declaration was made, in the military operations of old, that no quarter should be given: as appears from 'the Office of the Constable and Marechal in the Tyme of Werre,' included in the Black Book of the Admiralty.

To let slip a dog was the technical phrase in hunting the hart, for releasing the hounds from the leash or slip of leather by which they were held in hand until it was judged proper to let them pursue the animal chased.

To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue!—
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;¹
Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war;
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds:
And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
Cry Havoc,² and let slip the dogs of war;
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Cæsar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Cæsar, did write for him to come to Rome.

Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming:
And bid me say to you by word of mouth,—
O, Cæsar!— [Seeing the Body.]

Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep.
Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath chanc'd:

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome⁴ of safety for Octavius yet;
Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay awhile;
Thou shalt not back, till I have borne this corpse
Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men;
According to the which, thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lead me your hand.

[Exeunt, with CÆSAR'S Body.]

SCENE II. The same. The Forum. Enter
BRUTUS and CASSIUS, and a Throng of Citizens.

Cit. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied.

Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience,
friends.—

Cassius, go you into the other street,
And part the numbers.—
Those that will hear me speak, let them stay here;
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Cæsar's death.

1 Cit. I will hear Brutus speak.

2 Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons,
When severally we hear them rendered.

[Exit CASSIUS, with some of the Citizens.]

BRUTUS goes into the Rostrum.

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: Silence!

Bru. Be patient till the last.
Romans, countrymen, and lovers!⁶ hear me for my

Steele, in the Tautler, No. 137, and some others after him, think that, by the dogs of war, sword, and famine are typified. So in the Chorus to Act I. of King Henry V.:

— at his heels,

Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment.'

⁵ This jingling quibble upon Rome and room has occurred before in Act I. Sc. 2:—

'Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough.'

It is deserving of notice on no other account than as it shows the pronunciation of Rome in Shakespeare's time. So in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece, 1638:—

— You shall have my room,

My Rome indeed; for what I seem it be,

Brutus is not, but born great Rome to free.'

⁶ Warburton thinks this speech very fine in its kind, though unlike the laconic style of ancient oratory ascribed to Brutus. Stevens observes that 'this artificial jingle of short sentences was affected by most of the orators of Shakespeare's time, whether in the pulpit or cause; and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for mine honour; and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom; and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Cæsar was no less than his. If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer,—Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves; than that Cæsar were dead, to live all free men? As Cæsar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him: but, as he was ambitious, I slew him: There is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile, that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

Cit. None, Brutus, none.

[Several speaking at once.]

Br. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar, than you shall do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol: his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter ANTONY and others, with CÆSAR'S Body.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony: who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart: That, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

Cit. Live, Brutus, live! live!

1 Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

2 Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

3 Cit. Let him be Cæsar.

4 Cit.

Cæsar's better parts shall now be crown'd in Brutus.

1 Cit. We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamours.

Br. My countrymen,—

2 Cit. Peace; silence! Brutus speaks.

1 Cit. Peace, ho!

Br. Good countrymen, let me depart alone, And, for my sake, stay here with Antony: Do grace to Cæsar's corpse, and grace his speech Tending to Cæsar's glories; which Mark Antony, By our permission, is allow'd to make. I do entreat you not a man depart, Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.]

1 Cit. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3 Cit. Let him go up into the public chair;

We'll hear him:—Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholden to you.

4 Cit. What does he say of Brutus?

3 Cit.

He says, for Brutus' sake, He finds himself beholden to us all.

4 Cit. 'Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

1 Cit. This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3 Cit. Nay, that's certain:

We are bless'd, that Rome is rid of him.

2 Cit. Peace; let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,— at the bar. It may therefore be regarded rather as an imitation of the false eloquence then in vogue, than as a specimen of laconic brevity. It is worthy of remark, that Voltaire, who has stolen and transplanted into his tragedy of Brutus the fine speech of Antony to the people, and has unblushingly received the highest compliments upon it from the King of Prussia, Count Algarotti, and others, affects to extol this address of Brutus, while he is most disingenuously silent on the subject of that of Antony, which he chose to purloin.

1 Lover and friend were synonymous with our ancestors.

Cit. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him. The evil, that men do, lives after them; The good is oft interred with their bones; So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus Hath told you, Cæsar was ambitious; If it were so, it was a grievous fault; And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it. Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest, (For Brutus is an honourable man; So are they all; all honourable men,) Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral. He was my friend, faithful and just to me: But Brutus says, he was ambitious, And Brutus is an honourable man. He hath brought many captives home to Rome, Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill: Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious? When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept: Ambition should be made of sterner stuff: Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious; And Brutus is an honourable man.

You all did see, that on the Lupercal,

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And, sure, he is an honourable man.

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,

But here I am to speak what I do know.

You all did love him once, not without cause;

What cause witholds you then to mourn for him?

O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,

And men have lost their reason!—Bear with me;

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,

And I must pause till it come back to me.

1 Cit. Methinks, there is much reason in his sayings.

2 Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Cæsar has had great wrong.

3 Cit. Has he, masters?

I fear, there will a worse come in his place.

4 Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;

Therefore, 'tis certain, he was not ambitious.

1 Cit. If it be found so, some will dear abide it.

2 Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

3 Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome, than Antony.

4 Cit. Now mark him, he begins again to speak.

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Cæsar might Have stood against the world: now lies he there,

And none so poor to do him reverence.

O, masters! if I were dispos'd to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,

Who, you all know, are honourable men:

I will not do them wrong; I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,

Than I will wrong such honourable men.

But here's a parchment, with the seal of Cæsar,

I found it in his closet, 'tis his will:

Let but the commons hear his testament,

(Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read,) And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds

And dip their napkins in his sacred blood;

Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,

And, dying, mention it within their wills,

Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,

Unto their issue.

4 Cit. We'll hear the will: Read it, Mark Antony.

There would not have been again noticed, but for Mr. Reed's whimsical notion that it was not authenticated by examples, and that Shakespeare found it in North's Plutarch alone. Malone has adduced a host of examples, but any old Latin Dictionary, under the word amicus, would serve to confute Mr. Reed.

2 'The meanest man is now too high to do reverence to Cæsar.'

3 Handkerchiefs

Cit. The will, the will; we will hear Cæsar's will.

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it;

It is not meet you know how Cæsar lov'd you. You are not wood, you are not stones, but men; And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar, It will inflame you, it will make you mad:

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs; For if you should, O, what would come of it!

4 Cit. Read the will; we will hear it, Antony; You shall read us the will; Cæsar's will.

Ant. Will you be patient? Will you stay awhile? I have o'ershot myself, to tell you of it.

I fear, I wrong the honourable men, Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar; I do fear it.

4 Cit. They were traitors: Honourable men!

Cit. The will! the testament!

2 Cit. They were villains, murderers: The will! read the will!

Ant. You will compel me then to read the will? Then make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar, And let me show you him that made the will.

Shall I descend? And will you give me leave?

Cit. Come down.

2 Cit. Descend.

[He comes down from the Palpit.]

3 Cit. You shall have leave.

2 Cit. A ring; stand round.

1 Cit. Stand from the bier, stand from the body.

2 Cit. Room for Antony;—most noble Antony.

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.

Cit. Stand back! room! hear back!

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember

The first time ever Cæsar put it on;

'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent;

That day he overcame the Nervii;

Look! in this place, ran Cæsar's dagger through;

See, what a rent the envious Casca made:

Through this, the well beloved Brutus stabb'd;

And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,

Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it;

As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd

If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no;

For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel:

Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar lov'd him!

This was the most unkindest cut of all:

For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,

Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,

Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,

Even at the base of Pompey's statue,¹

Which all the while ran blood,² great Cæsar fell.

O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!

Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,

Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.

O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel

The dint³ of pity: these are gracious drops.

Kind souls, what, weep you, when you but behold

Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Look you here,

Here is himself, marr'd,⁴ as you see, with traitors.

1 Cit. O, piteous spectacle!

2 Cit. O, noble Cæsar!

1 i. e. his guardian angel, or the being in whom he put most trust.

2 See Act ii. Sc. 2. Beaumont in his Masque writes this word status, and its plural statues. Even is generally used as a dissyllable by Shakespeare.

3 The image seems to be that the blood flowing from Cæsar's wounds appeared to run from the statue; the words are from North's Plutarch:—'Against the very base whereon Pompey's image stood, which ran all a gore of blood, till he was slain.'

4 Dint anciently written dint; 'a stroke, and the impression which it makes on any thing.'

5 Marr'd is defaced, destroyed. Is is often, for the sake of the jingle, opposed to make.

6 Grievances.

7 The first folio reads, 'For I have neither writ.' The second folio corrects it to weir, which Johnson supposed might mean 'a penned and premeditated oration.'—Malone perversely adheres to the erroneous reading.

3 Cit. O, woful day!

4 Cit. O, traitors, villains!

1 Cit. O, most bloody sight!

2 Cit. We will be revenged: revenge! about,—seek,—burn,—fire,—kill,—slay!—let not a traitor live.

Ant. Stay, countrymen.

1 Cit. Peace there;—Hear the noble Antony.

2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny.

They, that have done this deed, are honourable;

What private griefs⁶ they have, alas, I know not,

That made them do it; they are wise and honourable,

And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.

I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;

I am no orator, as Brutus is:

But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,

That love my friend; and that they know full well

That gave me public leave to speak of him.

For I have neither wit,⁷ nor words, nor worth,

Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,

To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;

I tell you that which you yourselves do know;

Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths,

And bid them speak for me: But were I Brutus,

And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony

Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue

In every wound of Cæsar, that should move

The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

Cit. We'll mutiny.

1 Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.

3 Cit. Away then, come, seek the conspirators.

Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak.

Cit. Peace, ho! Hear Antony, most noble Antony.

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what:

Wherein hath Cæsar thus deserv'd your loves?

Alas, you know not:—I must tell you, then:

You have forgot the will I told you of.

Cit. Most true;—the will;—let's stay, and hear the will.

Ant. Here is the will, and under Cæsar's seal.

To every Roman citizen he gives,

To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.⁸

2 Cit. Most noble Cæsar!—we'll revenge his death.

3 Cit. O royal Cæsar!

Ant. Hear me with patience.

Cit. Peace, ho!

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,

His private arbours, and new planted orchards,

On this side Tyber;⁹ he hath left them you,

And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures,

To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.

Here was a Cæsar: When comes such another?

1 Cit. Never, never:—Come, come, away:

We'll burn his body in the holy place,

And with the brands fire¹⁰ the traitors' houses.

Take up the body.

The context, I think, fully calls for the emendation, which Stevens has well defended.

8 A drachma was a Greek coin, the name as the Roman denier, of the value of four sesterces, i. e. 72.

9 'This scene (says Theobald) lies in the Forum, near the Capitol, and in the most frequented part of the city; but Cæsar's gardens were very remote from that quarter:—

Trans Tyberim longe cubat in prope Cæsaris hortae, says Horace: and both the Mamarchia and gardens of Cæsar were separated from the main city by the river, and lay out wide in a line with Mount Janiculum. He would therefore read, 'on that side Tyber.' But Dr. Farmer has shown that Shakespeare's study lay in the old translation of Plutarch, 'He bequeathed unto every citizen of Rome seventy-five drachmas a man, and left his gardens and arbours unto the people, which he had on this side of the river Tyber.'

10 Fire again as a dissyllable

- 2 Cit. Go, fetch fire.
3 Cit. Pluck down benches.
4 Cit. Pluck down forms, windows, any thing.

[Exeunt Citizens, with the Body.
Ant. Now let it work : Mischief, thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt!—How now, fellow?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Cæsar's house.

Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him :
He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us any thing.

Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.
Ant. Belike, they had some notice of the people,
How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Street. Enter CINNA, the Poet.

Cin. I dreamt to-night, that I did feast with Cæsar, and things unluckily charge my fantasy :
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

1 Cit. What is your name?

2 Cit. Whither are you going?

3 Cit. Where do you dwell?

4 Cit. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?

2 Cit. Answer every man directly.

1 Cit. Ay, and briefly.

4 Cit. Ay, and wisely.

3 Cit. Ay, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going?
Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor? Then to answer every man directly, and briefly, wisely, and truly. Wisely I say, I am a bachelor.

3 Cit. That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry :—You'll bear me a bang for that, I fear.
Proceed : directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cæsar's funeral.

1 Cit. As a friend, or an enemy?

Cin. As a friend.

2 Cit. That matter is answered directly.

4 Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly.

Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.

3 Cit. Your name, sir, truly.

Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1 Cit. Tear him to pieces, he's a conspirator.

Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.

4 Cit. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.

2 Cit. It is no matter, his name's Cinna; pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.

3 Cit. Tear him, tear him. Come, brands, ho!
Firebrands, to Brutus, to Cassius; burn all.—
Some to Decius' house, and some to Casca's; some to Ligarius; away; go. [Exeunt.]

1 i. e. circumstances oppress my fancy with an ill-omened weight. 'I learn (says Steevens) from an old Treatise on Fortune-Telling, &c. that to dream of being at banquets betokeneth misfortune, &c.' The subject of this scene is taken from Plutarch.

3 The place of this scene is not marked in the old copy. It appears from Plutarch and Appian, that these rivals met, upon the proscription, in a little island near Mutina, upon the river Lavinus. That Shakspeare, however, meant the scene to be at Rome may be inferred from what almost immediately follows :—

Lep. What, shall I find you here?

Oct. Or here, or at the Capitol.

Malone placed the scene in Antony's house.

3 Upon has shown that the poet made a mistake as to this character mentioned by Lepidus; Lucius, not Publius, was the person meant, who was uncle by the mother's side to Mark Antony.

4 i. e. condemn him.

*Vouchsafe to give my damned husband life;
Promote and Casca, 1678.*

5 So in Measure for Measure, Act iii. Sc. 1 :—

—like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
Till death unload thee. 21

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in Antony's House. ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS, seated at a Table.

Ant. These many then shall die; their names are prick'd.

Oct. Your brother too must die; Consent you,
Lepidus?

Lep. I do consent.

Oct. Prick him down, Antony

Lep. Upon condition Publius shall not live,
Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony.

Ant. He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn
him.

But, Lepidus, go you to Cæsar's house;
Fetch the will hither, and we will determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here?

Oct. Or here, or at
The Capitol. [Exit LEPIDUS.]

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man,
Meet to be sent on errands : Is it fit,
The threefold world divided, he should stand
One of the three to share it?

Oct. So you thought him;
And took his voice who should be prick'd to die,
In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you.
And though we lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of diverse slanderous loads,
He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold.
To groan and sweat under the business,
Either led or driven, as we point the way;
And having brought our treasure where we will,
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears,
And graze in commons.

Oct. You may do your will;
But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and, for that,
I do appoint him store of provender.

It is a creature that I teach to fight,
To wind, to stop, to run directly on;
His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit.
And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so;
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth :
A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds
On objects, arts, and imitations;
Which, out of use, and stal'd by other men,
Begin his fashion.⁵ Do not talk of him,
But as a property.⁶ And now, Octavius,
Listen great things.—Brutus and Cassius
Are levying powers : we must straight make head.
Therefore let our alliance be combin'd,
Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd out.⁷

And let us presently go sit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered.

Oct. Let us do so; for we are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies;
And some, that smile, have in their hearts, I fear,
Millions of mischiefs. [Exeunt.]

5 Shakspeare had already woven this circumstance into the character of Justice Shallow :—'He came ever in the rearward of the fashion; and sung those tunes that he heard the carmen whistle.'

7 i. e. as a thing quite at our disposal, and to be treated as we please. Malvolio complains in Twelfth Night :—

'They have property'd me, kept me in darkness'

8 The old copy gives this line imperfectly :—

'Our best friends made, our means stretch'd.'

Malone supplied it thus :—

'Our best friends made, our means stretch'd to the utmost.'

The reading of the text is that of the second folio edition, which is sufficiently perspicuous.

9 An allusion to bear baling. Thus in Macbeth, Act
v. Sc. 7 :—

'They have chain'd me to a state I cannot fly,
But bear-like, I must fight the course.'

SCENE II.—Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis. Drum. Enter BRUTUS, LUCILIUS, LUCIUS, and Soldiers: TITINIUS and PINDARUS, meeting them.

Brus. Stand, ho!

Luc. Give me the word, ho! and stand.

Brus. What now, Lucilius? is Cassius near?

Luc. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come To do you salutation from his master.

[PINDARUS gives a Letter to BRUTUS.]

Brus. He greets me well.—Your master, Pindarus, In his own change, or by ill officers,¹ Hath given me some worthy cause to wish Things done, undone: but, if he be at hand, I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt, But that my noble master will appear Such as he is, full of regard, and honour.

Brus. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucilius: How he receiv'd you, let me be resolv'd.

Luc. With courtesy, and with respect enough; But not with such familiar instances, Nor with such free and friendly conference, As he hath used of old.

Brus. Thou hast describ'd A hot friend cooling: Ever note, Lucilius, When love begins to sicken and decay, It useth an enforced ceremony.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith: But hollow men, like horses hot at hand, Make gallant show and promise of their mettle: But when they should endure the bloody spur, They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Comes his army on?

Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd;

The greater part, the horse in general, Are come with Cassius. [March within.]

Brus. Hark, he is arriv'd:— March gently on to meet him.

Enter Cassius and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho!

Brus. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.

Brus. Judge me, you gods! Wrong I mine enemies?

And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?

Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs;

And when you do them—

Brus. Cassius, be content, Speak your griefs softly.—I do know you well:— Before the eyes of both our armies here, Which should perceive nothing but love from us, Let us not wrangle: Bid them move away; Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus, Bid our commanders lead their charges off A little from this ground.

Brus. Lucilius, do you the like; and let no man Come to our tent, till we have done our conference. Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exeunt.]

1 It having been thought that alteration was requisite in this line, it may be as well to observe Brutus charges both Cassius and his officer, Lucius Pella, with corruption; and he says to Lucilius, when he hears how he had been received by Cassius:—

'Thou hast describ'd

A hot friend cooling.'

This is the change which Brutus complains of.

2 Nice here means silly, simple.

3 This question is far from implying that any of those who touched Caesar's body were villains. On the contrary, it is an indirect way of asserting that there was not one man among them who was base enough to stab him for any cause but that of justice.

4 The old copy reads, 'Brutus, bid not me.' Theo-

SCENE III.—Within the Tent of Brutus. LUCIUS and TITINIUS at some distance from it. Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me, doth appear in this:

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella, For taking bribes here of the Sardians; Wherein, my letters, praying on his side, Because I knew the man, were slighted off.

Brus. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this, it is not meet That every nice² offence should bear his comment.

Brus. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm; To sell and mart your offices for gold, To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm? You know, that you are Brutus that speak this, Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

Brus. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,

And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement!

Brus. Remember March, the ides of March remember!

Did not great Julius bleed for justice sake? What villain touch'd his body, that did stab, And not for justice? What, shall one of us, That struck the foremost man of all this world, But for supporting robbers; shall we now Contaminate our fingers with base bribes; And sell the mighty space of our large honours, For so much trash, as may be grasped thus?— I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon, Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bay⁴ not me, I'll not endure it: you forget yourself, To hedge me in; I am a soldier, I, Older in practice, abler than yourself To make conditions.⁵

Brus. Go to; you're not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Brus. I say, you are not.⁶

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself; Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.

Brus. Away, slight man!

Cas. Is't possible?

Brus. Hear me, for I will speak. Must I give way and room to your rash choler?

Shall I be frighted, when a madman stares?

Cas. O ye gods! ye gods! Must I endure all this?

Brus. All this? ay, more: Fret, till your proud heart break;

Go, show your slaves how choleric you are, And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge? Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch Under your testy humour? By the gods, You shall digest the venom of your spleen, Though it do split you: for, from this day forth, I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter, When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this?

Brus. You say, you are a better soldier: Let it appear so; make your vaunting true, And it shall please me well: For mine own part, I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

haid made the alteration, which has been adopted by all subsequent editors except Malone. The fact is, that bay and bat are both frequently used by Shakespeare in the same sense, and as the repetition of the word used by Brutus seems to add spirit to the reply, I have continued it in the text.

5 I. e. to limit my authority by your direction or consent.

6 To know on what terms it is fit to confer the offices at my disposal.

7 This passage (says Steevens) may be easily reduced to metre if we read:—

Cas. Brutus, I am.

Brus. Cassius I say you are not.⁸

Cas. You wrong me every way, you wrong me,
Brutus;
I said, an elder soldier, not a better:
Did I say, better?

Bru. If you did, I care not.

Cas. When Cæsar liv'd, he durst not thus have mov'd me.

Bru. Peace, peace; you durst not so have tempted him.

Cas. I durst not?

Bru. No.

Cas. What? durst not tempt him?

Bru. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love,
I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Bru. You have done that you should be sorry for.
There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats;

For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me, as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to you

For certain sums of gold, which you denied me:—
For I can raise no money by vile means:

By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring

From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,
By any indirection. I did send

To you for gold to pay my legions,
Which you denied me: Was that done like Cassius?

Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,

To lock such rascal counters from his friends,

Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,

Dash him to pieces!

Cas. I denied you not.

Bru. You did.

Cas. I did not; he was but a fool

That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv'd
my heart:

A friend should bear his friend's infirmities,

But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.¹

Cas. You love me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.

Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults.

Bru. A flatterer's would not, though they do appear

As huge as high Olympus.

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius,

For Cassius is a weary of the world:

Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother;

Check'd like a bondman; all his faults observ'd,

Set in a note-book, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,

To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep

My spirit from mine eyes!—There is my dagger,

And here my naked breast; within, a heart

Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold:

If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth;

I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart:

Strike as thou didst at Cæsar; for, I know,

When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov'dst him better

Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius.

Bru. Sheath your dagger:

Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;

Do what you will, dishonour shall be humour.

O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb,

That carries anger as the flint bears fire;

Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd

To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,

When grief, and blood ill temper'd, vexeth him?

Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill temper'd too.

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

Bru. And my heart too.

Cas. O, Brutus!

Bru. What's the matter?

Cas. Have you not love enough to bear with me,

When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,

Makes me forgetful?

Bru. Yes, Cassius; and, from henceforth,

When you are over earnest with your Brutus,

He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.

[Noise within.]

Post. [Within.] Let me go in to see the generals;

There is some grudge between them, 'tis not meet

They be alone.

Luc. [Within.] You shall not come to them.

Post. [Within.] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter *Post.*²

Cas. How now? What's the matter?

Post. For shame, you generals; What do you mean?

Love, and be friends, as two such men should be

For I have seen more years, I am sure, than ye.³

Cas. Ha, ha: how vilely doth this cynic rhyme!

Bru. Get you hence, surrah; saucy fellow,

hence.

Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion.

Bru. I'll know his humour, when he knows his time.

What should the wars do with these jiggling fools?⁴

Companion,⁵ hence.

Cas. Away, away, be gone.

[Exit Post.

Enter LUCILIUS and TITINIUS.

Bru. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders

Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.

Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Messala with you

Immediately to us.

[Exit LUCILIUS and TITINIUS.

Bru. Lucius, a bowl of wine.

Cas. I did not think you could have been so angry.

Bru. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use,

If you give place to accidental evils.

Bru. No man bears sorrow better: Portia is dead.

Cas. Ha! Portia?

Bru. She is dead.

Cas. How scap'd I killing, when I cross'd you

so?

O, insupportable and touching loss!—

Upon what sickness?

Bru. Impatient of my absence;

And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony

Have made themselves so strong:—for with her

death

That tidings came;—With this she fell distract,

And, her attendants absent, swallow'd fire.⁶

Cas. And died so?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Enter LUCIUS, with Wine and Tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her. Give me a bowl of wine:—

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [Drinks.]

duty, as well as a dance. See note on Hamlet, Act ii.

Sc. 2.

² Companion is used as a term of contempt in many of the old plays; as we say at present fellow! Doll

Tearsheet says to Pistol:—

—'I scorn you, scurvy companion,' &c.

³ This circumstance is taken from Plutarch. It is also mentioned by Valerius Maximus, iv. 6. Portia is however reported by Pliny to have died at Rome of a lingering illness while Brutus was abroad.

¹ The meaning is this:—'I do not look for your faults, I only see them, and mention them with vehemence, when you force them into my notice, by practising them on me.'

² Shakespeare found the present incident in Plutarch. The intruder, however, was Marcus Phaulonius, who had been a friend and follower of Cato; not a poet, but one who assumed the character of a cynic philosopher.

³ This passage is a translation from the first book of Homer's Iliad, which is thus given in Sir Thomas North's Plutarch:—

'My lords I pray you hearken both to me,

For I have seen more years than such ye three.'

⁴ I.e. these silly poets. A jig signified a ballad or

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge :—
Fill, Lucius, all the wine o'erswell the cup ;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. [Drinks.]

Re-enter TITINIUS with MESSALA.

Bru. Come in, Titinius :—Welcome, good Messala.—

Now sit we close about this taper here,
And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Fortia, art thou gone ?

Bru. No more, I pray you.—

Messala, I have here received letters,
That young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Mes. Myself have letters of the selfsame tenour.

Bru. With what addition ?

Mes. That by proscription, and bills of outlawry,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Have put to death an hundred senators.

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree ;
Mine speak of seventy senators, that died
By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one ?

Mes. Ay, Cicero is dead,

And by that order of proscription.—
Had you your letters from your wife, my lord ?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her ?

Bru. Nothing, Messala.

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.

Bru. Why ask you ? Hear you aught of her in yours ?

Mes. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell :
For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die, Messala :

With meditating that she must die once,¹

I have the patience to endure it now.

Mes. Even so great men great losses should endure.

Cas. I have as much of this in art² as you,
But yet my nature could not bear it so.

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think

Of marching to Philippi presently ?

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason ?

Cas. This it is :

'Tis better that the enemy seek us :
So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,
Doing himself offence ; whilst we, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.

The people, 'twixt Philippi and this ground,
Do stand but in a forc'd affection ;
For they have grudg'd us contribution :
The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new added, and encourag'd :
From which advantage shall we cut him off,
If at Philippi we do face him there.

Cas. Hear me, good brother.

Bru. Under your pardon.—You must note beside,
That we have try'd the utmost of our friends,
Our legions are brim full, our cause is ripe :

The enemy increaseth every day,
We, at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune ;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.³
On such a full sea are we now afloat ;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on ;
We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.

Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity ;
Which we will niggard with a little rest.
There is no more to say ?

Cas. No more. Good night ;
Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my gown. [Exit LUCIUS.] Farewell, good Messala ;—

Good night, Titinius :—Noble, noble Cassius
Good night, and good repose.

Cas. O, my dear brother !
This was an ill beginning of the night :
Never come such division 'tween our souls !
Let it not, Brutus.

Bru. Every thing is well.

Cas. Good night, my lord.

Bru. Good night, good brother.

Tit. Mes. Good night, Lord Brutus.

Bru. Farewell, every one.
[Exeunt CAS. TIT. and MES.]

Re-enter LUCIUS, with the Gown.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument ?
Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily :
Poor knave, I blame thee not ; thou art o'erwatch'd.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men ;

I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro, and Claudius !

Enter VARRO and CLAUDIUS.

Var. Calls my lord ?

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent, and sleep ;
It may be, I shall raise you by and by
On business to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you, we will stand, and watch your pleasure.

Bru. I will not have it so : lie down, good sirs ;
It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me.

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so ;
I put it in the pocket of my gown. [Servants lie down.]

Luc. I was sure, your lordship did not give it me.

Bru. Bear with me, good boy, I am much forgetful.

Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile,

And touch thy instrument a strain or two ?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an it please you.

Bru. It does, my boy :

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir.

Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy might ;

I know, young bloods look for a time to rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It is well done ; and thou shalt sleep again ;

I will not hold thee long : if I do live,

I will be good to thee. [Music, and a Song.]

This is a sleepy tune :—O, murderous slumber !

Lay'st thou thy leaden mace⁴ upon my boy,

¹ I. e. at some time or other. So in The Merry Wives of Windsor.

² I pray thee, once to-night
Give my sweet Nan this ring.

³ In art, that is, in theory.

⁴ Beaumont and Fletcher have more than once limited this passage, but with very little success :—

'There is an hour in each man's life appointed
To make his happiness, if then he seize it,' &c.
Custom of the Country.

'——— Consider then, and quickly :

And like a wren make the current with you,
Which once turn'd head will sink you.'

Bloody Brother.

A similar sentiment is found in Chapman's Bussy d'Ambois, 1607 :—

'There is a deep nick in time's restless wheel,
For each man's good, when which nick comes, it strikes,

So no man riseth by his real merit,

But when it cries click in the raiser's spirit.'

⁴ A mace is the ancient term for a sceptre :—

'—— proud Tarquinius

Rooted from Rome the sway of kingly mace.'

Marius and Scylla, 1584

Shakspeare probably remembered Spenser in his Faerie

Queene, b. i. c. iv. st. 44 :—

'When as Morpheus had with leaden mace

Arrested all that courtly company.'

That plays thee music?—Gentle knave, good night! I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee. If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument; I'll take it from thee; and, good boy, good night. Let me see, let me see;—Is not the leaf turn'd down, Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.
[He sits down.]

Enter the Ghost of CÆSAR.

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes here? I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes, That shapes this monstrous apparition. It comes upon me:—Art thou any thing? Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil, That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare? Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well;

Then I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.
[Ghost vanishes.]

Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi, then.— Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest: Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.— Boy! Lucius!—Varro! Claudius! Stir, awake!— Claudius!

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks, he still is at his instrument.

Lucius awake.

Luc. My lord!

Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so cry'd'st out?

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst: Didst thou see any thing?

Luc. Nothing, my lord.

Bru. Sleep again, Lucius.—Sirrah, Claudius! Fellow thou! awake.

Var. My lord.

Clau. My lord.

Bru. Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep?

Var. Clau. Did we, my lord?

Bru. Ay; Saw you any thing?

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Clau. Nor I, my lord.

Bru. Go, and commend me to my brother Cæsius;

Bid him set on his powers betimes before, And we will follow.

Var. Clau. It shall be done, my lord.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The Plains of Philippi. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered: You said the enemy would not come down, But keep the hills and upper regions; It proves not so: their battles are at hand;

1 Shakespeare has on this occasion deserted his original. It does not appear from Plutarch that the ghost of Cæsar appeared to Brutus, but 'a wonderful strange and monstrous shape of a body.' This apparition could not be at once the shade of Cæsar and the evil genius of Brutus. See the story of Cæsius Parmensis in Valerius Maximus, lib. i. c. vii. Shakespeare had read the account of this vision in Plutarch's Life of Cæsar, as well as in that of Brutus; it is there called the ghost, and it is said that 'the light of the lamps waxed very dimme.' It is more than probable that the poet would consult the Life of Cæsar, as well as that of Brutus, in search of materials for his play.

2 To warn is to summon. So in King John—

'Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walls.'

And in King Richard III.—

'And sent to warn them to his royal presence.'

3 'Fearful bravery.' Though fearful is often used

They mean to warn² us at Philippi here, Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know Wherefore they do it: they could be content To visit other places; and come down With fearful bravery,³ thinking, by this face, To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage; But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, generals: The enemy comes on in gallant show, Their bloody sign of battle is hung out, And something to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on, Upon the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I, keep thou the left.

Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?

Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.

[March.]

Drum. Enter BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and their Army; LUCILIUS, TITINIUS, MESSALA, and others.

Bru. They stand, and would have parley.

Cas. Stand fast, Titinius: We must out and talk.

Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?

Ant. No, Cæsar, we will answer on their charge. Make forth, the general would have some words.

Oct. Sidr not until the signal.

Bru. Words before blows: Is it so, countrymen?

Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.

Bru. Good words are better than bad strokes, Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words:

Witness the hole you made in Cæsar's heart, Crying, Long live! hail, Cæsar!

Cas. Antony,

The posture of your blows are yet unknown;⁴ But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees, And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too.

Bru. O, yes, and soundless, too;

For you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony, And, very wisely, threat before you sting.

Ant. Villains, you did not so, when your vile daggers

Hack'd one another in the sides of Cæsar: You show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds,

And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Cæsar's feet; Whilst damned Cæsa, like a cur, behind, Struck Cæsar on the neck. O, flatterers!

Cas. Flatterers!—Now, Brutus, thank yourself: This tongue had not offended so to-day, If Cassius might have rul'd.

Oct. Come, come, the cause: If arguing make us sweat,

The proof of it will turn to redder drops.

Look;

I draw a sword against conspirators;

When think you that the sword goes up again:— Never, till Cæsar's three and twenty wounds⁵ by Shakespeare and his contemporaries in an active sense, for producing fear, or terrible, it may in this instance bear its usual acceptation of timorous, or, as it was sometimes expressed, false-hearted. Thus in a passage, cited by Stevens, from Sidney's Arcadia, lib. ii. —'Her horse faire and lustie; which she rid so as might show a fearful boldness, daring to do that which she knew that she knew not how to doe.'

4 'The posture of your blows are yet unknown.' It should be 'is yet unknown'; but the error was probably the poet's: more correct writers than Shakespeare have committed the error, where a plural noun immediately precedes the verb, although it be the nominative case by which it is governed. Stevens attributes the error to the transcriber or printer, and would have it corrected; but Malone has adduced several examples of similar inaccuracy in Shakespeare's writings.

5 The old copy reads, two-and-thirty wounds. Theobald corrected the error, which Beaumont and Fletcher have also fallen into in their Noble Gentleman

Be well aveng'd; or till another Cæsar
Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.

Bru. Cæsar, thou canst not die by traitors,
Unless thou bring'st them with thee.

Oct. So I hope;
I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.

Bru. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou could'st not die more honourable.

Cas. A peevish schoolboy, worthless of such honour,

Join'd with a masker and a reveller.

Ant. Old Cassius still!

Oct. Come, Antony; away.—
Defiance, traitors, hurl! we in your teeth:

If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;

If not, when you have stomachs.

[Exeunt OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and their Army.]

Cas. Why now, blow, wind; swell, billow; and swim, bark!

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Bru. Ho!

Lucilius; bark, a word with you.

Luc. My lord.

[BRUTUS and LUCILIUS converse apart.]

Cas. Messala,—

Mes. What says my general?

Cas. Messala,¹

This is my birth-day; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala:

Be thou my witness, that against my will,

As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set

Upon one battle all our liberties.

You know, that I held Epicurus strong,

And his opinion: now I change my mind,

And partly credit things that do presage.

Coming from Sardis, on our former² ensign

Two mighty eagles fell, and there they perch'd,

Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;

Who to Philippi here consorted us;

This morning are they fled away, and gone;

And in their steads, do ravens, crows, and kites,

Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us,

As we were sickly prey;³ their shadows seem

A canopy most faithful, under which

Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly;

For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd

To meet all perils very constantly.

Bru. Even so, Lucilius.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,

The gods to-day stand friendly; that we may,

Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age!

But, since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,

Let's reason with the worst that may befall.

If we do lose this battle, then is this

The very last time we shall speak together:

What are you then determined to do?⁴

Bru. Even by the rule of that philosophy,

By which I did blame Cato for the death

Which he did give himself:—I know not how,

1 Hurl is peculiarly expressive. The challenger was said to hurl down his gage when he threw his glove down as a pledge that he would make good his charge against his adversary.

2 And interchangeably hurl down my gage

Upon this over-weening traitor's foot?¹

King Richard II.

Milton perhaps had this passage in mind, Paradise Lost,

b. l. v. 689:—

'Hurting defiance toward the vault of Heaven.'

3 Almost every circumstance in this speech is taken from Sir Thomas North's translation of Plutarch.

4 i. e. former ensign; it probably means the chief ensign.

Baret has 'the former teeth' [i. e. fore teeth,] dentes primores.

5 So in King John:—

'As doth a rosen on a sick-fallen prey.'

6 i. e. I am resolved in such a case to kill myself.—

What are you determined of?

7 'To prevent,' is here used for to anticipate. By time is meant the full and complete time; the natural period. See note on King Henry IV. Part II. Act I. Sc. 2.

It has been said that there is an apparent contradiction

But I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, as to prevent⁷
The time of life:—arming myself with patience,
To stay the providence of some high powers,
That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Through the streets of Rome?

Bru. No, Cassius, no: I think not, thou noble
Roman,

That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;

He bears too great a mind. But this same day

Must end that work, the ides of March begun;

And whether we shall meet again, I know not.

Therefore our everlasting farewell take:—

For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!

If we do meet again, why we shall smile;

If not, why then this parting was well made.

Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!

If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed:

If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.

Bru. Why, then, lead on.—O, that a man might

know

The end of this day's business, ere it come!

But it sufficeth, that the day will end,

And then the end is known.—Come, ho! away!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. The Field of Battle.

Alarum. Enter BRUTUS and MESSALA.

Bru. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills¹

Unto the legions on the other side: [Loud Alarum.]

Let them set on at once; for I perceive

But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing,

And sudden push gives them the overthrow.

Ride, ride, Messala: let them all come down.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter CASSIUS and TITINIUS.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly!

Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy:

This ensign here of mine was turning back:

I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early:

Who having some advantage on Octavius,

Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,

Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.

Enter PINDARUS.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;

Mark Antony is in your teeth, my lord!

Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.

Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;

Are those my tents, where I perceive the fire?

Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou lov'st me,

Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,

Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,

And here again: that I may rest assur'd,

Whether yond' troops are friend or enemy.

between the sentiments Brutus expresses in this and in his subsequent speech; but there is no real inconsistency. Brutus had laid down to himself as a principle, to abide every chance and extremity of war; but when Cassius reminds him of the disgrace of being led in triumph through the streets of Rome, he acknowledges that to be a trial which he could not endure. Shakespeare, in the first speech, makes that to be the present opinion of Brutus, which in Plutarch is mentioned only as one he formerly entertained, and that, being now in the midst of danger, he was of a contrary mind.

7 This, though censured as ungrammatical, was the phraseology of the poet's day, as might be shown by numerous examples. But Dryden and Pope have used it, and Johnson has sanctioned it in his Dictionary:—

'Begin, o. n. i. began, or begun.' The fact is, that the past tense was, in our old language, written begon or begonne.

8 This and much of the subsequent scene is from the old translation of Plutarch:—'In the mean time Brutus, that led the right wings, sent little bills to the colonels and captains of private bandes, in which he wrote the order of the battle.'

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought.¹

[Exit.]

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill;²
My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—

[Exit PINDARUS.]

This day I breathed first: time is come round,³
And where I did begin, there shall I end;
My life is run his compass.—Sirrah,⁴ what news?

Pis. [Above.] O, my lord!

Cas. What news?

Pis. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;—
Yet he spurs on.—Now they are almost on him;
Now, Titinius!—now some 'light:—Oh, he 'lights too:—he's ta'en;—

And hark! [Shout] they shout for joy.

Cas. Come down, behold no more.—
O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!

Enter PINDARUS.

Come hither, sirrah:

In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do, [oath!
Thou should'st attempt it. Come now, keep thine
Now be a freeman; and with this good sword,
That ran through Cæsar's bowels, search this bosom.
Stand not to answer: Here, take thou the hilts;
And, when my face is cover'd as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword.—Cæsar, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

Pis. So, I am free; yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will. O, Cassius!
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him. [Exit.]

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

Mes. Where did you leave him?

Tit. All disconsolate,

With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.

Mes. Is not that he, that lies upon the ground?

Tit. He lies not like the living. O, my heart!

Mes. Is not that he?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala,
But Cassius is no more.—O, setting sun!
As in thy red rays thou dost sink to night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set;
The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone; [done!
Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.

Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed,—

O, hateful error, melancholy's child!

Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O, error, soon conceiv'd,
Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,

But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.

Tit. What, Pindarus? Where art thou, Pindarus?

Mes. Seek him, Titinius: whilst I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears: I may say, thrusting it;
For piercing steel, and darts envenom'd,
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus,
As tidings of this sight.

Tit. His you, Messala,
And I will seek for Pindarus the while.
[Exit MESSALA.]

1 The same expression occurs in Antony and Cleopatra:—
"That which was a horse, even with a thought,
The rack dissolves."

2 Cassius is now on a hill: he therefore means a hillock somewhat higher than that on which he now is.

3 So in King Lear, the Bastard, dying, says:—
"The wheel is come full circle."

4 Sirrah, as appears from many of the old plays, was the usual address in speaking to servants and children.
See note on Macbeth, Act iv. Sc. 2.

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give 't thee? Didst thou not hear their shouts?

Alas, thou hast misconstrued every thing.
But hold thee, take this garland on thy brow;
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Caius Cassius.—
By your leave, gods:—This is a Roman's part.
Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart.
[Dies.]

Alarum. Re-enter MESSALA, with BRUTUS, young CATO, STRATO, VOLUMNIUS, and LUCILIUS.

Bru. Where, where, Messala, doth his body lie?

Mes. Lo, yonder; and Titinius mourning it.

Bru. Titinius' face is upward.

Cato.

He is slain.

Bru. O, Julius Cæsar, thou art mighty yet!

Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords
In our own proper entrails.⁵ [Long Alarums.]

Cato.

Brave Titinius!

Look, wher' he have not crown'd dead Cassius!

Bru. Are yet two Romans living such as these?

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!⁶

It is impossible, that ever Rome

Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe more tears

To this dead man, than you shall see me pay.—

I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.—

Come, therefore, and to Thassos send his body;

His funeral shall not be in our camp,

Lest it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come;—

And come, young Cato; let us to the field.—

Labeo, and Flavius, set our battles on:—

'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night

We shall try fortune in a second fight. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Another Part of the Field. Alarum.

Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both Armies; then BRUTUS, CATO, LUCILIUS, and others.

Bru. Yet, countrymen, O, yet, hold up your heads!

Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go with
me?

I will proclaim my name about the field:—

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend:

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

[Charges the Enemy.]

Bru. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I;

Brutus, my country's friend: know me for Brutus.

[Exit, charging the Enemy. CATO is overpowered, and falls.]

Luc. O, young and noble Cato, art thou down?

Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius;

And may'st be honour'd, being Cato's son.

1 Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

Luc.

Only I yield to die:

There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight;
[Offering Money.]

Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

1 Sold. We must not.—A noble prisoner!

2 Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.

1 Sold. I'll tell the news.—Here comes the general:—

Enter ANTONY.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Luc. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough:

I dare assure thee, that no enemy

5 "—populumque potentem
In sua victricis conversum viscera dextra."
Lucan. lib. i.

6 "So when he [Brutus] was come thither, after he had lamented the death of Cassius, calling him the last of all the Romans, being impossible that Rome should ever breed againe so noble and valliant a man as he, he caused his body to be buried."—North's Plutarch.

"Obiectum ex Historico [Crematius Cordo. Tacit. Ann.
lib. iv. 34.] quod Brutum Cassiumque ultimos Romanos dixisset."—Suet. Tiber. lib. lii. c. 61.

Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus:
The gods defend him from so great a shame!
When you do find him, or alive, or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himself.

Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,
A prize no less in worth: keep this man safe,
Give him all kindness: I had rather have Such men my friends, than enemies. Go on,
And see whe'r Brutus be alive or dead;
And bring us word, unto Octavius' tent,
How every thing is chanc'd. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Another Part of the Field. Enter
BRUTUS, DARDANIUS, CLITUS, STRATO, and VOLUMNIUS.

Bru. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.

Cl. Statilius shov'd the torch-light; but, my lord,
He came not back; he is or ta'en, or slain.

Bru. Sit thee down, Clitus: Staying is the word;
It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.—

[Whispering.]

Cl. What, I, my lord? No, not for all the world.

Bru. Peace, then, no words.

Cl. I'll rather kill myself.

Bru. Hark thee, Dardanius! [Whispers him.]

Dar. I do such a deed?

Cl. O, Dardanius!

Dar. O, Clitus!

Cl. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Dar. To kill him, Clitus: Look, he meditates.

Cl. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.

Bru. Come hither, good Volumnius: list a word.

Vol. What says my lord?

Bru. Why, this, Volumnius:
The ghost of Cæsar hath appear'd to me
Two several times by night: at Sardis, once;
And, this last night, here in Philippi's fields.
I know, my hour is come.

Vol. Not so, my lord.

Bru. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit:
It is more worthy to leap in ourselves,
Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,
Thou know'st that we two went to school together;
Even for that our love of old, I pray thee,
Hold thou my sword-hilt,¹ whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.]

Cl. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.

Bru. Farewell to you;—and you;—and you,
Volumnius.—

1 A passage from Plutarch will illustrate this scene:—
"Furthermore, Brutus thought that there was no great number of men slain in battell, and to know the truth of it there was one called Statilius, that promised to goe through his enemies, (for otherwise it was impossible to goe see their campe,) and from thence, if all were well, that he would lift up a torch-light in the aire, and then returne againe with speed to him. The torch-light was lift up as he had promised, for Statilius went thither.
Nowe Brutus seeing Statilius tarie long after, and that he came not againe, he said: If Statilius be alive, he will come againe. But his evil fortune was such, that, as he came backe, he lighted in his enemies' hands, and was slaine. Now the night being farre spent, Brutus, as he sate, bowed towards Clitus, one of his men, and told him somewhat in his eare; the other answered him not, but fell a weeping. Therupon he proved Dardanius, and sayd somewhat also to him: at length he came to Volumnius him selfe, and speaking to him in Greekes, prayd him for the studies sake which brought them acquainted together, that he would helpe him to put his hande to his sword, to thrust it in him to kill him. Volumnius denied his request, and so did many others: and amongst the rest one of them said there was no tarrying for them there, but that they must needes flie. Then Brutus rising up, We must flie in decree, sayd he; but it must be with our hands, not with our feete. Then taking every man by the hand, he sayd these words unto them with a chearful countenance:—It rejoiceth my hart that no one of my friends hath failed me at my neede, and I do not complaine of Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;

Farewell to thee, too, Strato.—Countrymen,
My heart doth joy, that yet, in all my life,
I found no man, but he was true to me.
I shall have glory by this losing day,
More than Octavius, and Mark Antony,
By this vile conquest shall attain unto.
So, fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue
Hath almost ended his life's history:
Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest,
That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within; Fly, fly, fly]

Cl. Fly, my lord, fly. Hence; I will follow.

[Exeunt CLITUS, DARDANIUS, and Vo-LUMNIUS.]

I pry'thee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;
Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in it:
Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,
While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

Str. Give me your hand first: Fare you well,
my lord.

Bru. Farewell, good Strato.—Cæsar, now be still:

I kill'd not thee with half so good a will.

[He runs on his Sword and dies.]

Alarum. Retreat. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, MESSALA, LUCILIUS, and their Army.

Oct. What man is that?

Mes. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy master?

Str. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala;
The conquerors can but make a fire of him;
For Brutus only overcame himself,
And no man else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee,
Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain them.²

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Str. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.

Mes. How died my master, Strato?

Str. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all:

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar;
He, only, in a general honest thought,
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, This was a man!³

my fortune, but only for my countries sake: for as for me, I thinke myselfe happier than they that have overcome, considering that I leave a perpetual fame of our courage and manhood, the which our enemies the conquerors shall never attaine unto by force nor money, neither can let their posteritie to say, that they have beene laughable and unjust men; have slaine good men to usurpe tyrannical power not pertaining to them.
Having sayd so, he prayd every man to shift for themselves, and then he went a little aside,⁴ &c.

3 Hills is frequently used where only one weapon is spoken of. Casellus says to Pindarus, In a former scene,
'Here, take thou the hills.' And, King Richard III.:—
'Take him over the costead with the hills of thy sword.'

So in the Mirror for Magistrates, 1587:—

'—A naked sword he had,

That to the hills was all with blood imbued.'

3 i. e. receive them into my service.

4 To prefer seems to have been the general term for recommending a servant. Thus in The Merchant of Venice, Act iii. Sc. 2:

'Shylock thy master, spoke with me this day,

And hath preferr'd thee.'

Its usual sense was 'to advance, or set before others.'
5 Drayton, in his Barons' Wars, has a similar passage, thus given by Stevens:—

'He was a man (then boldy dare to say)
In whose rich soul the virtues well did suit,

Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,
With all respect and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.—
So, call the field to rest: and let's away,
To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.]

OF this tragedy many particular passages deserve regard, and the contention and reconciliation of Brutus and Cassius is universally celebrated; but I have never

*In whom so mix'd the elements all lay,
That none to one could sovereignty impute;
As all did govern, so did all obey:
He of a temper was so absolute,
As that it seem'd when nature him began,
She meant to show all that might be in man.*

He afterwards revised the poem, which was, I believe, first published, under the title of the Barons' Wars, in 1603; and the stanza is thus exhibited in that edition:—

*'Such one he was (of him we boldly say),
In whose rich souls all sovereign powers did suite;
In whom in peace the elements all lay
So mix'd, as none could sovereignty impute;*

been strongly agitated by perusing it; and I think it somewhat cold and unaffected, compared with some other of Shakespeare's plays: his adherence to the real story, and to Roman manners, seem to have impeded the sacral vigour of his genius. JOHNSON.

Gildon has justly observed that this tragedy ought to have been called Marcus Brutus, Caesar being a very inconsiderable personage in the scene, and being killed in the third act.

*As all did govern, yet did all obey;
His lively temper was so absolute,
That seem'd, when heaven his modell first began,
In him it shew'd perfection in a man.*

The poem originally appeared under the title of 'Mortimeriades,' in 1606; but Malone says, there is no trace of the stanza in the poem in that form. He is wrong in asserting that the Barons' Wars were first published in 1609, as the following title-page of my copy will show:—'The Barons' Wars, in the reign of Edward the Second, with England's Heroicall Epistles, by Michael Drayton. At London, printed by J. R. for N. Ling, 1608.' So that, if Malone be right in placing the date of composition of Julius Caesar in 1607, Shakespeare imitated Drayton.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

AFTER a perusal of this play, the reader will, I doubt not, be surprised when he sees what Johnson has asserted:—That 'its power of delighting is derived principally from the frequent changes of the scene';—and that 'no character is very strongly discriminated.' If our great poet has one predominant dramatic quality in perfection, it is that of being able 'to go out of himself as pleasure to inform and animate other existences.' It is true, that in the number of characters many persons of historical importance are merely introduced as passing shadows in the scene; but 'the principal personages are most emphatically distinguished by lineament and colouring, and powerfully arrest the imagination.' The character of Cleopatra is indeed a masterpiece: though Johnson pronounces that she is 'only distinguished by feminine airs, some of which are too low.' It is true that her seductive arts are in no respect veiled over; but she is still the gorgeous Eastern Queen, remarkable for the fascination of her manner, if not for the beauty of her person; and though she is vain, ostentatious, fickle, and luxurious, there is that heroic regal dignity about her, which makes us, like Antony, forget her defects:

*'Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety. Other women cloy
Th' appetites they feed; but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies.'*

The mutual passion of herself and Antony is without moral dignity, yet it excites our sympathy:—they seem formed for each other. Cleopatra is no less remarkable for her seductive charms, than Antony for the splendour of his martial achievements. Her death, too, redeems one part of her character, and obliterates all faults.

Warburton has observed that Antony was Shakespeare's hero; and the defects of his character, a lavish and luxurious spirit, seem almost virtues when opposed to the heartless and narrow-minded littleness of Octavius Caesar. But the ancient historians, his flatterers, had delivered the latter down ready cut and dried for a hero; and Shakespeare has exulted him self with great address from the dilemma. He has admitted all those great strokes of his character as he found them, and yet has made him a very unamiable character, deceitful, mean-spirited, proud, and revengeful.

Schlegel attributes this to the penetration of Shakespeare, who was not to be led astray by the false glitter of historic fame, but saw through the disguise thrown around him by his successful fortunes, and distinguished in Augustus a man of little mind.

Malone places the composition of this play in 1606. No previous edition to that of the folio of 1623 has been hitherto discovered; but there is an entry of 'A Booke called Antony and Cleopatra,' to Edward Blount, in 1608, on the Stationers' books.

Shakespeare followed Plutarch, and appears to have been anxious to introduce every incident and every personage he met with in his historian. Plutarch mentions Lampricus his grandfather, as authority for some of the stories he relates of the profuse and luxury of Antony's entertainments at Alexandria. In the stage-direction of Scene 2, Act 1. in the old copy, Lampricus, Remnus, and Lucillus are made to enter with the rest; but they have no part in the dialogue, nor do their names appear in the list of Dramatis Personæ.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Alexandria. A Room in Cleopatra's Palace. Enter DEMETRIUS and PHILO.

Philo.

NAY, but this dotage of our general's O'erflows the measure: those his goodly eyes, That o'er the files and musters of the war Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn, The office and devotion of their view Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart, Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper; And is become the bellows, and the fan, To cool a gipsy's lust. Look where they come!

Flourish. Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA, with their Trains; Eunuchs fanning her.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him The triple pillar of the world transform'd Into a strumpet's fool: behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.³

Cleo. I'll set a bourn how far to be below'd.

Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.⁴

Enter an Attendant.

Ant. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me:—The sum.⁵

Cleo. Nay, hear them,⁶ Antony:

Fulvia, perchance, is angry; Or, who knows If the scarce-bearded Cæsar have not sent His powerful mandate to you, Do this, or this: Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that; Perform't, or else we damn thee.

1 i. e. renounces. The metre would be improved by reading reneyes, or reneies, a word used by Chaucer and other of our elder writers: but we have in King Lear, renee, affirm, &c. Stanyhurst, in his version of the second book of the Æneid, has the word:—
'To live now longer, Troy burnt, he flaily reneageth.'

2 Triple is here used for third, or one of three; one of the Triumvirs, one of the three masters of the world. To sustain the pillars of the earth is a scriptural phrase. Triple is used for third in All's Well that Ends Well:—
'Which, as the dearest issue of his practice;
He bade me store up as a triple eye.'

3 So in Romeo and Juliet:—
'They are but beggars that can count their worth.'

And in Much Ado about Nothing:—
'I were but little happy, if I could say how much.'

'Basia pauca cupit, qui numerare potest.'

Marital, vi. 26.

4 'Then must you set the boundary at a distance greater than the present visible universe affords.'

5 'Be brief, sum thy business in a few words.'

6 i. e. the news; which was considered plural in Shakespeare's time. See King Richard III. Act. iv. Sc. 4.

7 Take in, it has before been observed, signifies subdue, conquer.

Ant. How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance,—nay, and most like, You must not stay here longer, your dismissal Is come from Cæsar; therefore hear it, Antony.—Where's Fulvia's process? Cæsar's, I would say!

—Both?—
Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's queen, Thou bluest, Antony; and that blood of thine Is Cæsar's homager: else so thy cheek pays shame, When shrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds.—The messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt! and the wide arch Of the rang'd empire fall! Here is my space; Kingdoms are clay: our duny earth alike Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life Is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair [Embracing.

And such a twain can do't, in which, I bind, On pain of punishment, the world to woe,¹⁰ We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood! Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?—I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony Will be himself.

Ant. But¹¹ stirr'd by Cleopatra.— Now, for the love of Love,¹² and her soft hours, Let's not confound¹³ the time with conference harsh: There's not a minute of our lives should stretch Without some pleasure now: What sport to-night?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fie, wrangling queen! Whom every thing becomes,¹⁴ to chide, to laugh, To weep; whose¹⁵ every passion fully strives To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd! No messenger; but time and all alone, To-night, we'll wander through the streets, and note

8 Process here means summons. 'Lawyers call that the process by which a man is called into the court, and no more. To serve with process is to cite, to summon.'—Minsheu.

9 The rang'd empire is the well arranged, well ordered empire. Shakespeare uses the expression again in Coriolanus:—
'bury all which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruins.'

10 To wee is to know.

11 I think that Johnson has entirely mistaken the meaning of this passage, and believe Mason's explanation nearly correct. Cleopatra means to say that 'Antony will act like himself,' (i. e. nobly,) without regard to the mandates of Cæsar or the anger of Fulvia. To which he replies, 'But stirr'd by Cleopatra,' i. e. 'add, if moved to it by Cleopatra.' This is a compliment to her. Johnson was wrong in supposing but to be used here in its exceptive sense.

12 That is, 'for the sake of the Queen of Love.'

13 To confound the time, is to consume it, to lose it.

14 'Quicquid enim dicit, seu facit, omne decet.'

Marcellus, lib. ii.

See Shakespeare's 150th Sonnet.

15 The folio reads, who, every, &c.: corrected by Rowe.

The qualities of people.¹ Come, my queen;
Last night you did desire it:—Speak not to us.

[Exit ANT. and CLEO. with their Train.]

Dem. Is Cæsar with Antonius priz'd so slight?

Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
He comes too short of that great property
Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I'm full sorry,
That he approves the common liar,² who
Thus speaks of him at Rome: But I will hope
Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy!

[Exit Dem.]

SCENE II. The same. Another Room. Enter
CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen?
O, that I knew this husband, which, you say, must charge his horns with garlands!³

Alex. Soothsayer.

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man?—Is't you, sir, that know things?

Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy,
A little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand.

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine enough,
Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means, in flesh.

Ir. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more beloved, than beloved.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.⁴

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune! Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all: let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage:⁵ find me to marry me with Octavius Cæsar, and companion me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than figs.

Sooth. You have seen and proved a fairer former fortune

Than that which is to approach.

Char. Then, belike, my children shall have no names:⁶ Pr'ythee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb,
And fertile every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.⁷

Alex. You think, none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras here.

1 'Sometime also when he would goe up and down the city disguised like a slave in the night, and would peere into poor mens windows and their shops, and scold and brawl with them within the house; Cleopatra would be also in a chambermaid's array, and amble up and down the streets with him.'

Life of Antonius in North's Plutarch.

2 'That he proves the common liar, Fame, in his case to be a true reporter.' Shakespeare usually uses approve for prove, and aprove for proof.

3 The old copy reads, 'change his horns,' &c. A similar error of change for charge is also found in Co- riolanus.

4 The liver being considered the seat of love, Char-mian says she would rather heat her liver with drinking than with love's fire. A heated liver was supposed to make a pimply face.

5 This (says Johnson) is one of Shakespeare's natural touches. Few circumstances are more flattering to the fair sex, than breeding at an advanced period of life. Charmian wishes for a son too who may arrive

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be—drunk to bed.

Ir. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the o'erflowing Nilus presageth famine.

Ir. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot sooth-
say.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication,⁸ I cannot scratch mine ear.—Pr'ythee, tell her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Ir. But how, but how? give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Ir. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Ir. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worse thoughts heavens mend!—
Alexas,—come, his fortune, his fortune.—O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee! And let her die, too, and give him a worse! and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight; good Isis,
I beseech thee!

Ir. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncuckolded: Therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo, now! if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they'd do't.

Eno. Hush! here comes Antony.

Char. Not he, the queen.

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No, madam.

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth; but on the sudden

A Roman thought hath struck him.—Enobarbus,—

Eno. Madam.

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's

Alexas?

Alex. Here, madam, at your service.—My lord approaches.

Enter ANTONY, with a Messenger and Attendants.

Cleo. We will not look upon him: Go with us.

[Exit CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, ALEXAS, IRAS, CHARMIAN, Soothsayer, and Attendants.]

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field

Ant. Against my brother Lucius?

Mess. Ay:

But soon that war had end, and the time's state at such power and dominion that the proudest and fiercest monarchs of the earth may be brought under his yoke. It should be remembered that Herod of Jewry was a favourite character in the mysteries of the old stage, and that he was always represented a fierce, haughty, blustering tyrant.

6 That is, prove bastards. Thus in the Rape of Lucrece:—

'Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy.'
And Launce, in the third act of The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—'That's as much as to say bastard virtues, that indeed know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.' A fairer fortune means a more serene or more prosperous fortune.

7 The old copy reads, foretel. Warburton has the merit of the emendation.

8 This has allusion to the common proverbial saying,
'You'll never be burnt for a witch,' spoken to a silly person, who is indeed no conjuror.

9 This prognostic is alluded to in Othello:—

'—This hand is moist, my lady:—
This argues fruitfulness and liberal heart.'

Made friends of them, jointing their force 'gainst
Cæsar;
Whose better issue in the war, from Italy,
Upon the first encounter, drave¹ them.

Ant. Well,
What worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Ant. When it concerns the fool or coward.—On:
Things, that are past, are done, with me.—Tis
thus;

Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death,
I hear him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labienus
(This is stiff² news) hath, with his Parthian force,
Extended³ Asia from Euphrates;
His conquering banner shook, from Syria
To Lydia, and to Ionia;
Whilst—

Ant. Antony, thou would'st say,—

Mess. O, my lord!

Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general
tongue;

Name Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome:
Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase: and taunt my faults
With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth weeds,
When our quick minds⁴ lie still: and our ill told us,
Is as our earring. Fare thee well a while.

Mess. At your noble pleasure. [Exit.

Ant. From Sicily how the news? Speak there.

1 Ant. The man from Sicily.—Is there such a one?

2 Ant. He stays upon your will.

Ant. Let him appear,—
These strong Egyptian fetters I must break,

Enter another Messenger.

Or lose myself in dotage.—What are you?

2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where died she?

2 Mess. In Sicily:
Her length of sickness, with what else more serious
Importeth thee to know, this bears. [Gives a letter.

Ant. Forbear me.—

[Exit Messenger.

There's a great spirit gone: Thus did I desire it:
What our contempt do often hurl from us,
We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
By revolution lowering, does become
The opposite of itself:⁵ she's good, being gone;
The hand could⁶ pluck her back, that shov'd her on.
I must from this enchanting queen break off;
Ten thousand harms, more than the ill I know,
My idleness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women: We see how mortal an unkindness is to them: if they sur-fer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women

1 Drave is the ancient preterite of the verb to drive, and frequently occurs in the Bible.

2 'Stiff news' is 'hard news.' As in Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece:

'Fearing some hard news from the warlike band.'

3 'Extended Asia from Euphrates.'

To extend is a law term for to seize. Thus in Bolingbroke, Emperor of the Turks, 1694:—

'Ay, though on all the world we make extent,

From the south pole unto the northern bear.'

4 The old copy reads, 'quick winds'; an error which has occurred elsewhere. Warburton made the correction. 'Our quick minds' means our lively apprehensive minds; which, when they lie idle, bring forth vices instead of virtues, weeds instead of flowers and fruits; to tell us of our faults is, as it were, the first culture of the mind, and is the way to kill these weeds.

5 'The pleasure of to-day, by revolution of events and change of circumstances, often loses all its value to us, and becomes to-morrow a pain.'

6 Could is here used with an optative meaning.—
Could would and should are often used by our old writ-die: It were pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly; I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment:⁷

I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.

Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: We cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanachs can report: this cannot be cunning in her; if it be,
she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. 'Would, I had never seen her!

Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work: which not to have been blessed withal, would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir?

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new.⁸ If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented; this grief is crowned with consolation;
your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:—and,
indeed, the tears live in an onion, that should water
this sorrow.

Ant. The business she hath broached in the state,
Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers
Have notice what we purpose. I shall break
The cause of our expedience⁹ to the queen,
And get her love¹⁰ to part. For not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent toches,
Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too
Of many our contriving friends in Rome
Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea: our slippery people, (Whose love is never link'd to the deserver,
Till his deserts are past,) begin to throw
Pompey the Great, and all his dignities,
Upon his son: who, high in name and power,
Higher than both in blood and life, stands up
For the main soldier: whose quality, going on,
The sides o' the world may danger: Much is breeding,

Which, like the courser's¹¹ hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure,
To such whose place is under us, requires
Our quick remove from hence.¹²

Eno. I shall do't.

[Exeunt.

ters, in what appears to us an indiscriminate manner, and yet appear to have been so employed rather by choice than chance.

7 I. e. for less reason, upon a weaker motive.

8 'As the gods have been pleased to take away your wife Fulvia, so they have provided you with a new one in Cleopatra; in like manner as the tailors of the earth, when your old garments are worn out, accommodate you with new ones.'

9 Expedition.

10 I think with Mason that we should read leave instead of love.

11 This alludes to the ancient vulgar error, that a horse's hair dropped into corrupted water would become and mated. Dr. Lister, in the Philosophical Transactions showed that these animated horse-hairs were real insects, and displayed the fallacy of the popular opinion.
It was asserted that these insects moved like serpents,
and were poisonous to swallow.

12 'Say to those whose place is under us (i. e. to our attendants,) that our pleasure requires us to remove us haste from hence.'

SCENE III. Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he does:—

I did not send you;—If you find him sad,
Say, I am dancing: if in mirth, report
That I am sudden sick: Quick, and return.

[Exit ALEX.]

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,

You do not hold the method to enforce
The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not?

Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool: the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so too far: I wish, forbear;
In time we hate that which we often fear.

[Enter ANTONY.]

But here comes Antony.

Cleo. I am sick, and sullen.

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose,—

Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian, I shall fall;
It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature
Will not sustain it.¹

Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—

Cleo. Pray you, stand further from me.

Ant. What's the matter?

Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.

What says the married woman?—You may go;
'Would, she had never given you leave to come!
Let her not say, 'tis I that keep you here,
I have no power upon you; hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know,—

Cleo. O, never was there queen
So mightily betray'd! Yet, at the first,
I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Why should I think, you can be mine, and true,

Though you in swearing shake the throned gods,
Who have been false to Fulvia? Riotous madams,
To be entangled with those mouth-mad vows,
Which break themselves in swearing!

Ant. Most sweet queen,—

Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going.

But bid farewell, and go: when you sued staying,
Then was the time for words: No going then;—
Eternity was in our lips and eyes;
Bliss in our brows' bent;² none our parts so poor,
But was a race³ of heaven: They are so still,
Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world,
Art tum'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady!

Cleo. I would, I had thy inches; thou should'st know.

There was a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, queen;

The strong necessity of time commands

1 'You must go as if you came without my order or knowledge.' So in Trifolius and Cressida:—

2 'We met by chance; you did not find me here'

3 Thus in Twelfth Night:—

'There is no woman's sides

Can bide the beating of so strong a passion.'

4 'Our brows' bent,' is the bending or inclination of our brows. The brow is that part of the face which expresses most fully the mental emotions. So in King John:—

'Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?'

5 L. e. of heavenly mould.

'Divine alips alumnus.'

6 The poet here means, 'in pledge'; the use of a thing is the possession of it. Thus in The Merchant of Venice:—

'I am content, so he will let me have
The other half in use.'

6 Gata.

Our services a while; but my full heart
Remains in use⁴ with you. Our Italy
Shines o'er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approaches to the port⁵ of Rome:
Equality of two domestic powers
Breeds scrupulous faction: The hated, grown to strength,

Are newly grown to love: the condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his father's honour, creeps apace
Into the hearts of such as have not thriv'd
Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;
And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge
By any desperate change: My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe⁶ my going,
Is Fulvia's death.

Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me freedom,

It does from childishness:—Can Fulvia die?⁷

Ant. She's dead, my queen:

Look here, and, at thy sovereign leisure, read
The garb she awak'd⁸: at the last, best:
See, when, and where she died.

Cleo. O, most false love:
Where be the sacred vials thou should'st fill
With sorrowful water?⁹ I see, I see,
In Fulvia's death, how mine receiv'd shall be.

Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepar'd to know

The purposes I bear; which are, or cease,
As you shall give the advice: By the fire,
That quickens Nilus' slime, I go from hence,
Thy soldier, servant; making peace, or war,
As thou affect'st.

Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come;—
But let it be,—I am quickly ill, and well:
So Antony loves.

Ant. My precious queen, forbear;
And give true evidence to his love, which stands
An honourable trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I pr'ythee, turn aside, and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say, the tears
Belong to Egypt:¹⁰ Good, now, play one scene
Of excellent dissembling; and let it look Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll heat my blood; no more.

Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is meetly.

Ant. Now, by my sword,—

Cleo. And target,—Still he mends;
But this is not the best: Look, pr'ythee, Charmian,
How this Herculean Roman¹¹ does become
The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.
Sir, you and I must part,—but that's not it:
Sir, you and I have lov'd,—but there's not it;
That you know well: Something it is I would,—
O, my oblivion¹² is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your royalty
Holds idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself.¹³

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour,
To bear such idleness so near the heart
As Cleopatra this. But sir, forgive me;
Since my becoming kill me, when they do not

7 L. e. render my going not dangerous.

8 Cleopatra apparently means to say, 'Though age could not exempt me from folly, at least it frees me from a childish and ready belief of every assertion. Is it possible that Fulvia is dead? I cannot believe it.'

9 The commotion she occasioned.

10 Alluding to the lachrymatory vials filled with tears, which the Romans placed in the tomb of a departed friend.

11 To me, the queen of Egypt.

12 Antony traced his descent from Anton, a son of Hercules.

13 Oblivion is used for oblivious memory, a memory apt to be forgetful.

14 An antithesis seems intended between royalty and subject. 'But that I know you to be a queen, and that your royalty holds idleness in subjection to you, I should suppose you, from this idle discourse, to be the very genius of idleness itself.'

Eye well to you :¹ Your honour calls you hence ;
Therefore be deaf to my unpitied folly,
And all the gods go with you ! upon your sword
Sit laurel'd victory ! and smooth success
Be strew'd before your feet !

Ant. Let us go. Come ;
Our separation so abides, and flies,
That thou, residing here, go'st yet with me,
And I, hence fleeing, here remain with thee.²
Away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Rome. An Apartment in Caesar's House. Enter OCTAVIUS CESAR, LEPIDUS, and Attendants.

Ces. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It is not Caesar's natural vice to hate
Our great competitor :³ From Alexandria
This is the news ; He fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamps of night in revel ; is not more manlike
Than Cleopatra ; nor the queen of Ptolemy
More womanly than he ; hardly gave audience, or Vouchsaf'd to think he had partners : you shall find
there

A man, who is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think, there are
Evils enough to darken all his goodness :
His faults, in him, seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness ;⁴ hereditary,
Rather than purchas'd ;⁵ what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses.

Ces. You are too indulgent : Let us grant it is not

Amiss to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy ;
To give a kingdom for a mirth ; to sit
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave ;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knaves that smell of sweat : say, this becomes
him,

(As his composure must be rare indeed, Whom these things cannot blemish,) yet must

Antony
No way excuse his soils, when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness.⁶ If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the drossness of his bones,
Call on him for't : but to confound such time,
That drums him from his sport, and speaks as loud
As his own state, and ours,—'tis to be chid
As we rate boys ; who, being mature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Here's more news.

Mes. Thy biddings have been done : and every hour,
Most noble Caesar, shalt thou have report
How 'tis abroad. Pompey is strong at sea ;

1 'That which would seem to become me most, is hateful to me when it is not acceptable in your sight.'
There is perhaps an allusion to what Antony said in the first scene :—

— wrangling queen,
Whom every thing becomes.

2 This conceit may have been suggested by the following passage in Sidney's Arcadia, b. l. :—

'She went, they said ; or rightly for to say,
She said with them, they went in thought with her.'
Thus also in the Mercator of Plautus :— 'Si domi sum, foris ex animus ; sin foris sum, animus domi est.'

3 The old copy reads, 'Our great competitor.' Dr.
Johnson proposed the emendation, 'So Menas says :—'

'These three world-sharers, these competitors
Are in thy vessel.'

4 'As the stars or spots of heaven appear more bright and prominent from the darkness of the night, so the faults of Antony seem enlarged and aggravated by his goodness, which gives relief to his faults, and makes them show out more prominent and conspicuous.'

5 i. e. procured by his own fault.

6 'His trifling levity throws so much burden upon us.'

7 i. e. 'wast' him forth.' 'If Antony followed his debaucheries at times of leisure only, I should leave him to be punished (says Caesar) by their natural conse-

And it appears, he is bewor'd of those
That only have fear'd Caesar :⁸ to the ports
The discontents⁹ repair, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Ces. I should have known no less :—
It hath been taught us from the primal state,
That he, which is, was wish'd until he were ;
And the ebb'd man, ne'er lov'd till ne'er worth love,
Comes dear'd, by being lack'd.¹⁰ This common
body,

Like a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lackeying the varying tide,¹¹
To rot itself with motion.

Mes. Caesar, I bring thee word,
Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates,
Make the sea serve them ; which they ear¹² and wound

With keels of every kind : Many hot inroads
They make in Italy : the borders maritime Lack blood¹³ to think on't, and flush¹⁴ youth revolt :
No vessel can peep forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen ; for Pompey's name strikes more,
Than could his war resisted.

Ces. Antony,
Leave thy lascivious wassals.¹⁵ When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow ; whom thou fought'st against,
Though daintily brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer ; Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle¹⁶
Which beasts would cough at : thy palate then did deign

The roughest berry on the rudest hedge ;
Yea, like a stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The barks of trees thou brows'd'st ; on the Alps
It is reported, thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on : And all this,
(It wounds thine honour, that I speak it now,)
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lack'd not.

Lep. 'Tis pity of him.

Ces. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome : 'Tis time we twain
Did show ourselves i' the field ; and, to that end, Assemble we immediate council : Pompey
Thrives in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Caesar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able,
To 'front this present time.

Ces. 'Till which encounter,
It is my business too. Farewell.

Lep. Farewell, my lord : What you shall know mean time

Of stirs abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be partaker.

Ces. Doubt not, sir ;
I knew it for my bond.¹⁷ [Exeunt.]

quences, by surfeits and dry bones ; but to conserve such time,' &c.

8 'Those whom not love but fear made adherents to Caesar, now show their affection for Pompey.'

9 That is, the malcontents. So in King Henry VI.
Part I. Act v. Sc. 1.—

— that may please the eye.

Of fickle changelings and poor discontents.
10 The old copy reads, 'Comes fear'd by being lack'd.'
Warburton made the correction, which was necessary to the sense. Coriolanus says :—

'I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd.'

We should perhaps read in the preceding line :—
— ne'er lov'd till not worth love.'

11 The folio reads, 'leaving the varying tide.' The emendation, which is well supported by Stevens, was made by Theobald. Perhaps another Messenger should be noted as entering here with fresh news.

12 Plough. 13 i. e. turn pale.

14 Flush youth is youth ripened to manhood, youth whose blood is at the flow.

15 Wassals, or wassailers, is here put for intemperance in general.

16 All these circumstances of Antony's distress are literally taken from Plutarch.

17 That is, to be my bounden duty.

SCENE V. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Charmian,—

Char. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha!

Give me to drink mandragora.¹

Char. Why, madam?

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of time,

My Antony is away.

Char. You think of him

Too much.

Cleo. O, 'tis treason!

Char. Madam, I trust, not so.

Cleo. Thou, eunuch! Mardian!

Mar. What's your highness' pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to hear those ring; I take no pleasure
 In aught an eunuch has: 'Tis well for thee,
 That, being unseminar'd, thy freer thoughts
 May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed?

Mar. Not in deed, madam; for I can do nothing
 But what indeed is honest to be done:
 Yet have I fierce affections, and think:
 What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O, Charmian,
 Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?
 Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?
 O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony!
 Do bravely, horse! for woe'st thou whom thou mov'st?

The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm
 And burgonet² of men.—He's speaking now,
 Or murmuring, Where's the serpent of old Nile?
 For so he calls me: Now I feed myself
 With most delicious poison:³—Think on me,
 That am with Phœbus' amorous pinches black,
 And wrinkled deep in time! Broad-fronted Cæsar,
 When thou wast here above the ground, I was
 A morsel for a monarch: and great Pompey
 Would stand, and make his eyes grow in my brow;
 There would he anchor his aspect, and die
 With looking on his life.

Enter ALEXAS.

Alas. Sovereign of Egypt, hail!

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark Antony!
 Yet, coming from him, that great medicine bath
 With its tinct gilds thee.—

How goes it with my brave Mark Antony?

Alas. Last thing he did, dear queen,
 He kiss'd,—the last of many doubled kisses,
 This orient pearl:—His speech sticks in my heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alas. Good friend, quoth he,
 Say, The firm Roman to great Egypt sends
This treasure of an oyster; at whose foot
To mend the pretty present, I will piece

Her opulent throne with kingdoms; All the east,
Say thou, shall call her mistress. So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an arrogant⁴ steed,
Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke
Was beastly dumb⁵ by him.

Cleo. What, was he sad, or merry?
 Alas. Like to the time o' the year, between the extremes

Of the hot and cold; he was nor sad, nor merry.

Cleo. O well-divided disposition!—Note him,
 Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note
 him;

He was not sad; for he would shine on those
 That make their looks by his: he was not merry;
 Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay
 In Egypt with his joy: but between both;
 O heavenly mingle!—Be'st thou sad, or merry,
 The violence of either thee becomes;
 So does it no man else.—Met'st thou my poets?

Alas. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers:
 Why do you send so thick?

Cleo. Who's born that day

When I forget to send to Antony,

Shall die a beggar.—Ink and paper, Charmian,—

Welcome, my good Alexas,—Did I, Charmian,

Ever love Cæsar so?

Char. O that brave Cæsar!

Cleo. Be chok'd with such another emphasis!

Say, the brave Antony.

Char. The valiant Cæsar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth,

If thou with Cæsar paragon again

My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,
 I sing but after you.

Cleo. My salled days:

When I was green in judgment:—Cold in blood,

To say, as I said then!—But, come, away:

Get me ink and paper: he shall have every day

A several greeting, or I'll unpeople Egypt.

[Exeunt]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Messina. A Room in Pompey's House.

Enter POMPEY, MENECRATES, and MENAS.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist
 The deeds of justest men.

Menas. Know, worthy Pompey,
 That what they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne, decays

The thing we sue for.⁶

Menas. We, ignorant of ourselves,

Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers

Deny us for our good; so find we profit,

By losing of our prayers.

ing it, is that an could never stand before termagant.
 The epithet now admitted into the text is the happy suggestion of Mr. Booden, and is to be preferred both on account of its more striking propriety, and because it admits of the original article an retaining its place before it. That it is an epithet duly applied to the steed of Antony, may be shown by high poetical authority. In the Agacdo Domado of Lope de Vega, the reader will find the following passage:—

Y el cavallo arrogante, in que subido

El hombre parecia

Monstruosa fiera que sies pies tenia.

Termagant, it should be observed, is furious; arrogant, which answers to the Latin ferus, is only fierce, proud. Our great poet 'of imagination all compact,' is the greatest master of poetic diction the world has yet produced; he could not have any knowledge of the Spanish poet, but has anticipated him in the use of this expressive epithet. The word arrogant, as written in old MSS. might easily be mistaken for arm-gant.

7 Thus the old copy; it was altered by Theobald to dumb'd without necessity. The arrogant steed, says Alexas, would let no sound be heard but his own, he neigh'd so loud that what I would have spoke was beastly obstructed by him.

8 i. e. In such quick succession.

9 'While we are praying, the thing for which we pray is losing its value.'

1 A plant, of which the infusion was supposed to procure sleep. Thus in Addison's translation of The Golden Ass of Apuleius:—'I gave him no poison but a doting drink of mandragora, which is of such force, that it will cause any man to sleep as though he were dead.' See Pliny's Natural History by Holland, 1601; and Plutarch's Morals, 1602, p. 19.

2 A burgonet is a helmet, a head-piece.

3 Hence perhaps Pope's Eloisa—

'Still drink delicious poison from thine eye.'

4 'Broad-fronted,' is allusion to Cæsar's baldness.

5 Alluding to the philosopher's stone, which, by its touch, converts base metal into gold. The alchemists call the matter, whatever it be, by which they perform transmutation, a medicine. Thus Chapman in his Shadow of Night, 1594—

'O then, thou great elixir of all treasures.'

And on this passage he has the following note:—'The philosopher's stone, or philosophica medicina, is called the great elixir.'

6 The old copy reads 'an arm-gant steed,' upon which conjecture has been vainly employed. Steevens adopted Monck Mason's suggestion of a termagant steed, with high commendation. A striking objection against reading, which escaped Mr. Steevens in adopt-

Pom. I shall do well :

The people love me, and the sea is mine ;
My power's a crescent,¹ and my anguring hope
Says, it will come to the full. Mark Antony
In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make
No wars without doors : Caesar gets money, where He loses hearts : Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd ; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.

Men. Caesar and Lepidus
Are in the field ; a mighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where have you this ? 'tis false.

Men. From Silvius, sir.

Pom. He dreams ; I know, they are in Rome together,

Looking for Antony : But all the charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wad² lip !
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both !
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming : Epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite ;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even till³ a lethe'd dulness.—How now, Varrius ?

Enter VARRIUS.

Varr. This is most certain that I shall deliver :
Mark Antony is every hour in Rome
Expected ; since he went from Egypt, 'tis
A space for further travel.⁴

Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear.—Menas, I did not think,
This amorous surfeiter would have don'd his helm
For such a petty war : his soldiership
Is twice the other twain : But let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow⁵ pluck
The ne'er last-wearied Antony.

Men. I cannot hope,⁶
Caesar and Antony shall well greet together :
His wife, that's dead, did trespass to Caesar ;
His brother war'd upon him ; although, I think,
Not mov'd by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,
How lesser enmities may give way to greater.
Were't not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant they should square⁷ between themselves ;

For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords : but how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know.
Be it as our gods will have it ! It only stands
Our lives upon,⁸ to use our strongest hands.
Come, Menas. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rome. A Room in the House of Lepidus. Enter ENOBARBUS and LEPIDUS.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your captain
To soft and gentle speech.

Eno. I shall entreat him
To answer like himself : if Caesar move him,

1 Old copy, 'My powers are crescent,' &c. The judicious emendation was made by Theobald.

2 I. e. thy scann'd or pallid lip. It should be remarked that the lips of Africans and Asiatics are paler than those of Europeans.

3 I. e. delay his sense of honour from exerting itself till he is become habitually sluggish ; till was anciently used for to. So in Candlemas Day, 1512.

4 This lurdene take heed what I say the fyll.
And in George Cavendish's Metrical Visions, p. 19 :—

'I espied certeyn persons coming me fyll.'

5 I. e. since he quitted Egypt a space of time has elapsed in which a longer journey might have been performed than from Egypt to Rome.

6 Julius Caesar had married Cleopatra to young Ptolemy, who was afterwards drowned.

7 I. e. I cannot expect. So Chaucer in The Reeve's Tale, v. 4027 :—

'Our manciple I hope he wel be ded.'

8 I. e. quarrel.

9 I. e. it is incumbent upon us for the preservation of our lives.

10 I. e. I would meet him undressed, without any show

Let Antony look over Caesar's head,
And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard,
I would not shave't to-day.⁹

Lep. 'Tis not a time
For private stomaching.

Eno. Every time
Serves for the matter that is then born in it.

Lep. But small to greater matters must give way
Eno. Not if the small come first.

Lep. Your speech is passion :
But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes
The noble Antony.

Enter ANTONY and VENTIDIUS.

Eno. And yonder, Caesar.

Enter CESAR, MENENAS, and AGRIPPA.

Ant. If we compose¹⁰ well here, to Parthia :
Hark you, Ventidius.

Ces. I do not know,
Mecenas ; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends,
That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A lesser action read us. What's a'miss,
May it be gently heard : When we debate
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit
Murder in healing wounds : Then, noble partners,
(The rather, for I earnestly beseech,)
Touch you the sorest points with sweetest terms,
Nor curstness¹¹ grow to the matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well :
Were we before our armies, and to fight,
I should do thus.

Ces. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Ces. Sit.

Ant. Sit, sir ?
Ces. Nay,

Then—
Ant. I learn, you take things ill, which are not so ;
Or, being, concern you not.

Ces. I must be laugh'd at,
If, or for nothing, or a little, I Should say myself offended ; and with you Chiefly i' the world : more laugh'd at, that I should Once name you derogately, when to sound your name
It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Caesar,
What was't to you ?

Ces. No more than my residing here at Rome
Might be to you in Egypt : Yet, if you there
Did practise¹² on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question.¹³

Ant. How intend you, practis'd ?
Ces. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent,
By what did here befall me. Your wife, and brother,
Made wars upon me : and their contestation
Was theme for you,¹⁴ you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake my business ; my brother never of respect. Plutarch mentions that Antony, 'after the overthrow he had at Modena, suffered his beard to grow at length, and never clip'd it, that it was marvellous long.' Perhaps this circumstance was in Shakespeare's thoughts.

10 That is, if we come to a lucky composition or agreement. So afterwards :—

'I crave our composition may be written.'

11 'Let not ill humour be added to the real subject of our difference.'

12 The note of admiration here was added by Steevens, who thinks that Antony is meant to resent the invitation Caesar gives him to be seated, as indicating a consciousness of superiority in his too successful partner in power.

13 To practise is to use unwarrantable arts or stratagems. The word is frequently applied to traitorous designs against those in power, by old writers.

14 Theme or subject of conversation.

15 This passage has been misunderstood, erroneously explained, and considered corrupt. Its meaning evidently is, 'You were the theme or subject for which your wife and brother made their contestation ; you were the

Did urge me in his act! I did inquire it;
And have my learning from some true reports,²
That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather Discredit my authority with yours;
And make the wars alike against my stomach,
Having alike your cause? Of this, my letters
Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,
As matter whole you have not to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Ces. You praise yourself
By laying defects of judgment to me; but
You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so;
I know you could not lack, I am certain on't,
Very necessity of this thought, that I,
Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,
Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars
Which 'fronted mine own peace. As for my wife,
I would you had her spirit in such another:
The third o' the world is yours; with which a smalle
You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eno. Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women!

Ant. So much uncurable, her garboils, Cæsar,
Made out of her impatience, (which not wanted Shrewdness of policy too,) I grieving grant,
Did you too much disquiet: for that, you must
But say, I could not help it.

Ces. I wrote to you,
When rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience.

Ant. Sir,
He fell upon me, ere admitted; then
Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want
Of what I was i' the morning: but, next day,
I told him of myself: which was as much,
As to have ask'd him pardon: Let this fellow
Be nothing of our strife; if we contend,
Out of our question wipe him.

Ces. You have broken
The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Cæsar.
Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak;
The honour's sacred which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack'd it: But on, Cæsar:
The article of my oath,—

Ces. To lend me arms, and aid, when I requir'd
them;
The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather;
And then, when poison'd hours had bound me up
From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,
I'll play the penitent to you: but mine honesty
Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power
Work without it: Truth is, that Fulvia,
To have me out of Egypt, made wars here;
For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
So far ask pardon, as befits mine honour
To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis nobly spoken.

Mes. If it might please you, to enforce no further
The griefs between ye: to forget them quite,
Were to remember that the present need Speaks to atone.³

word of war.' Mason supposed some words had been transposed, and that the passage ought to stand thus:—
'— and for contention

Their theme was you; you were the word of war.'
1 I. e. never did make use of my name as a pretence for the war.

2 Reporters.

3 I. e. could not look graciously upon them, could not approve them. 'Fronted is affronted, opposed.

4 Messenger.

5 'I told him the condition I was in when he had his last audience.'

6 'The theme of honour which he now speaks of, namely, the religion of an oath, for which he supposes me not to have a due regard, is sacred; it is a tender point, and touches his character nearly. Let him therefore urge his charge, that I may vindicate myself.'

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mecenas.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wangle in, when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only; speak no more.

Eno. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak no more.

Eno. Go to, then; your considerate stone.¹⁰

Ces. I do not much dislike the matter, but
The manner of his speech: for it cannot be,
We shall remain in friendship, our conditions
So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew
What hoop should hold us stanch, from edge to edge
O' the world I would pursue it.¹¹

Agg. Give me leave, Cæsar,—

Ces. Speak, Agrippa.

Agg. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side,
Admir'd Octavia: great Mark Antony
Is now a widow.

Ces. Say not so, Agrippa;

If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
Were well deserv'd of rashness.¹²

Ant. I am not married, Cæsar: let me hear Agrippa further speak.

Agg. To hold you in perpetual amity,
To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an unshipping knot, take Antony
Octavia to his wife: whose beauty claims
No worse a husband than the best of men;
Whose virtue, and whose general graces, speak
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
All little jealousies, which now seem great,
And all great fears, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing: truths would be tales,
Where now half tales be truths: her love to both,
Would, each to other, and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke;
For 'tis a studied, not a present thought;
By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Cæsar speak?

Ces. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd
With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa,

If I would say, Agrippa, be it so,

To make this good?

Ces. The power of Cæsar, and His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shows,
Dream of impediment!—Let me have thy hand:
Further this act of grace; and, from this hour,
The heart of brothers govern in our loves,
And sway our great designs!

Ces. There is my hand.

A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother
Did ever love so dearly: Let her live
To join our kingdoms, and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen!

Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst
Pompey;

For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great,

7 'Nor my greatness work without mine honesty.'

8 Grievances.

9 I. e. reconcile you.

10 'Go to, then, henceforward I will be as mute as a marble statue, which seems to think, though it can say nothing.'

— statua taciturnior erit
Plurimque et risum populi quat.

Horace.

As mute as a stone, and as silent as a stone, are common expressions.

11 'I do not (says Cæsar) think the man wrong, but too free of his interpretation; for it cannot be, we shall remain in friendship; yet if it were possible, I would endeavour it.'

12 That is, 'You might be reproved for your rashness, and would well deserve it.' The old copy reads 'proof.'
Warburton made the emendation

Of late upon me : I must thank him only,¹
Lest my remembrance suffer ill report ;
At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon us :
Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks out us.

Ant. Where lies he ?

Ces. About the Mount Misenum.

Ant. What's his strength
By land ?

Ces. Great, and increasing : but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.
'Would, we had spoke together ! Haste we for it :
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, despatch we
The business we have talk'd of.

Ces. With most gladness ;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I will lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,
Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Exeunt CESAR, ANTONY, and LEPIDUS.

Mec. Welcome from Egypt, sir.

Eno. Half the heart of Cæsar, worthy Mecænas !
my honourable friend, Agrippa !—

Agg. Good Enobarbus !

Mec. We have cause to be glad, that matters are so well digested. You stayed well by it in Egypt.

Eno. Ay, sir ; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight wild boars roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there ; Is this true ?

Eno. This was but as a fly by an eagle : we had much more monstrous matter of feast, which worthily deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square² to her.

Eno. When she first met Mark Antony, she pursed up his heart upon the river of Cydnus.³

Agg. There she appeared, indeed ; or my reporter devised well for her.

Eno. I will tell you :
The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,⁴
Burn'd on the water : the poop was beaten gold ;

Purple the sails, and so perfumed, that
The winds were lovesick with them : the oars were silver ;

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water, which they beat, to follow faster,

1 'Lest I be thought too willing to forget benefits, I must barely return him thanks, and then I will defy him.'

2 I. e. if report quadrates, or suits with her merits.

3 Enobarbus is made to say that Cleopatra gained Antony's heart on the river Cydnus ; but it appears from the conclusion of his own description, that Antony had never seen her there ; that whilst she was on the river, Antony was sitting alone, enthroned in the market-place, whistling to the air, all the people having left him to gaze upon her : and that when she landed he sent to her to invite her to supper.

4 The reader will be pleased to have it in his power to compare Dryden's description with that of Shakspeare :—

'Her galley down the silver Cydnus row'd,
The tackling, silk, the streamers wav'd with gold,
The gentle winds were lodg'd in purple sails :
Her nymphs, like Nereids, round her couch were plac'd,

Where she, another seahorn Venus, lay,—
She lay, and leant her cheek upon her hand,
And cast a look so languishingly sweet,
As if secure of all beholders' hearts,
Neglecting she could take 'em : Boys, like Cupids,
Stood fanning with their painted wings the winds
That play'd about her face : But if she smil'd,
A darning glory seem'd to blaze abroad,
That man's desiring eyes were never wearied,
But hung upon the object : To soft flutes
The silver oars kept time ; and while they play'd,
The hearing gave new pleasure to the sight,
And both to thought. 'Twas heaven, or somewhat
more ;

As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,
It beggar'd all description : she did lie
In her pavilion, (cloth of gold, of tissue,)
O'er-picturing that Venus, where we see,
The fancy outwork nature : on each side her,
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With diverse-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
And what they undid did.

Agg. O, rare for Antony !

Eno. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,⁵
And made their bends adornings :⁶ at the helm
A seeming mermaid steers : the silken tackle
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame⁷ the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her ; and Antony,
Enthron'd in the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air ; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

Agg. Rare Egyptian !

Eno. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper : she replied,
It should be better, he became her guest ;
Which she entreated : Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of No woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast ;
And for his ordinary, pays his heart,
For what his eyes eat only.

Agg. Royal wench !

She made great Cæsar lay his sword to bed ;
He plough'd her, and she crop'd⁸ it.

Eno. I saw her once

Hop forty paces through the public street :

And having lost her breath, she spoke, and panted,

That she did make defect, perfection,

And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly.

Eno. Never ; he will not ;

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale

Her infinite variety :⁹ Other women

Cloy th' appetites they feed ; but she makes hungry

Where most she satisfies. For vilest things

Become themselves in her ; that the holy priests

Bless her, when she is riggish.¹⁰

Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle

The heart of Antony, Octavia is

A blessed lottery¹¹ to him.

For she so charm'd all hearts, that gazing crowds
Stood panting on the shore, and wanted breath
To give their welcome voice.'

5 I. e. waited upon her looks, discovered her will by her looks. So Spenser, Faerie Queene, b. l. c. lii. :—

'From her fayre eyes he took commendement,
And by her looks conceited her intent.'

6 'Made their bends adornings.' On this passage there are several pages of notes in the variorum Shakspeare, which, as Stevens remarks, supply a powerful instance of the uncertainty of verbal criticism ; for the same phrase is there explained with reference to four different images—bows, groups, eyes, and tails.
Until some more fortunate conjecture shall be offered, I adopt Stevens's opinion, that 'the plain sense of the passage seems to be, these ladies rendered that homage which their assumed characters obliged them to pay their queen, a circumstance ornamental to themselves.
Each inclined her person so gracefully, that the very act of humiliation was an improvement of her own beauty.'

7 'Yarely frame,' I. e. readily perform.

8 Cleopatra, as appears from the tetradrachms of Antony, was no Venus ; and indeed the majority of adles who most successfully enslaved the hearts of princes, are known to have been less remarkable for personal than mental attractions. The reign of insipid beauty is seldom lasting ; but permanent must be the rule of a woman who can diversify the sameness of life by an inexhausted variety of accomplishments.

9 Riggish is wanton, immodest. Dryden has emulated Shakspeare in this, as well as the passage before cited ; it should be remembered, however, that Shakspeare furnished him with his most striking images

10 Lottery, for allotment.

Ag. Let us go.—
Good Enobarbus, make yourself my guest,
Whilst you abide here.

Eno. Humbly, sir, I thank you.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in Caesar's House. Enter CESAR, ANTONY, OCTAVIA between them; Attendants, and a Soothsayer.

Ant. The world, and my great office, will sometimes

Divide me from your bosom.

Octa. All which time
Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers
To them for you.

Ant. Good night, sir.—My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come Shall all be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.—

Octa. Good night, sir.

Ces. Good night.

[Exeunt CESAR and OCTAVIA.]

Ant. Now, sirrah! you do wish yourself in Egypt?

Sooth. 'Would, I had never come from thence, nor you Thither!

Ant. If you can, your reason?

Sooth. I see't in My motion, have it not in my tongue: But yet
Hie you again to Egypt.

Ant. Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Caesar's, or mine?

Sooth. Caesar's.
Therefore, O, Antony, stay not by his side:
Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Caesar's is not; but near him, thy angel Becomes a Fear,* as being overpowered; therefore Make space enough between you.

Ant. Speak this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee; no more, but when to thee.

If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to lose; and of that natural luck,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds: thy lustre thickens;
When he shines by: I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him;
But, he away, 'tis noble.

Ant. Get thee gone:

Say to Ventidius, I would speak with him:

[Exit Soothsayer.]

He shall to Parthia.—Be it art, or hap,
He hath spoke true: The very dice obey him:
And, in our sports, my better cunning faints
Under his chance: if we draw lots, he speeds:
His cocks do win the battle still of mine,
When it is all to nought: and his quails* ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds. I will to Egypt:
And though I make this marriage for my peace,

Enter VENTIDIUS.

If the east my pleasure lies:—O, come, Ventidius,
You must to Parthia; your commission's ready:
Follow me, and receive it. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Street. Enter LEPIDUS, MECENAS and AGRIPPA.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no further: pray you, hasten

Your generals after

Ag. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,
Which will become you both, farewell.

Mec. We shall,
As I conceive the journey, be at mount*
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter,
My purposes do draw me much about;
You'll win two days upon me.

Mec. Ag. Sir, good success!

Lep. Farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace. Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Give me some music; music, moody* food
Of us that trade in love.

Attend. The music, ho!

Enter MARDIAN.

Cleo. Let it alone; let us to billiards:†
Come, Charmian.

Char. My arm is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play'd,
As with a woman;—Come, you'll play with me, sir?

Mec. As well as I can, madam.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though it come too short,

The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now:—
Give me mine angle,—We'll to the river: there,
My music playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fishes; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say, Ah, ha! you're caught. †

Char. 'Twas merry, when
You wager'd on your angling; when your diver
Did hang a salt fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.*

Cleo. That time!—O times!—
I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night
I laugh'd him into patience: and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed;
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan.* O! from Italy;

Enter a Messenger.

Rain!‡ thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren.

Mec. Madam, madam,——

Cleo. Antony's dead?

1 The same construction is found in Coriolanus, Act 1. Sc. 1, 'Shouting their emulation.' And in King Lear, Act II. Sc. 2, 'Smile you my speeches?'

2 A Fear was a personage in some of the old Moralities. See Trollius and Cressida, Act III. Sc. 2. The whole thought is borrowed from North's translation of Plutarch.

3 So in Macbeth, 'light thickens.'

4 Shakespeare derived this from Plutarch. The ancients used to match quails as we match cocks. Julius Pollux relates that a circle was made in which the birds were placed, and he whose quail was first driven out of this circle lost the stake. We are told by Mr. Maraden that the Sumatrans practice these quail combats. The Chinese have always been extremely fond of quail fighting. Mr. Douce has given a print, from an elegant Chinese miniature painting, which represents some ladies engaged at this amusement, where the quails are actually inhoop'd. See Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. II. p. 87.

5 Mount Misenum.

6 Moody here means melancholy. Cotgrave explains moody by the French words morne, triste.

7 It is scarcely necessary to remark that this is an anachronism. Billiards were not known to the ancients.

8 This circumstance is from Plutarch: Antony had fished unsuccessfully in Cleopatra's presence, and she laughed at him. The next time, therefore, he directed the boatmen to dive under water, and attach a fish to his hook. The queen perceived the stratagem, but affecting not to notice it, congratulated him on his success. Another time, however, she determined to laugh at him once more, and gave orders to her own people to get the start of his divers, and put some dried salt fish on his hook.

9 The battle of Philippi being the greatest action of Antony's life, it was an adroit piece of flattery to name his sword from it. It does not, however, appear to be perfectly in costume; the dignifying of weapons with names in this manner had its origin in later times. The swords of the heroes of romance have generally pompous names.

10 The old copy reads 'Rain thou,' &c. Rare agrees better with the epithets fruitful and barren. So in Timon:—

'Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear.

If thou say so, villain, thou kill'st thy mistress :
But well and free,
If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veins to kiss; a hand, that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he's well.
Cleo. Why, there's more gold. But, sirrah, mark;
We use

To say, the dead are well: bring it to that,
The gold I give thee, will I melt, and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will;
But there's no goodness in thy face: If Antony
Be free, and healthful,—why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings? If not well,
Thou should'st come like a fury crown'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man.¹

Mess. Will't please you hear me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee, ere thou speak'st:

Yet if thou say, Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Cæsar, or not captive to him,
I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pearls upon thee.²

Mess. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo. Thou'rt an honest man.

Mess. Cæsar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Mess. But yet, madam,—

Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does allay
The good precedence;³ lie upon but yet:
But yet is as a gaoler to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Pr'ythee, friend,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear,
The good and bad together: He's friend with Cæsar;
In state of health, thou say'st; and, thou say'st, free.

Mess. Free, madam! no; I made no such report:
He's bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turn?

Mess. For the best turn i' the bed.

Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.

Mess. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee!
[Strikes him down.]

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you?—Hence,
[Strikes him again.]

Horrible villain! or I'll spurn thine eyes
Like balls before me; I'll unhair thy head;

[She hales him up and down.]
Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire, and stew'd in brine,
Smarting in ling'ring pickle.

Mess. Gracious madam,
I, that do bring the news, made not the match.

Cleo. Say, 'tis not so, a province I will give thee,
And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou hadst
Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage;
And I will boot thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.

Mess. He's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long.

[Draws a Dagger.]

1 i. e. not like a man in form, not in your own proper shape. Thus in A Mad World my Masters, by Middleton, 1606:—

'The very devil assum'd thee formally.'

2 That is, I will give thee a kingdom, it being the eastern ceremony at the coronation of their kings to powder them with gold dust and seed pearl. So Milton:—

'—the gorgeous east, with liberal hand,
Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold.'
See the Life of Tunur Bec, or Tamerlane, by M. Poth de la Croix, liv. ii. c. 2.

3 i. e. abates the good quality of what is already reported.

4 Profit thee, recompense thee.

5 'Contain yourself, restrain your passion within bounds.' So in the Taming of the Shrew.—

'Doubt not my lord, we can contain ourselves.'

Mess. Nay, then I'll run:—

What mean you, madam? I have made no fault.

[Exit.]

Char. Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;⁴

The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents 'scape not the thunderbolt.
Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures

Turn all to serpents!—Call the slave again:

Though I am mad, I will not bite him:—Call.

Char. He is afeard to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him:—

These hands do lack nobility, that they strike

A meaner than myself;⁵ since I myself

Have given myself the cause.—Come hither, sir.

Re-enter Messenger.

Though it be honest, it is never good
To bring bad news: Give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?

I cannot hate thee worse than I do,

If thou again say, Yea.

Mess. He is married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O, I would thou didst;

So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made

A cistern for scald'd snakes! Go, get thee hence;

Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me

Thou would'st appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. Take no offence, that I would not offend
you:

To punish me for what you make me do,

Seems much unequal: He is married to Octavia.

Cleo. O, that his fault should make a knave of
thee,

That art not!—What? thou'rt sure of—Get thee hence:—

The merchandise which thou hast brought from Rome,

Are all too dear for me; Lie thee upon thy hand,
And be undone by 'em! [Exit Messenger.]

Char. Good your highness, patience.

Cleo. In praising Antony, I have dispraised
Cæsar.

Char. Many times, madam.

Cleo. I am paid for't now.

Lead me from hence,

I faint; O, Iras, Charmian,—'Tis no matter;—

Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him

Report the feature⁶ of Octavia, her years,

Her inclination, let him not leave out

The colour of her hair:—bring me word quickly.

[Exit ALEXAS.]

Let him for ever go:—Let him not—Charmian,⁷

Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,

The other way he's a Mars:—Bid you Alexas

[To MARDIAN.]

Bring me word, how tall she is.—Pity me, Charmian.

But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber.

[Exeunt.]

6 This thought seems to be borrowed from the laws of chivalry, which forbade a knight to engage with his inferior.

7 The old copy thus exhibits this line:—

'That art not what thou'rt sure of. Get thee hence.'
The emendation admitted in the text is partly that of Monck Mason. Johnson has observed that the line consists of abrupt starts. Cleopatra interrupts herself with passionate exclamations, and breaks off her interrogatory by again driving out the hateful messenger of ill news. Mason would read, 'What! thou'rt sure of?' and Stevens adopted his reading.

8 Feature was anciently used for the form or fashion of the whole body.

9 Cleopatra is now talking in broken sentences, not of the messenger, but of Antony.

SCENE VI. Near Misenum. Enter POMPEY and MENAS, at one side, with Drum and Trumpet: at another, CÆSAR, LEPIDUS, ANTONY, ENOBABBUS, MECÆNAS, with Soldiers marching.

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you mine; And we shall talk before we fight.

Cæs. Most meet That first we come to words; and therefore have we Our written purposes before us sent; Which, if thou hast consider'd, let us know If 'twill tie up thy discontented sword; And carry back to Sicily much tall¹ youth, That else must perish here.

Pom. To you all three, The senators alone of this great world, Chief factors for the gods,—I do not know, Wherefore my father should revengers want, Having a son and friends: since Julius Cæsar, Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,² There saw you labouring for him. What was it, That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what Made the all-honour'd, honest Roman Brutus, With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom, To drench the Capitol; but that they would Have one man but a man? And that is it, Hath made me rig my navy: at whose burden The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant To scourge the ingratitude that despicable Rome Cast on my noble father.

Cæs. Take your time. Ant. Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails, We'll speak with thee at sea: at land, thou know'st How much we do o'ercount thee.

Pom. At land, indeed, Thou dost o'ercount me of my father's house:³ But, since the cuckoo builds not for himself, Remain in't as thou may'st.⁴

Lep. Be pleas'd to tell us (For this is from the present,⁵) how you take The offers we have sent you.

Cæs. There's the point. Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh What it is worth embrac'd.

Cæs. And what may follow, To try a larger fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Rid all the sea of pirates; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome: This 'greed upon, To part with unhack'd edges, and bear back Our targe undinted.

Cæs. Ant. Lep. That's our offer.

Pom. Know then, I came before you here, a man prepar'd To take this offer: But Mark Antony Put me to some impatience:—Though I lose The praise of it by telling, You must know, When Cæsar and your brothers were at blows, Your mother came to Sicily, and did find Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey; And am well studied for a liberal thanks, Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand: I did not think, sir, to have met you here.

Ant. The beds i' the east are soft; and thanks to you, That call'd me, timelier than my purpose, hither; For I have gain'd by it.

Cæs. Since I saw you last, There is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not What counts' harsh fortune casts upon my face; But in my bosom shall she never come, To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here. Pom. I hope so, Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed: I crave, our composition may be written, And seal'd between us.

Cæs. That's the next to do.

Pom. We'll feast each other, ere we part; and let us Draw lots who shall begin.

Ant. That will I, Pompey.

Pom. No, Antony, take the lot: but, first, Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery Shall have the fame. I have heard, that Julius Cæsar Grew fat with feasting there.

Ant. You have heard much.

Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them.

Pom. Then so much have I heard:—

And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—

Eno. No more of that:—He did so.

Pom. What, I pray you?

Eno. A certain queen to Cæsar in a mattress.⁶

Pom. I know thee now;—How far'st thou, soldier?

Eno. Well;

And well am like to do; for, I perceive,

Four seats are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand

I never hated thee: I have seen thee fight,

When I have cavied thy behaviour.

Eno. Sir,

I never lov'd you much: but I have prais'd you,

When you have well deserv'd ten times as much

As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness,

It nothing ill becomes thee.—

Aboard my galley I invite you all:

Will you lead, lords?

Cæs. Ant. Lep. Show us the way, sir.

Pom. Come.

[Exit POMPEY, CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, Soldiers, and Attendants.]

Men. Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—[Aside.—] You and I have known,⁷ sir.

Eno. At sea, I think.

Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me:⁸

though it cannot be denied what I have done by land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Eno. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety: you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

[Exit.]

⁶ I. e. foreign to the object of our present discussion. Shakespeare uses the present as a substantive many times.

⁷ A metaphor from making marks or lines in casting accounts in arithmetic.

⁸ I. e. to Julius Cæsar. This is derived from the margin of North's Pitarch, 1679:—'Cleopatra trussed up in a mattress, and so brought to Cæsar upon Apollodorus' back.'

⁹ I. e. been acquainted. So in Cymbeline:—'Sir, we have known together at Orleans.'

¹⁰ 'The poet's art in delivering this humorous sentiment, which gives so very true and natural a picture of the commerce of the world) can never be sufficiently admired. The confession could come from none but a frank and rough character, like the speaker's: and the moral lesson insinuated under it, that flattery can make his way through the most stubborn manners, deserves our serious reflection.'—Warburton.

² This verb is used by Burton in his Anatomy of Melancholy, Pref. p. 22, ed. 1639: 'What madnesse ghosts this old man? but what madnesse ghosts us all?'

³ 'Thou canst not fright us with thy numerous navy.' So in Measure for Measure:—

'Setting it up to fear the birds of prey.'

⁴ At land indeed thou dost exceed me in possessions; having added to thy own my father's house. O'ercount seems to be used equivocally, and Pompey perhaps is meant to insinuate that Antony not only outnumbered but had overpowered him. The circumstance of Antony's obtaining the house of Pompey's father, the poet had from Plutarch.

⁵ Since, like the cuckoo, that seizes the nests of other birds, you have invaded a house which you could not build, keep it while you can.'

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas: If our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men's faces are true, whatsoe'er their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Men. No slander; they steal hearts.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure he cannot weep it back again.

Men. You have said, sir. We looked not for Mark Antony here; Pray, you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eno. Caesar's sister is call'd Octavia.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray you, sir?

Eno. 'Tis true.

Men. Then is Caesar, and he, for ever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Men. I think, the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find, the band that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.¹

Men. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not he, that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again: then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Caesar; and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is; he married but his occasion here.

Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you aboard? I have a health for you.

Eno. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats in Egypt.

Men. Come; let's away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. On board Pompey's Galley, lying near Misenum. Musica. Enter two or three Servants, with a Banquet.²

1 Serv. Here they'll be, man: Some o' their plants³ are ill rooted already, the least wind i' the world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

1 Serv. They have made him drink alms drink.⁴

2 Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition,⁵ he cries out, no more; reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

1 Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

2 Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men's fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that

¹ Conversation is behaviour, manner of acting in common life. 'He useth no virtue or honest conversation at all: Nec habet ullum cum virtute commercium.'—Baret.

² A banquet here is a refectory, similar to our dessert.

³ Plants, besides its common meaning, is used here for the foot, from the Latin. Thus in Chapman's version of the sixteenth lilyd:—

'Even to the low plants of his feete his forme was altered.' The French still use plante du pied for the sole of the foot.

⁵ Warburton explains this phrase as equivalent to one still in use, of 'Touching one in a sore place.'

⁶ A partizan was a weapon between a pike and a halberd; not being so long, it was made use of in mounting a breach, &c.

will do me no service, as a partizan⁶ I could not heave.

1 Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.⁷

A Sennet sounded. Enter CESAR, ANTONY, POMPEY, LEPIDUS, AGRIPPA, MECENAS, ENOBARBUS, MENAS, with other Captains.

Ant. Thus do they, sir: [To CESAR.] They take the flow o' the Nile

By certain scales i' the pyramid; they know, By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth, Or foison,⁸ follow: The higher Nilus swells, The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedman Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain, And shortly comes to harvest.⁹

Lep. You have strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun: so is your crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine.—A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll ne'er out.

Eno. Not till you have slept: I fear me, you'll be in, till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard, the Ptolemies' pyramids¹⁰ are very goodly things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. Pompey, a word. [Aside.]

Pom. Say in mine ear: What's it?

Men. Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee, captain, [Aside.]

And hear me speak a word.

Pom. Forbear me till anon.— This wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o' thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself; and it is as broad as it hath breadth; it is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs: it lives by that which nourisheth it; and the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so. And the tears of it are wet.

Ces. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Pom. [To MENAS aside.] Go, hang, sir, hang; Tell me of that? away!

Do as I bid you.—Where's this cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me, Rise from thy stool. [Aside.]

Pom. I think, thou'rt mad. The matter?

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes. [Rises, and walks aside.]

Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith:

What's else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

⁷ 'To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in it, is a sight as unseemly as the holes where the eyes should be, without the animating presence of the eyes to fill them.' The sphere in which the eye moves is an expression Shakespeare has used more than once:—

'How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fixed.' Sonnet 118.

'Make thy two eyes like stars start from their spheres.' Hamlet.

⁸ Foison is plenty, abundance.

⁹ Shakespeare seems to have derived his information respecting the Nilometer from Pliny, b. v. c. ix. Holland's translation. Or from Leo's History of Africa, translated by John Perry, 1600.

¹⁰ Pyramids for pyramid was in common use formerly: from this word Shakespeare formed the plural pyramises, to mark the indistinct pronunciation of a man nearly intoxicated, whose tongue is now beginning 'to split what it speaks.' The usual ancient plural was pyramides.

Ant. These quicksands, Lepidus,
 Keep off these, for you sink.
Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?
Pom. What say'st thou?
Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world?
 That's twice.
Pom. How should that be?
Men. But entertain it, and,
 Although thou think me poor, I am the man
 Will give thee all the world.
Pom. Hast thou drunk well?
Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.
 Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jove:
 Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky incline,¹
 Is thine, if thou wilt have't.
Pom. Show me which way.
Men. These three world-sharers, these competitors,²

Are in thy vessel: Let me cut the cable;
 And, when we are put off, fall to their throats:
 All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou should'st have done,
 And not have spoke on't! In me, 'tis villany;
 In thee, it had been good service. Thou must know,
 'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour;
 Mine honour, it. Repeat, that e'er thy tongue
 Hath so betray'd thine act: Being done unknown,
 I should have found it afterwards well done;
 But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. For this, [Aside.]
 I'll never follow thy pall'd³ fortunes more,—
 Who seeks, and will not take, when once 'tis
 offer'd,
 Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus.
Ant. Bear him ashore.—I'll pledge it for him,
 Pompey.

Eno. Here's to thee, Menas.
Men. Eno-barbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill, till the cup be hid.
Eno. There's a strong fellow, Menas.

[*Pointing to the Attendant who carries off
 LEPIDUS.*]

Men. Why?
Eno. He bears

The third part of the world, man; See'st not?

Men. The third part then is drunk: 'Would it were all,

That it might go on wheels!

Eno. Drink thou; increase the reels.⁴

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it.—Strike the vessels, 'ho!

Here is to Cæsar.

Cæs. I could well forbear it.
 It's monstrous labour when I wash my brain,
 And its grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Cæs. Possess it, I'll make answer: but I had rather fast

From all, four days, than drink so much in one.

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor! [To ANTONY.]
 Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals,
 And celebrate our drink?

1 i. e. encloses and embraces.

2 i. e. confederates. See, in the present play, Act I.
 Sc. 4.

3 Palled is vapid, past its time of excellence; palled wine is wine that has lost its sprightfulness.

4 Difficulties have been made about this passage, in which I must confess I see none. Menas says, 'The third part of the world is drunk (meaning Lepidus, one of the triumvirs); would it were all so, that it might go on wheels, i. e. turn round or change.' To which Eno-barbus replies, 'Drink thou; increase the reels,' i. e.
 increase his giddy course.

5 i. e. tap them, broach them. So in the last scene of Fletcher's Monsieur Thomas—'Home, Launce, and strike a fresh piece of wine, the town's ours.' See Cotgrave in v. Tapper.

6 The half line omitted in this place may be supplied with words resembling those in Milton's Comus—

'Come let us all take hands, and beat the ground,
 Till,' &c.

Pom. Let's ha't, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let us all take hands;⁶
 Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our sense
 In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands.—
 Make battery to our ears with the loud music;—
 The while, I'll place you: Then the boy shall sing
 The holding' every man shall bear, as loud
 As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. ENO-BARBUS places them hand in hand.

SONG.

*Come, thou monarch of the vine,
 Plumply Bacchus, with pink cyne:⁸
 In thy vats our cares be drown'd;
 With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd,
 Cup us, till the world go round;
 Cup us, till the world go round!*

Cæs. What would you more?—Pompey, good night. Good brother,

Let me request you off: our graver business
 Frowns at this levity.—Gentle lords, let's part;
 You see, we have burnt our cheeks: strong Eno-barbo

Is weaker than the wine; and mine own tongue
 Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost Antick'd us all. What needs more words? Good night.—

Good Antony, your hand.

Pom. I'll try you o' the shore.

Ant. And shall, sir: give's your hand.

Pom. O, Antony,
 You have my father's house,⁹—But what? we are
 friends:

Come, down into the boat.

Eno. Take heed you fall not.

[Exit POMPEY, CÆSAR, ANTONY, and Attendants.]

Menas, I'll not on shore.

Men. No, to my cabin.—
 These drums!—these trumpets, flutes! what!—
 Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell
 To these great fellows: Sound, and be hang'd, sound out.

[A Flourish of Trumpets, with Drums.]

Eno. Ho, says 'a!—There's my cap.

Men. Ho!—noble captain!

Come. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Plain in Syria. Enter VENTIDIUS, as after Conquest, with SILIUS, and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers; the dead Body of PACORUS borne before him.

Ven. Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck;¹⁰ and now

Pleas'd fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death
 Make me revenger.—Bear the king's son's body
 Before our army:—Thy Pacorus, Orodes,¹¹
 Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Sil. Noble Ventidius,
 Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,

7 The holding is the burden or under-song. Thus in The Serving Man's Comfort, 1598, 4to. Where a song is to be sung, the under-song or holding whereof
 is—

'It is merrie in haul,
 When beards wag all.'

8 Pink cyne are small eyes. 'Some have mighty yies and some be pinkyied.' Quidam pergrandis sunt lumbinus, quidam pidi. Harmom's Vulgaria, 1519.
 The flower called a pink is in French coillet, or little eye. To pink and wink is to contract the eyes and peep out of the lids. Hence pinky for tipsy, from the peculiar expression of the eyes of persons in liquor. The epithet is therefore well appropriated to the god of wine.

9 See note 4 on the previous scene.

10 Struck alludes to darting. Thou, whose darts have often struck others, art struck now thyself.

11 Pacorus was the son of Orodes, king of Parthia.

The fugitive Parthians follow; spur through Media, Mesopotamia, and the shelters whither The routed fly: so thy grand captain Antony Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O, Silius, Silius, I have done enough: A lower place, note well, May make too great an act: For learn this, Silius; Better to leave undone, than by our deed Acquire too high a fame, when him we serve's away. Cæsar, and Antony, have ever won More in their officer, than person: Sossius, One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant, For quick accumulation of renown, Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favour. Who does i' the wars more than his captain can, Becomes his captain's captain: and ambition, The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss, Than gain, which darkens him. I could do more to do Antonius good, But 'twould offend him; and in his offense Should my performance perish.

Sil. Thou hast, Ventidius, that Without the which a soldier, and his sword, Grants scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to Antony?

Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name, That magical word of war, we have effected; How, with his banners, and his well-paid ranks, The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia We have jaded out o' the field.

Sil. Where is he now?
Ven. He purposeeth to Athens: whither with what haste

The weight we must convey with us will permit, We shall appear before him.—On, there; pass along. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Rome. An Antechamber in Cæsar's House. Enter AGRIPPA and ENOBARBUS, meeting.

Agr. What are the brothers parted?

Eno. They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone;

The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps To part from Rome: Cæsar is sad; and Lepidus, Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled With the green-sickness.

Agr. 'Tis a noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: O, how he loves Cæsar!

Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark Antony!

Eno. Cæsar? Why, he's the Jupiter of men.

Agr. What's Antony? the god of Jupiter.

Eno. Spake you of Cæsar? How? the nonpareil?

Agr. O, Antony! O, thou Arabian bird!

Eno. Would you praise Cæsar, say,—Cæsar;—go no further.

Agr. Indeed, he ply'd them both with excellent praises.

1 Grants for affords. 'Thou hast that, Ventidius, which if thou didst want, there would be no distinction between thee and thy sword. You would be both equally cutting and senseless.' This was wisdom, or knowledge of the world. Ventidius had told him why he did not pursue his advantages; and his friend, by this compliment, acknowledges them to be of weight.—Warburton. There is somewhat the same idea in Coriolanus:—'Who sensible outdares his senseless sword.'

2 The Phoenix. So again in Cymbeline—

'She is alone the Arabian bird, and I Have lost my waver.'

3 This puerile arrangement of words was much affected in the age of Shakespeare, even by the first writers. Thus in Daniel's 11th Sonnet:—'Yet will I weep, vow, pray to cruel thee; Flint, frost, disdain, wear, melts, and yields we see.' And Sir Philip Sidney's Excellent Sonnet of a Nymph, printed in England's Helicon, is a tissue of this kind.

4 i. e. they are the wings that raise this heavy humpt insect from the ground. So in Macbeth, 'The shard-borne beetle.'

5 In The Tempest, Prospero, in giving Miranda to Ferdinand, says:—

'I have given you here a third of my own life.'

Eno. But he loves Cæsar best;—Yet he loves Antony: [cannot] Ho! hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho, his love To Antony.² But as for Cæsar, Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Agr. Both he loves.

Eno. They are his shards,⁴ and he their beetle.

So,—

[Trumpets.]

This is to horse.—Adieu, noble Agrippa.

Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.

Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, and OCTAVIA.

Ant. No further, sir.

Cæs. You take from me a great part of myself;⁵ Use me well in it.—Sister, prove such a wife

As my thoughts make thee, and as my furthest band⁶

Shall pass on thy approval.—Most noble Antony, Let not the piece of virtue, which is set Betwixt us, as the cement of our love, To keep it builded,⁷ be the ram, to batter The fortress of it: for better might we Have lov'd without this mean, if on both parts This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended

In your distrust.

Cæs. I have said.

Ant. You shall not find,

Though you be therein curious,⁸ the least cause For what you seem to fear: So, the gods keep you, And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends! We will here part.

Cæs. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well. The elements⁹ be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort! fare thee well.

Octa. My noble brother!—

Ant. The April's in her eyes: it is love's spring, And these the showers to bring it on.—Be cheerful.

Octa. Sir, look well to my husband's house; and—

Cæs. What,

Octavia?

Octa. I'll tell you in your ear.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can Her heart inform her tongue: the swan's down feather,

That stands upon the swell at full of tide, And neither way inclines.

Eno. Will Cæsar weep? [Aside to AGRIPPA.]

Agr. He has a cloud in's face.¹⁰

Eno. He were the worse for that, were he a horse; So is he, being a man.

Agr. Why, Enobarbus?

When Antony found Julius Cæsar dead, He cried almost to roaring; and he wept

When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum;

What willingly he did confound,¹¹ he wail'd:

Believe it, till I weep¹² too.

6 Band and bond were synonymous in Shakespeare's time.

7 'And ruin'd love, when it is built anew, Grows fairer than at first.'

8 Shakespeare's 119th Sonnet.

9 i. e. scrupulous, particular. So in The Taming of the Shrew:—'For curious I cannot be with you.'

10 It is singular that this passage could by any means have been misunderstood. Octavia was going to sail with Antony from Rome to Athens, and her brother wishes that the elements may be kind to her; in other words, that she may have a prosperous voyage.

11 A horse is said to have a cloud in his face, when he has a dark-coloured spot in his forehead between his eyes. This gives him a sour look, and being supposed to indicate an ill temper, is of course looked upon as a great blemish. Burton has applied the phrase to the look of a female:—'Every lover admires his mistress, though she be very deformed of herself—thin, lean, chinty-face, have clouds in her face, be crooked, &c.'—Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 534, ed. 1632.

12 To confound is to consume, to destroy. See Minshew's Dictionary, 1617, in voce.

13 Theobald reads, 'till I wept too' Mr. Steevens an-

A insect from the ground. So in Macbeth, "The worm is borne beetle."

6 In The Tempest, Prospero, in giving Miranda to Ferdinand, says:—

"I have given you here a third of my own life."

Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 524, ed. 1632.

11 To confound is to consume, to destroy. See Min-shew's Dictionary, 1617, in voce.

12 Theobald reads, "till I wept too." Mr. Steevens en-

Cæs. No, sweet Octavia,
You shall hear from me still; the time shall not Outgo my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, sir, come;
I'll wrestle with you, in my strength of love:
Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,
And give you to the gods.

Cæs. Adieu! be happy!
Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light
To thy fair way!

Cæs. Farewell, farewell! [Kisses OCTAVIA.]

Ant. Farewell!

[Trumpets sound. Exit.]

SCENE III. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?

Alex. Half afeard to come?

Cleo. Go to, go to:—Come hither, sir.

Enter a Messenger.

Alex. Good majesty,
Herod of Jerrry dare not look upon you,
But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have: But how? when Antony is gone Through whom I might command it.—Come thou near.

Mess. Most gracious majesty,—

Cleo. Didst thou behold
Octavia?

Mess. Ay, dread queen.

Cleo. Where?

Mess. Madam, in Rome
I look'd her in the face; and saw her led Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?

Mess. She is not, madam.

Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrill-tongu'd or low?

Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is lowvoic'd.

Cleo. That's not so good; he cannot like her long.

Char. Like her? O, Isis! 'tis impossible.

Cleo. I think so, Charmian: Dull of tongue, and dwarfish!

What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
If e'er thou look'dst on majesty.

Mess. She creeps;
Her motion and her station! are as one:
She shows a body rather than a life;
A statue, than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain?

Mess. Or I have no observance.

Char. Three in Egypt
Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing,
I do perceive't:—There's nothing in her yet:—
The fellow has good judgment.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guess at her years, I pr'ythee.

deavours to give a meaning to the passage as it now stands:—'Believe (says Enobarbus) that he wept over such an event, till you see me weeping on the same occasion, when I shall be obliged to you for putting such a construction on my tears, which in reality (like his,) will be tears of joy.' I must confess I prefer the emendation of Theobald to the explanation of Stevens.

1 Station here means the act of standing. So in Hamlet:—

'A station like the herald Mercury.'

2 Cleopatra rejoices in this circumstance, as it sets Octavia on a level with herself, who was no virgin when she fell to the lot of Antony.

3 This is from the old writers on physiognomy. Thus in Hill's Pleasant History, &c. 1618:—'The head very round, to be forgetful and foolish.' Again:—'The head long, to be prudent and wary.' 'A low forehead,' &c.
p. 218.

4 To harry is to harass, to worry, to use roughly, to vex, or molest, from the old Norman-French harier of the same meaning. The word occurs frequently in our old writers. Thus in The Revengers Tragedy, 1607:—
'He harry'd her amidst a nest of pandars.'

Mess. Madam,

She was a widow.

Cleo. Widow?—Charmian, hark!

Mess. And I do think, she's thirty.

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is't long or round?

Mess. Round even to faultiness.

Cleo. For the most part too, they are foolish that are so.

Her hair, what colour?

Mess. Brown, madam: And her forehead

As low as she would wish it.

Cleo. There is gold for thee.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill:—

I will employ thee back again: I find thee

Most fit for business: Go, make thee ready;

Our letters are prepar'd. [Exit Messenger]

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much,

That I so harry'd him. Why, methinks, by him,
This creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing, madam.

Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know.

Char. Hath he seen majesty? Isis else defend,
And serving you so long!

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, good

Charmian:—

But 'tis no matter; thou shalt bring him to me

Where I will write: All may be well enough.

Char. I warrant you, madam. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. Athens. A Room in Antony's House. Enter ANTONY and OCTAVIA.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—

That were excusable, that, and thousands more

Of semblable import,—but he hath wag'd

New wars 'gainst Pompey: made his will, and read it

To public ear:

Spoke scantily of me; when perforce he could not

But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly

He vented them; most narrow measure lent me:

When the best hint was given him, he not took't,

Or did it from his teeth.

Oct.

O, my good lord,

Believe not all: or, if you must believe,

Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,

If this division chance, ne'er stood between,

Praying for both parts: the good gods will mock me presently.

When I shall pray, O, bless my lord and husband!

Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,

O, bless my brother! Husband win, win brother,

Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway

'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant.

Gentle Octavia,

Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks

Best to preserve it: If I lose mine honour,

I lose myself: better I were not yours,

Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested,

Yourselves shall go between us: The mean time, lady,

I'll raise the preparation of a war

Shall stain' your brother; Make your soonest haste;

So your desires are yours.

So Nash, in his Lenten Stuff:—'As if he were hurry-ing and chasing his enemies.'

§ i. e. to appear only, not seriously. Thus Dryden in his Wild Gallant:—'I am confident she is only angry from the teeth outward.' So Chapman, in his version of the fifteenth Iliad:—

'She laugh, but merely from her lips:—

And Fuller, in his Holle Wars, b. iv. c. 17:—'This bad breath, though it came but from the teeth of some, yet proceeded from the corrupt lungs of others.'

6 The situation and sentiments of Octavia resemble those of Lady Blanche in King John, Act III. Sc. 1.

7 Mr. Boswell suggests that, perhaps, we should read,
'Shall stay your brother.' To stain is not here used for to shame or disgrace, as Johnson supposed; but for to eclipse, extinguish, throw into the shade, to put out; from the old French estindre. In this sense it is used in all the examples cited by Stevens:

'—here at hand approacheth one
Whose face will stain you all.'

Twit's Miscellany, 1506.

Oct. Thanks to my lord.

The Jove of power make me most weak, most weak,
Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men
Should solder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,
Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal, that your love
Can equally move with them. Provide your going;
Choose your own company, and command what cost
Your heart has mind to. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter ENOBARBUS and EROS, meeting.

Eno. How now, friend Eros?

Eros. There's strange news come, sir.

Eno. What, man?

Eros. Caesar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.

Eno. This is old; What is the success?

Eros. Caesar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry¹ would not let him partake in the glory of the action: and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal,² seizes him: So the poor third is up, till death enlarge his confine.

Eno. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no more;³

And throw between them all the food thou hast,
They'll grind the one the other. Where's Antony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spurs

The rush that lies before him; cries, Fool, Lepidus!
And threats the throat of that his officer,
That murder'd Pompey.

Eno. Our great navy's rigg'd.

Eros. For Italy, and Caesar. More, Domitius;
My lord desires you presently: my news
I might have told hereafter.

Eno. 'Twill be naught;

But let it be.—Bring me to Antony.

Eros. Come, sir. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Rome. A Room in Caesar's House.

Enter CESAR, AGRIPPA, and MECENAS.

Ces. Contemning Rome, he has done all this:
And more;

In Alexandria,—here's the manner of it,—
I'll the market-place, on a tribunal silv'd,⁴
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd: at the feet, sat
Cæsarion, whom they call my father's son;
And all the unlawful issue, that their lust
Since then hath made between them. Unto her
He gave the 'stablishment of Egypt; made her
Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia,
Absolute queen.

Mec. This in the public eye?

Ces. I'll the common show-place, where they exercise.

His sons he there proclaim'd, The kings of kings:
Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia,
He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd
Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia; She
In the habiliments of the goddess Isis
That day appear'd; and oft before gave audience
As 'tis reported, so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus

Inform'd.

¹ So Shore's wife's face made fowle Brownetta blush.

² As pearle staynes plich, or gold surmounts a rush.

³ Shore's Wife, by Churchyard, 1598.

⁴ Whose beauties staynes the faire Helen of Greece.

⁵ Churchyard's Charitie, 1595.

⁶ — the praise and yet the stain of all womankind.

⁷ Sidney's Arcadia.

⁸ I. e. equal rank. In Hamlet, Horatio and Marcellus are styled by Bernardo 'the ringle' of his watch.

⁹ Appeal here means accusation. Cæsar seized

Lepidus without any other proof than Cæsar's accusation.

¹⁰ No more does not signify no longer; but has the same meaning as if Shakespeare had written and no

Aggr. Who, queasy with his insolence

Already, will their good thoughts call from him.

Ces. The people know it: and have now recover'd
His accusations.

Aggr. Whom does he accuse?

Ces. Cæsar; and that, having in Sicily
Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him
His part of the isle: then does he say, he lent me
Some shipping unrestor'd; lastly, he saies,
That Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Aggr. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Ces. 'Tis done already, and the messenger gone.
I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel;
That he his high authority abus'd,
And did deserve his change; for what I have con-
quer'd,

I grant him part; but then, in his Armenia,

And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.

Ces. Nor must not then be yielded to in that.

Enter OCTAVIA.

Oct. Hail, Cæsar, and my lord! hail, most dear

Cæsar!

Ces. That ever I should call thee, cast-away!

Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.

Ces. Why have you stol'n upon us thus? You come not

Like Cæsar's sister: The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The noise of horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way,
Should have borne men; and expectation faint'd,
Longing for what it had not: nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,
Rais'd by your populous troops: But you are come
A market-maid to Rome: and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which, left unshown,
Is often left unlov'd: we should have met you
By sea and land: supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord,

To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free will. My lord, Mark Antony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted
My griev'd ear withal; whereon, I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Ces. Which soon he granted,

Being an obstruct¹ 'twixt his lust and him.

Oct. Do not say so, my lord.

Ces. I have eyes upon him,

And his affairs come to me on the wind.

Where is he now?

Oct. My lord, in Athens.

Ces. No, my most wronged sister; Cleopatra Hath nodded him to her. He hath given his empire
Up to a whore; who now are levying²
The kings o' the earth for war: He hath assembled
Bocchus, the king of Libya; Archelaus,
Of Cappadocia; Philadelphus, king
Of Paphlagonia; the Thracian king, Adallas.
King Malchus of Arabia; king of Pont;
Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, king
Of Comagene; Polemon and Amintas, more: 'Thou hast now a pair of chaps, and only a pair. Cæsar and Antony will make war on each other, though they have the world to prey on between them.'

The old copy reads would instead of world, and omits one the in the third line of this speech.

³ This is closely copied from the old translation of Plutarch.

⁴ The old copy reads, abstract. The alteration was made by Warburton.

⁵ That is, which two persons are now levying, &c.
Upon observes, that there are some errors in the enumeration of the auxiliary kings: but it is probable that the poet did not care to be scrupulously accurate. He proposed to read:—

'Polemon and Amintas,

Of Lyconia, and the king of Media,
which obviates all impropriety.

The kings of Mede, and Lycaonia, with a
More larger list of accepters.

Oct. Ah me, most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two friends,
That do afflict each other!

Can. Welcome hither;
Your letters did withhold our breaking forth;
Till we perceiv'd, both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart:
Be you not troubled with the time, which drives
O'er your content these strong necessities;
But let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome:
Nothing more dear to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the mark of thought: and the high gods,
To do you justice, make them ministers
Of us, and those that love you. Best of comfort;
And ever welcome to us.

Agg. Welcome, lady.
McC. Welcome, dear madam.

Each heart in Rome does love and pity you:
Only the adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noises¹ it against us.

Oct. Is it so, sir?
Can. Most certain. Sister, welcome. Pray you,
Be ever known to patience: My dearest sister!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Antony's Camp, near the Promontory of Actium. Enter CLEOPATRA and ENO-BARBUS.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.
Eno. But why, why, why?
Cleo. Thou hast fustepok² my being in these wars;

And say'st, it is not fit.
Eno. Well, is it, is it?
Cleo. Is't not³ denounc'd against us? Why should not we

Be there in person?
Eno. [Aside.] Well, I could reply;
If we should serve with horses and mares together,
The horse were merely⁴ lost; the mares would bear

A soldier, and his horse.
Cleo. What is't you say?
Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony;
Take from his heart, take from his brain, from his
time,

What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for levity; and 'tis said in Rome,
That Phiotius a cunuch, and your maids,
Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome; and their tongues rot,
That speak against us! A charge we bear⁵ the war,
And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Eno. Nay, I have done:
Here comes the emperor.

¹ This elliptical phrase is merely an expression of endearment addressed to Octavia.—Thou best of comfort to thy loving brother.

² And gives his potent regiment to a trull.
Regiment is government, authority; he puts his power and his empire into the hands of a harlot. Regiment is used for regimen or government by most of our ancient writers. Thus Spenser, Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.—
'So when he had resigned his regiment.'

And in Lyly's Woman in the Moon, 1697:—
'Or Hecate in Pluto's regiment.'

³ Milton has used this uncommon verb in Paradise Regained, b. iv.:

'—though wisning loud,
And threatening high.'

⁴ To forespeak here is to speak against, to gainsay, to contradict; as to forbid is to order negatively. The word had, however, the meaning, anciently, of to charm or bewitch, like forbid in Macbeth.

⁵ The old copy reads, 'if not denounc'd,' &c. Stee-vens reads, 'Is't not? Denounce against us, why,' &c.
The emendation I have adopted is more simple, and gives an equally clear meaning. Cleopatra means to Enter ANTONY and CANIDIUS.

Ant. Is't not strange, Canidius,
That from Tarentum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in⁶ Tormyn?—You have heard on't, sweet?
Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd,
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becom'd the best of men,
To taunt at slackness.—Canidius, we
Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! What else?
Can. Why will my lord do so?
Ant. For that⁷ he dares us to't.
Eno. So hath my lord dar'd him to single fight.
Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia, Where Cæsar fought with Pompey: But these offers,

Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off
And scoulds you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann'd:
Your mariners are muleteers, reapers, people
Ingross'd by swift impress; in Cæsar's fleet
Are those, that often have gain'd Pompey fought.
Their ships are yare;⁸ yours, heavy. No disgrace Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.
Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego
The way which promises assurance; and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.
Cleo. I have sixty sails, Cæsar none better.
Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
And, with the rest full mann'd, from the head of Actium
Beat the approaching Cæsar. But if we fail,

Enter a Messenger.
We then can do't at land.—Thy business?
Mess. The news is true, my lord; he is descried;
Cæsar has taken Tormyn.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'tis impossible;
Strange, that his power should be.⁹—Canidius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse: We'll to our ship;

Enter a Soldier.
Away, my Thetis!¹⁰—How now, worthy soldier?
Sold. O, noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you misdoubt
This sword, and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians,

And the Phenicians, go a ducking: we
Have used to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away.
[Exeunt ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, and ENOBARBUS.] say, 'Is not the war denounced against us? Why should not we then attend in person?' Malone explains the reading of the old copy thus:—'If there be no particular denunciation against us, why should we not be there in person?'

⁶ i. e. entirely, absolutely.

⁷ Take, subdue. This phrase occurs frequently in Shakespeare, and has been already explained.

⁸ i. e. cause that, or that is the cause.

⁹ Yare is quick, nimble, ready. So in The Tempest, Act v. Sc. 1:—'Our ship is tight and yare.' The word seems to have been much in use with sailors formerly.
'The lesser [ship] will come and go, leave and take,
and is yare; whereas the greater is slow.'—Raleigh.
Cæsar's ships were not built for pomp, high and great,
&c.; but they were light of yareage.—North's Plutarch.

¹⁰ Strange that his forces should be there.

¹¹ Antony may address Cleopatra by the name of this sea-nymph, because she had just promised him assistance in his naval expedition; or perhaps in allusion to her voyage down the Cydnus, when she appeared, like Thetis, surrounded by the Nereids.

Sold. By Hercules, I think, I am i' the right.

Can. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action grows
Not in the power on't:¹ So our leader's led,
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?

Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justeius,
Publicola, and Cælius, are for sea:
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Cæsar's Carries² beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions,³ as Beguill'd all spies.

Can. Who's his lieutenant, hear you?

Sold. They say, one Taurus.

Can. Well I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The emperor calls Canidius.

Can. With news the time's with labour: and throes⁴ forth,

Each minute, some. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. A Plain near Actium. Enter

CÆSAR, TAURUS, Officers, and others.

Can. Taurus,—

Taur. My lord.

Can. Strike not by land; keep whole:
Provoke not battle, till we have done at sea.
Do not exceed the prescript of this scroll:
Our fortune lies upon this jump.⁵ [Exeunt.]

Enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on 'yon' side o' the hill,
In eve of Cæsar's battle; from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. [Exeunt.]

*Enter CANIDIUS, marching with his Land Army one way over the Stage; and TAURUS, the Lieutenant of Cæsar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a Sea-fight. Alarum.—
Re-enter ENOBARBUS.*

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold
no longer:

The Antoniad,⁶ the Egyptian admiral,
With all their sixty, fly, and turn the rudder;
To see't, mine eyes are blasted.

Enter SCARUS.

Scar. Gods and goddesses,
All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion?
Scar. The greater cantle⁷ of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kiss'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?
Scar. On our side like the token'd⁸ pestilence,
Where death is sure. Yon ribaudred hag⁹ of Egypt,
Whom leprosy o'ertake! i' the midst o' the fight,—
When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd,
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,—
The brize¹⁰ upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies.

1 'His whole conduct in the war is not founded upon that which is his greatest strength, (namely his land force), but on the caprice of a woman, who wishes that he should fight by sea.

2 i. e. passes all belief. I should not have noticed this, but for Steevens's odd notion of its being a phrase from archery.

3 Detachments, separate bodies.

4 i. e. smits as in parturition: So in The Tempest:—
'— proclaim a birth,
Which throes these much to yield.'

5 i. e. this hazard. Thus in Macbeth:—
'We'd jump the life to come.'

6 The Antoniad, Plutarch says, was the name of Cleopatra's ship.

7 A cantle is a portion, a scantling, a fragment: it also signified a corner, and a quarter-piece of any thing. It is from the old French, chantel, or eschantille.

8 The death of those visited by the plague was certain, when particular eruptions appeared on the skin; and these were called God's tokens.

Eno. That I beheld:

Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Endure a further view.

Scar. She once being loof'd,¹¹
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Claps on his sea-wing, and like a doting mallow,
Leaving the fight in height, flies after her:
I never saw an action of such shame;
Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before
Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!

Enter CANIDIUS.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well:
O, he has given example for our fight,
Most grossly, by his own.

Eno. Ay, are you thereabouts? Why then, good night

Indeed. [Aside.]

Can. Towards Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. 'Tis easy to't; and there I will attend
What further comes.

Can. To Cæsar will I render
My legions, and my horse; y king's already Show me the way of yielding.

Eno. I'll yet follow
The wounded chance!¹² of Antony, though my reason Sits in the wind against me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY, and Attendants.

Ant. Hark, the land bids me tread no more upon't,
It is asham'd to bear me!—Friends, come hither.
I am so late!¹³ in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever:—I have a ship
Laden with gold; take that, divide it; fly,
And make your peace with Cæsar.

Ant. Fly! not we.
Ant. I have fled myself; and have instructed cowards

To run, and show their shoulders.—Friends, be gone;

I have myself resolv'd upon a course,
Which has no need of you; be gone:
My treasure's in the harbour, take it.—O,
I follow'd that I blush to look upon:
My very hairs do mutiny: for the white
Reprove the brown for rashness, and they them
For fear and doting.—Friends, be gone; you shall Have letters from me to some friends, that will Sweep your way for you.¹⁴ Pray you, look not sad,
Nor make replies of loathsomeness: take the hint
Which my despair proclaims; let that be left
Which leaves itself: to the seaside straitway:
I will possess you of that ship and treasure.
Leave me, I pray, a little; 'pray you now:
Nay, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command.¹⁵
Therefore I pray you;—I'll see you by-and-by.

[Sits down.]

9 The old copy reads, 'ribaudred nag,' which was altered by Steevens and Malone into 'ribald-rid nag,' but quite unnecessarily. Ribaudred is obsolete, indecent in words or acts. Thus Baret:—'A ribaudrous and filthie tongue; as obscenium et impudicum. Ribaudrie, villanie in actes or wordes, filthines, uncleanness.' And in Horman's Vulgaris:—'Refrayne (so euche foule and rebaudry wordes.' Mr. Tyrwhitt saw that the context required we should read hag instead of nag, which was an easy typographical error.

10 The brize is the castrum, or gadfly, so troublesome to cattle in the summer months.

11 To loof is to bring a ship close to the wind. This expression is in the old translation of Plutarch. It also frequently occurs in Hackluyt's Voyages.

12 'Wounded chance.' This phrase is nearly of the same import as 'broken fortunes.'

13 Belated, benighted. So in Macbeth:—

'Now spurs the lated traveller apace'

14 Thus also in Hamlet:—

'— they must sweep my way,

And marshal me to knavery.'

15 'I entreat you to leave me, because I have lost all power to command your absence.'

Enter EROS, and CLEOPATRA, led by CHARMIAN and IRAS.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him;—Comfort him.

Iras. Do, most dear queen.

Char. Do! why, what else!

Cleo. Let me sit down. O, Juno.

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, sir?

Ant. O, be, fie, fie.

Char. Madam,—

Iras. Madam; O, good empress!—

Eros. Sir, sir,—

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes;—He, at Philippi, kept His sword's en like a dancer:¹ while I struck The lean and wrinkled Cassius: and 'twas I, That the mad Brutus² ended: he alone Dealt on lieutenantry,³ and no practice had In the brave squares of war; Yet now—No matter.

Cleo. Ah, stand by.

Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.

Iras. Go to him, madam, speak to him; He is unqualified⁴ with very shame.

Cleo. Well then,—Sustain me:—Oh!

Eros. Most noble sir, arise; the queen approaches; Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her; but Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation;

A most unnobble swearing.

Eros. Sir, the queen.

Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt? See, How I convey my shame out of thine eyes,⁵ By looking back on what I have left behind 'Stroy'd in dishonour.

Cleo. O, my lord, my lord! Forgive my fearful sails! I little thought, You would have follow'd.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well, My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings, And thou should'st tow me after: O'er my spirit Thy full supremacy thou knew'st; and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods Command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon.

Ant. Now I must To the young man send humble treaties, dodge And palter in the shifts of lowliness; who With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleas'd, Making and marring fortunes. You did know, How much you were my conqueror; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. O, pardon, pardon.

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say; one of them rates⁶ All that is won and lost: Give me a kiss; Even this repays me.—We sent our schoolmaster, Is he come back?—Love, I am full of lead:—Some wine, within there, and our viands:—Fortune knows,

We scorn her meat, when most she offers blows.

[Exeunt.]

1 The meaning appears to be, that Caesar never offered to draw his sword, but kept it in the scabbard, like one who dances with a sword on, which was formerly the custom in England. It is alluded to in All's Well that Ends Well: Bertram, lamenting that he is kept from the wars, says:—

'I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock, Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry, Till honour be bought up, and no sword worn, But one to dance with.'

And in Titus Andronicus:—

'—our mother unadvised Gave you a dancing rapier by your side.'

2 'Nothing can be more in character than for an infamous debauched tyrant to call the heroic love of one's country and public liberty, madness.'—Wurburton.

3 'Dealt on lieutenantry' probably means only 'fought by proxy,' made war by his lieutenants, or on the strength of his lieutenants. In a former scene Ventidius says:—

'Caesar and Antony have ever won More in their officer, than person.'

To 'deal on any thing' is an expression often used by old writers. In Plutarch's Life of Antony, Shakespeare SCENE X. Caesar's Camp, in Egypt. Enter Caesar, DOLABELLA, THYREUS, and others.

Caes. Let him appear that's come from Antony, Know you him?

Dol. Caesar, 'tis his schoolmaster:¹

An argument that he is pluck'd, when either He sends so poor a pinion of his wing, Which had superfluous kings for messengers, Not many moons gone by.

Enter EUPHRONIUS.

Caes. Approach and speak.

Eup. Such as I am, I come from Antony:

I was of late as petty to his ends, As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf To his grand sea.²

Caes. Be it so: Declare thine office.

Eup. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and Requires to live in Egypt: which not granted, He lessens his requests; and to thee sues To let him breathe between the heavens and earth, A private man in Athens: This for him. Next Cleopatra does confess thy greatness; Submits her to thy might; and of thee craves The circle³ of the Ptolemies for her heirs, Now hazarded to thy grace.

Caes. For Antony, I have no ears to his request. The queen Of audience, nor desire, shall fail: so she From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend,⁴ Or take his life there: This if she perform, She shall not sue unheard. So to them both Eup. Fortune pursue thee!

Caes. Bring him through the bands.

[Exit EUPHRONIUS.]

To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time: Despatch: From Antony win Cleopatra: promise,

[To THYREUS.]

And in our name, what she requires; add more, From thine invention, offers: women are not, In their best fortunes, strong; but want will perjure The ne'er-touch'd vestal:⁵ Try thy cunning,

Thyrea;

Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Caesar, I go,

Caes. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw;⁶ and what thou think'st his very action speaks In every power that moves.

Thyr. Caesar, I shall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XI. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace. Enter CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Think, and die.¹⁴ found the following words:—'They were always more fortunate when they made warre by their lieutenants than by themselves.'

4 Unqualified seems to mean here unsoldiered, quality being used for profession by Shakespeare and his contemporaries. Steevens says, 'Perhaps unqualified only signifies unmanned in general, disarmed of his usual faculties.'

5 But is here used in its exceptive sense.

6 'How, by looking another way, I withdraw my ignominy from your sight.'

7 Values.

8 Euphronius, schoolmaster to Antony's children by Cleopatra.

9 'His grand sea' appears to mean the sea from which the dew-drop is exhaled. The poet may have considered the sea as the source of dews as well as rain.

His we find frequently used for its.

10 The diadem, the crown.

11 Friend here means paramour.

12 'O, opportunity! thy guilt is great.

Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath.'

Rape of Lucrece.

13 'Note how Antony conforms himself to this breach in his fortune.'

14 To think, or take thought, was anciently synonymous with grieve. Thus in Julius Caesar, Act II. Sc. 1:—

'—all that he can do Is to himself; take thought, and die for Caesar.'

Cleo. Is Antony, or we, in fault for this?

Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you fled
From that great face of war, whose several ranges
Frighted each other? why should he follow?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd¹ his captainship; at such a point,
When half to half the world oppos'd, he being
The mered question:² 'Twas a shame no less Than was his loss, to course your flying flags,
And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Pr'ythee, peace.

Enter ANTONY, with EUPHRODISIA.

Ant. Is this his answer?

Eup. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen shall then have courtesy, so she Will yield us up.

Eup. He says so.

Ant. Let her know it.—

To the boy Caesar send this grizzled head,
And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again; Tell him, he wears the rose
Of youth upon him; from which the world should note

Something particular: his coin, ships, legions
May be a coward's; whose ministers would prevail
Under the service of a child, as soon
As i' the command of Caesar: I dare him therefore
To lay his gay comparisons apart,
And answer me declin'd,³ sword against sword,
Ourselves alone; I'll write it; follow me.

[Exit ANTONY and EUPHRODISIA.]

Eno. Yes, like enough, high-battled Caesar will Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to the show,⁴ Against a sword.—I see, men's judgments are
A parcel⁵ of their fortunes; and things outward
Do draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. That he should dream,
Knowing all measures, the full Caesar will Answer his emptiness!—Caesar, thou hast subdu'd
His judgment too.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. A messenger from Caesar.

Cleo. What, no more ceremony?—See, my women!

Against the blown rose may they stop their nose,
That kneel'd unto the buds.—Admit him, sir.

Eno. Mine honesty, and I begin to square.⁶ [Aside.]
The loyalty, well held to fools, does make
Our faith mere folly:—Yet he, that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fallen lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer,
And earns a place i' the story.

So Viola 'plined in thought.' And in The Beggar's Bush, of Beaumont and Fletcher:—

'Can I not think away myself, and die?'

I. e. set the mark of folly upon it. So in the Comedy of Errors:—

— and the while

His man with scissars nicks him like a fool.⁷

I. e. he being the object to which this great contention is limited, or by which it is bounded. So in Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 1:—

— the king

That was and is the question of these wars.⁸

3 His gay comparisons may mean those circumstances of splendour and power in which he, when compared with me, so much excels me. 'I require of Caesar not to depend on that superiority which the comparison of our different fortunes may exhibit, but to answer me man to man in this decline of my age and power.'

4 I. e. be exhibited, like contending gladiators, to the public gaze.

5 I. e. are of a piece with them.

6 To square is to quarrel. Enobarbus is deliberating upon desertion, and finding it is more prudent to forsake a fool, and more reputable to be faithful to him, makes no positive conclusion.

7 Thus the second folio. The first folio has, '— than he is Caesar's,' which brings obscurity with it. We Enter THYRUS.

Cleo. Caesar's will?

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends; say boldly.

Thyr. So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, as, as Caesar has; Or needs not us. If Caesar please, our master Will leap to be his friend: For us, you know, Whose he is, we are; and that's a Caesar's.

Thyr. So.— Thus, then, thou most renown'd; Caesar entreats, Not to consider in what case thou stand'st, Further than he is Caesar.⁹

Cleo. Go on: Right royal

Thyr. He knows that you embrace¹⁰ not Antony As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. O!

Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore, he Does pity, as constrained blamishes, Not as deserv'd.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows What is most right: Mine honour was not yielded, But conquer'd merely.

Eno. To be sure of that, [Aside.]

I will ask Antony.—Sir, sir, thou'rt so leaky, That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee.¹¹ [Exit ENOBARBUS.]

Thyr. Shall I say to Caesar What you require of him? for he partly begs To be desir'd to give. It much would please him That of his fortunes you should make a staff To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits, 'Po hear from me you had left Antony, And put yourself under his shroud, The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thyr. My name is Thyreus.

Cleo. Most kind messenger,

Say to great Caesar this in disputation,¹² I kiss his conquering hand: tell him, I am prompt To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel: Tell him, from his all-obeying¹³ breath I hear The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. 'Tis your noblest course. Wisdom and fortune combating together, If that the former dare but what it can, No chance may shake it. Give me grace¹⁴ to lay My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Caesar's father Oft, when he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in, Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place, As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders!— What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One, that but performs have a clear meaning in the present reading: 'Caesar entreats, that at the same time you consider your desperate fortunes, you would consider he is Caesar: that is, generous and forgiving, able and willing to restore them.' I think with Malone that the previous speech, which is given to Enobarbus, was intended for Cleopatra.

9 Shakespeare probably wrote embrace'd.

10 So in The Tempest:—

'A rotten carcass of a boat—

— the very rats

Inductively had got it.'

10 Warburton suggests that we should read, 'in disputation,' I. e. 'as my deputy, say to great Caesar this,' &c. Why the old punctuation of this line was altered in the modern editions, I am at a loss to imagine: the passage has been made obscure by printing it thus: 'Say to great Caesar this, in disputation I kiss his conquering hand.'

The following passage in King Henry IV. Part I. seems to support Warburton's emendation:—

'Of all the favorites that the absent king

In deputat'ion left behind him here.'

11 I. e. breath which all obey. Obeying for obeyed; in other places we have delighted for delighting, guile for guiling, &c.

12 Grant me the favour

The bidding of the fullest¹ man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Eno.

You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach, there:—Ay, you kite;—Now, gods and devils!

Authority melts from me: Of late, when I cried, Ho!
Like boys unto a muss,² kings would start forth,
And cry, Your will? Have you no ears? I am

Enter Attendants.

Antony yet. Take hence this Jack, and whip him.

Eno. 'Tis better playing with a lion's whelp,
Than with an old one dying.

Ant.

Moon and stars!

Whip him:—Were't twenty of the greatest tributaries

That do acknowledge Caesar, should I find them
So saucy with the hand of she here (What's her
name,

Since she was Cleopatra?)—Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy: Take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony,—

Ant.

Tug him away: being whipp'd,

Bring him again:—This Jack of Caesar's shall Bear us an errand to him.—

[Exeunt Attend. with THYRUS.]

You were half blasted ere I knew you!—Ha!

Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome,

Forborne the getting of a lawful race,

And by a gem of women, to be abus'd

By one that looks on feeders?⁴

Cleo.

Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a boggler ever:

But when we in our viciousness grow hard,

(O, misery on't!) the wise gods seal⁵ our eyes;

In our own filth drop our clear judgments; make us

Adore our errors; laugh at us, while we strut

To our confusion.

Cleo.

O, is it come to this?

Ant. I found you as a morsel, cold upon

Dead Caesar's trencher: nay, you were a fragment

Of Cælius Pompey's; besides what hotter hours,

Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have

Luxuriously⁶ pick'd out:—For, I am sure,

Though you can guess what temperance should be,

You know not what it is.

Cleo.

Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,

And say, God quit you! be familiar with

My playfellow, your hand; this kingly seal,

And plighting of high hearts!—O, that I were

Upon the bill of Basan,⁷ to outroar

The horned herd! for I have savage cause;

And to proclaim it civilly, were like

A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank

For being yare⁸ about him.—Is he whipp'd?

Re-enter Attendants, with THYRUS.

1 Ant. Soundly, my lord.

1 The most complete and perfect. And in Othello:

'What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe.'

2 A muss is a scramble.

3 '—nor are they thrown

To make a muss among the gamesome suitors.'

Johnson's Magnetic Lady.

Dryden uses the word in the Prologue to Widow Ranter:

'Bauble and cap no sooner are thrown down,

But there's a muss of more than half the town.'

3 That is, since she ceased to be Cleopatra.

4 I. e. on menials. Servants are called caterers and feeders by several of our old dramatic writers. Morose, in the Silent Woman of Ben Jonson, says:—'Where are all my caterers, my mouths now? Bar up my doors, you varlets.' And in The Wks, by Sir W. Davenant:

'—tail caterers, in blue coats, same number.'

These also in Fletcher's Nice Valour, Act III. Sc. 1:—

'Serpente he has, lusty tail feeders.'

'Have I (says Antony) abandoned Octavia, a gem of women, to be abus'd by a woman so base as to look on servants? We are indebted to Mr. Gifford for fully establishing this explanation, and showing that Stevens gave the true meaning of the passage, thereby overthrowing Johnson's misconception, and Malone's pernicious support of it. See the works of Ben Jonson,

vol. III. p. 222.

Ant. Cried he? and begg'd he pardon?

1 Ant. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent

Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou sorry

To follow Caesar in his triumph, since

Thou hast been whipp'd for following him: henceforth,

The white hand of a lady fever thee,

Shake thou to look on't.—Get thee back to Caesar,

Tell him thy entertainment: Look, thou say,

He makes me angry with him: for he seems

Proud and disdainful; harping on what I am;

Not what he knew I was: He makes me angry;

And at this time most easy 'tis to do't;

When my good stars, that were my former guides,

Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires

Into the abyss of hell. If he mislike

My speech, and what is done; tell him, he has

Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd bondman, whom

He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,

As he shall like, to quit⁹ me: Urge it thou:

Hence, with thy stripes, begone. [Exit THYRUS.]

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant.

Alack, our terrene moon

Is now eclips'd; and it portends alone

The fall of Antony!

Cleo.

I must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes!

With one that ties his points?¹⁰

Cleo.

Not know me yet?

Ant.

Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo.

Ah, dear, if I be so,

From my cold heart let heaven engender hail,

And poison it in the source; and the first stone

Drop in my neck: as it determines,¹¹ so

Dissolve my life! The next Caesar¹² smite!

Till, by degrees, the memory of my womb,

Together with my brave Egyptians all,

By the discarding of this pelleted storm,

Lie graveless; till the flies and gnats of Nile

Have buried them for prey!

Ant.

I am satisfied.

Caesar sits down in Alexandria; where

I will oppose his fate. Our force by land

Hath nobly held; our sever'd navy too

Have knit again, and fleet,¹³ threat'ning most sealike.

Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou hear, lad?

If from the field I shall return once more

To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;

I and my sword will earn our chronicle;

There is hope in it yet.

Cleo.

That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breath'd,

And fight maliciously: for when mine hours

Were nice¹⁴ and lucky, men did ransom lives

Of me for jests; but now, I'll set my teeth,

And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,

5 Close up.

6 Wantonly.

7 This is an allusion, however improper, to the Psalms

'An high hill as the hill of Basan.' The idea of the horned herd was also probably caught from the same source:—'Many oxen are come about me: fat bulls of Basan close me in on every side.' 'It is not without pride and indignation (says Johnson) that the reader of this great poet meets so often with this low jest, which is too much a favourite to be left out of either mirth or fury.'

8 I. e. ready, nimble, active.

9 To repay me this insult, to requite me.

10 I. e. with a mental ascendant. The reader will doubtless remember that points were the laces with which our ancestors fastened their trunk-hose.

11 That is, as the hailstone dissolves or wastes away

So in King Henry VI. Part II.:

'Till his friend's sickness hath determin'd me.'

12 Cleopatra's son by Julius Caesar.

13 To fleet and to float were anciently synonymous.

Thus Baret:—'To fleet above the water: flouter.' Ste-evens has adduced numerous examples from old writers

14 Nice is here equivalent to soft, tender, wanton, or luxurious.

'In softer and more fortunate hours.'

Let's have one other gaudy¹ night : call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowls ; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birthday :
I had thought, to have held it poor ; but, since my
lord

Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We'll yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.

Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them ; and to-night
I'll force

The wine peep through their scars.—Come on, my queen :

There's sap in't yet.—The next time I do fight,
I'll make death love me ; for I will contend
Even with his pestilent scythe.²

[Exeunt ANT. CLEO. and Attendants.]

Eno. Now he'll out-stare the lightning.³ To be furious,

Is, to be frightened out of fear : and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge ;⁴ and I see still,
A diminution in our captain's brain
Restores his heart : When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek
Some way to leave him. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Cæsar's Camp at Alexandria. Enter
CÆSAR, reading a Letter ; AGRIPPA, MICHENAS,
and others.

Cæs. He calls me boy ; and chides, as he had power

To beat me out of Egypt : my messenger
He hath whipp'd with rods ; dares me to personal combat,

Cæsar to Antony : Let the old ruffian know,
I have many other ways to die ;⁵ mean time,
Laugh at his challenge.

Mec. Cæsar must think,
When one so great begins to rage, he's hunted
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make boot⁶ of his distraction : Never anger
Made good guard for itself.

Cæs. Let our best heads
Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles
We mean to fight :—Within our files there are
Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it be done ;
And least the army we have store to do't,
And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony !

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS,
CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius.

Eno.

Ant. Why should he not ?

No.

¹ Feast days, in the colleges of either university, are called gaudy days, as they were formerly in the Inns of Court. 'From gaudium, (says Blount), because, to say truth, they are days of joy, as bringing good cheer to the hungry students.'

² This may have been caught from Harington's Ariosto, b. xii. :—

'Death goeth about the field, rejoicing mickle

To see a sword that so surpass'd his sickle.'

Death is armed with a weapon in Statius, Theb. i. 632 :—
'Mors ala cororom
Ense mott.'

³ Plutarch says of Antony, 'He used a manner of phrase in his speeches called Asiatic, which carried the best grace at that time, and was much like to him in his manners and life ; for it was full of ostentation, foolish braverie, and vaine ambition.'—North's Translation.

⁴ I. e. the estridge falcon.

⁵ Upon would read :—

'He hath many other ways to die : mean time

I laugh at his challenge.'

This is certainly the sense of Plutarch, and given so in modern translations ; but Shakspeare was misled by the ambiguity of the old one :—*Antoni*us sent again to challenge Cæsar to fight him : Cæsar answered, that he had many other ways to die than so.'

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better fortune,

He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,
By sea and land I'll fight : or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
Shall make it live again. Woot thou fight well ?

Eno. I'll strike ; and cry, *Take all.*⁷

Ant. Well said ; come on—

Call forth my household servants ; let's to-night

Enter Servants.

Be bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest ;—so hast thou ;—
And thou,—and thou,—and thou :—you have serv'd me well,

And kings have been your fellows.

Cleo. What means this ?

Eno. 'Tis one of those odd tricks, which sorrow shoots
[Aside.]
Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too.

I wish, I could be made so many men ;

And all of you clapp'd up together in

An Antony ; that I might do you service,

So good as you have done.

Serv. The gods forbid !

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night :
Scant not my cups ; and make as much of me,
As when mine empire was your follow too,
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. What does he mean ?

Eno. To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night ;

May be, it is the period of your duty :

Haply, you shall not see me more ; or if,

A mangled shadow :⁸ perchance, to-morrow

You'll serve another master. I look on you,

As one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends,

I turn you not away ; but, like a master

Married to your good service, stay till death :

Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,

And the gods yield⁹ you for't !

Eno. What mean you, sir

To give them this discomfort ? Look, they weep ;

And I, an ass, am onion-ey'd ;¹⁰ for shame,

Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho !¹¹

Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus !

Grace grow where those drops fall !¹² My hearty

friends,

You take me in too dolorous a sense :

I spake to you for your comfort : did desire you

To burn this night with torches : Know, my hearts,

I hope well of to-morrow ; and will lend you,

Where rather I'll expect victorious life,

'Than death and honour. Let's to supper ; come,

And drown consideration. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. Before the Palace. Enter

Two Soldiers, to their Guard.

I Sold. Brother, good night : to-morrow is the day.

⁶ I. e. take advantage of.

⁷ Let the survivor take all ; no composition ; victory or death. So in King Lear :—
'—unbonneted he runs,

And bids what will, take all.'

⁸ 'Or if you see me more, you will see me a mangled shadow, only the external form of what I was.' The thought is, as usual, taken from North's translation of Plutarch.

⁹ I. e. 'God reward you.'

¹⁰ He has a similar allusion in Act i. Sc. 2 :—'The tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow.'

¹¹ Steevens thinks that this exclamation of Antony's means stop or desist, desiring his followers to cease weeping. Ho ! was an interjection, frequently used as a command to desist or leave off. Mr. Boswell says,

'These words may have been intended to express as hysterical laugh, in the same way as Cleopatra exclaims in Act i. Sc. 5 :—

'—Ha ! As !

Give me to drink mandragora.'

¹² 'Here did she drop a tear ; here, in this place, I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace.'

King Richard II.

2 Sold. It will determine one way: fare you well.
Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?

1 Sold. Nothing: What news?

2 Sold. Belike, 'tis but a rumour:
Good night to you.

1 Sold. Well, sir, good night.

Enter Two other Soldiers.

2 Sold. Soldiers,
Have careful watch.

3 Sold. And you: Good night, good night.

[The first Two place themselves at their Posts.]

4 Sold. Here we: [They take their Posts.] and if to-morrow

Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope

Our landmen will stand up.

3 Sold. 'Tis a brave army,

And full of purpose.

[Music of Hautboys under the Stage.]

4 Sold. Peace, what noise?

1 Sold. List, list!

2 Sold. Hark!

1 Sold. Music! 'the air.

3 Sold. Under the earth.

4 Sold. It signs' well,
Does't not?

3 Sold. No.

1 Sold. Peace, I say. What should this mean?

2 Sold. 'Tis the god Hercules, whom Antony lov'd,

Now leaves him.²

1 Sold. Walk; let's see if other watchmen
Do hear what we do. [They advance to another Post.]

2 Sold. How now, masters?

3 Sold. How now?

How now? do you hear this?

[Several speaking together.]

1 Sold. Ay; is't not strange?

3 Sold. Do you hear, masters? do you hear?

1 Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quarter;
Let's see how't will give off.

2 Sold. [Several speaking.] Content: 'Tis strange.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA; CHARMIAN and others attending.

Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros!

Cleo. Sleep a little.

Ant. No, my chuck.—Eros, come; mine armour,
Eros!

Enter EROS, with Armour.

Come, good fellow, put thine iron on:—

If fortune be not ours to-day, it is Because we brave her.—Come.

Cleo. Nay, I'll help too.

What's this for?

Ant. Ah, let be, let be: thou art

The armourer of my heart:—False, false; this,
this.

Cleo. Sooth, la, I'll help: Thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well?

We shall thrive now.—Seest thou, my good fellow?
Go, put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly,³ sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled yet?

Ant. Rarely, rarely:

He that unbuckles this, till we do please

To doff't for our repose, shall hear a storm.—
Thou fumblest, Eros; and my queen's a squire

² This is from the old translation of Plutarch:—
'Within a little of midnight, when all the city was quiet, full of feare, and sorrow, thinking what would be the issue and end of this warre, it is saide that suddenly they heard a marvellous sweete harmonie of sundry sortes of instruments of musicke, with the cry of a multitude of people as they had bene dauncinge, and had song as they use in Bacchus feastes, with mov-inges and turnings after the manner of the satyres: and it seemed that this daunce went through the city unto the gate that opened to the enemies, and that all the troupe that made this noise they heard went out of the More tight⁴ at this, than thou: Despatch.—O love,

That thou could'st see my wars to-day, and knew'st
The royal occupation; thou should'st see

Enter an Officer, armed.

A workman in't.—Good morrow to thee; welcome:
Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike charge:
To business that we love, we rise betime,
And go to it with delight.

1 Off. A thousand, sir,
Early though it be, have on their riveted trim,⁵
And at the port expect you.

[Shout. Trumpets. Flourish.]

Enter other Officers, and Soldiers.

2 Off. The morn is fair.—Good morrow, general.
All. Good morrow, general.

Ant. 'Tis well blown, lads.

This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes.—
So, so; come, give me that: this way; well said.
Fare thee well, dame, whate'er becomes of me:
This is a soldier's kiss; rebukable, [Kisses her.]
And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On more mechanic compliment; I'll leave thee
Now, like a man of steel.—You, that will fight,
Follow me close; I'll bring you to't.—Adieu.

[Exeunt ANTONY, EROS, Officers, and Soldiers.]

Char. Please you, retire to your chamber?

Cleo. Lead me,

He goes forth gallantly. That he and Cæsar might Determine this great war in single fight:

Then, Antony,—But now,—Well, on. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Antony's Camp near Alexandria.
Trumpets sound. Enter ANTONY and EROS; a Soldier meeting them.

Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony!

Ant. 'Would, thou and those thy scars had once
prevail'd

To make me fight at land!

Sold. Had'st thou done so,
The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Follow'd thy heels.

Ant. Who's gone this morning?

Sold. Who?

One ever near thee: Call for Enobarbus,
He shall not hear thee; or from Cæsar's camp
Say, I am none of thine.

Ant. What say'st thou?

Sold. Sir,

He is with Cæsar.

Eros. Sir, his cheets and treasure
He has not with him.

Ant. Is he gone?

Sold. Most certain.

Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do it;

Detain no jot, I charge thee: write to him
(I will subscribe) gentle adieus, and greetings:

Say, that I wish he never find more cause
To change a master.—O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men:—Despatch:—Enobarbus!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Cæsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Flourish. Enter CÆSAR with AGRIPPA, ENO-BARBUS, and others.

Cæs. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight;

Our will is, Antony be took alive;
Make it so known.

Agr. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit AGRIPPA.] city at that gate. Now such as in reason sought the interpretation of this wonder, thought that it was the god unto whom Antonius bare singular devotion to counterfeits and resemble him, that did 'resake them.'

3 That is, 'quickly, sir.'

4 Tight is handy, adroit. See The Merry Wives of Windsor:—'Bear you these letters tightly.' A tight lass is a handy one.

5 So in King Henry V.—
'The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up'

Cæs. The time of universal peace is near :
Prove this a prosperous day, the three-mock'd world
Shall bear the olive freely.¹

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Antony
Is come into the field.

Cæs. Go, charge Agrippa,
Plant those that have revolted in the van,
That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself. [Exeunt CÆSAR and his Train.]

Eno. Alexas did revolt ; and went to Jewry,
On affairs of Antony ; there did persuade Great Herod to incline himself to Cæsar,
And leave his master Antony : for this pains,
Cæsar hath hang'd him. Capidius, and the rest
That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill,
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Cæsar's.

Sold. Enobarbus, Antony
Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with
His bounty overplus : The messenger
Came on my guard ; and at thy tent is now,
Unloading of his mules.

Eno. I give it you.

Sold. Mock not, Enobarbus.
I tell you true : Best you sa'd the bringer
Out of the host ; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done't myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove. [Exit Soldier.]

Eno. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most. O, Antony,
Thou mine of bounty, how would'st thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude Thou dost so crown with gold ! This blows² my heart :

If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrike thought : but thought will do't, I feel.
I fight against thee !—No : I will go seek
Some ditch, wherein to die ; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.]

SCENE VII. Field of Battle between the Camps.
Alarum. Drums and Trumpets. Enter AGRIPPA,
and others.

Agri. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far ;
Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression³
Exceeds what he expected. [Exeunt.]

Alarum. Enter ANTONY and SCARUS, wounded.
Scar. O, my brave emperor, this is fought indeed !
Had we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heads.

Ant. Thou bleed'st apace.
Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.

Ant. They do retire.
Scar. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes ;⁴ I have yet

Room for six scotches more.

Enter EROS.

Eros. They are beaten, sir ; and our advantage serves
For a fair victory.

1 The meaning is that the world shall then enjoy the blessings of peace undisturbed. The following passages illustrate this passage :—

'Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them.'
King John.

'There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd,
But peace puts forth her olive every where.'

King Henry VI. Part II. Act IV. Sc. 4.

2 'This generosity (says Enobarbus) swells my heart, so that it will quickly break, if thought break it not.'
Blown is used for puffed or swelled in the last scene :—
—— on her breast

'There is a vent of blood, and something blown.'
And in Lear :—

'No blown ambition doth our arms excite.'

Thought here also signifies grief. See Act III. Sc. 2.

3 'Our oppression' means the force by which we are oppressed or overpowered.

Scar. Let us score their backs,
And smatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind ;
'Tis sport to maul a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy sprightly comfort, and tenfold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. I'll halt after. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. Under the Walls of Alexandria.
Alarum. Enter ANTONY, marching ; SCARUS,
and Forces.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp ; Run one
before,

And let the queen know of our guests.⁴—Tomorrow,

Before the sun shall see us, we'll spill the blood
That has to-day escap'd. I thank you all ;
For doughty-handed are you : and have fought
Not as you served the cause, but as it had been
Each man's like mine ; you have shown all Hector's.
Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats ; whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds, and kiss
The honour'd gashes whole.—Give me thy hand ;
[To SCARUS.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, attended.

To this great fairy⁵ I'll commend thy acts, Make her thanks bless thee.—O, thou day o' the
world,

Chain mine arm'd neck ; leap thou, attire and all,
Through proof of harness⁶ to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of lords !
O, infinite virtue ! com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare⁷ uncaught ?

Ant. My nightingale,
We have beat them to their beds. What, girl ?
though gray

Do something mingle with our younger brow ; yet have we

A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get goal for goal of youth.⁸ Behold this man ;
Commend unto his lips thy favouring hand ;—
Kiss it, my warrior :—He hath fought to-day,
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo. I'll give thee, friend,
An armour all of gold : it was a king's.
Ant. He has deserv'd it : were it carbuncled
Like holy Phœbus' car.—Give me thy hand ;
Through Alexandria make a jolly march ;
Bear our hack'd targets like the men that owe them :⁹
Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear ;
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines :¹⁰
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together,

Applauding our approach. [Exeunt.]

4 The hole in a bench, ad levandum alium. Thus in Cecil's Secret Correspondence, published by Lord Halles, 1766 :—'And beside, until a man be sure that this embryo is likely to receive life, I will leave it like an abort in a bench-hole.'

5 Antony, after his success, intends to bring his officers to sup with Cleopatra, and orders notice to be given her of their coming.

6 Fairy, in former times, did not signify only a diminutive imaginary being, but an enchanter ; in which sense it is used here.

7 I. e. armour of proof. Harnais, Fr. ; armata, Ital.
8 I. e. the war. So in the 11th Psalm :—'The snare of death compassed me round about.'

Thus also Statius :—
'—— circum compassus læthi
Vallavere plagæ.'

9 At all plays of barriers the boundary is called a goal ; to win a goal is to be superior in a contest of activity.

10 'With spirit and exultation, such as becomes the brave warriors that own them.'

11 Tabourines were small drums.

SCENE IX. Cæsar's Camp. Sentinels on their Post. Enter ENOBARBUS.

1 Sold. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard :¹ The night
Is shiny : and, they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour i' the morn.

2 Sold. This last day was
A shrewd one to us.

Eno. O, bear me witness, night —

3 Sold. What man is this?

2 Sold. Stand close, and list him.

Eno. Be witness to me, O, thou blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did
Before thy face repeat! —

1 Sold. Enobarbus!

3 Sold. Peace;

Hark further.

Eno. O, sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The poisonous damp of night dispunge² upon me;
That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me : Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;³
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,
And finish all foul thoughts. O, Antony,
Nobler than my revolt is infamous.
Forgive me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive:
O, Antony! O, Antony!

[Dis.

2 Sold. Let's speak

To him.

1 Sold. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks
May concern Cæsar.

3 Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.

1 Sold. Swoons rather; for so bad a prayer as his
Was never yet for sleep.

2 Sold. Go we to him.

3 Sold. Awake, awake, sir; speak to us.

2 Sold. Hear you, sir?

1 Sold. The hand of death hath raught⁴ him.

Hark, the drums [Drums afar off.
Demurely⁵ wake the sleepers. Let us bear him
To the court of guard; he is of note: our hour
Is fully out.

3 Sold. Come on, then;
He may recover yet. [Exeunt with the Body.

SCENE X. Between the two Camps. Enter ANTONY and SCARUS, with Forces, marching.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea;

We please them not by land.

Scar.

For both, my lord.

Ant. I would, they'd fight i' the fire, or in the air;

1 The court of guard is the guard-room, the place where the guard musters. The phrase is used again in Othello.

2 Discharge, as a sponge when squeezed discharges the moisture it had imbibed.

3 'It is painful to find the gloomy dignity of this noble scene destroyed by the intrusion of a conceit so far-fetched and unaffecting.'—Johnson.

Stevens has justly observed, that Shakespeare, in most of his conceits, is kept in countenance by his contemporaries. We have something similar in Daniel's 11th Sonnet, ed. 1594:—

'Still must I wret my young desires abated,
Upon the flint of such a heart rebelling.'

4 Raught is the ancient preterite of the verb to reach.

5 Demurely for solemnly.

6 Some words appear to have been accidentally omitted in the old copy, which Malone has supplied by the phrase, 'Let's seek a spot.' Rowe supplied the omission by the words, 'Further on.'

7 'Where we may but discover their numbers, and see their motions.'

8 But, in its exceptive sense, for be out, i. e. without. Stevens has added a passage from the MS. Romance of Guillaume de Palerne, in the Library of King's Coll. Cambridge, in which the orthography almost explains the word:—

'I sayle now in the see as schip boule mast,

Boule anker, or ore, or any semlych sayle.'

9 The old copy reads, auguries. Augurs, the plural of augur, was anciently spelled augures, which we

We'd fight there too. But this it is; Our foot
Upon the hill adjoining to the city,
Shall stay with us: order for sea is given;
They have put forth the haven: Let's seek a spot.⁶

Where there appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour.' [Exeunt

Enter CÆSAR, and his Forces, marching.

Cæs. But⁷ being charg'd, we will be still by land,
Which, as I take't, we shall; for his best force
Is forth to man his galleys. To the vales,
And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.

Re-enter ANTONY and SCARUS.

Ant. Yet they're not join'd: Where yonder pine does stand,

I shall discover all: I'll bring thee word

Straight, how 'tis like to go. [Exit

Scar. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augures⁹ Say, they know not,—they cannot tell;—look grimly,

And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant, and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear,
Of what he has, and has not.

Alarm afar off, as at a Sea-fight. Re-enter ANTONY.

Ant. All is lost;

This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me:

My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder

They cast their caps up, and carouse together
Like friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whore!¹⁰ 'tis thou

Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart

Makes only wars on thee.—Bid them all fly;

For when I am reveng'd upon my charms,

I have done all:—Bid them all fly, begone.

[Exit SCARUS.

O, sun, thy uprise shall I see no more:

Fortune and Antony part here; even here

Do we shake hands.—All come to this!—The hearts

That spaniel'd¹¹ me at heels, to whom I gave

Their wishes, to discandy, melt their sweets

On blossoming Cæsar; and this pine is bark'd,

That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am:

O, this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm's

Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them
home;

Whose bosom was my crownet,¹² my chief end,

Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose,¹³

Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss.—

What, Eros, Eros!

should read here, and not augurers, improperly subscribed by Malone.

10 Cleopatra first belonged to Julius Cæsar, then to Antony, and now, as Antony supposes, to Augustus.

11 The old editions read, spaniel'd. Spaniel'd is the happy emendation of Sir Thomas Hanmer. In A Midsummer Night's Dream, Helena says to Demetrius:—
'I am your spaniel,—only give me leave,
Unworthy as I am, to follow you.'

12 'This grave charm' probably means this deadly or destructive power of witchcraft. In this sense the epithet grave is often used by Chapman in his translation of Homer. Thus in the nineteenth book:—
'—but not far hence the fatal minutes are
Of thy grace ruin.'

It seems to be employed in the sense of the Latin word gravis.

13 'That which I looked to as the reward or crown of my endeavours.' The allusion is to finis coronat opus. In All's Well that Ends Well we have:—'Still the finis the crown.'

14 The allusion is to the game of fast and loose, or pricking at the belt or girdle, still practised by juggling cheats at fairs, and which was practised by the gipsies in Shakespeare's time, as appears in an Epigram of Thomas Freeman's, in his collection, called 'Rum and a great Cast,' 1614, which is printed in the Variorum Shakespeare, together with Sir John Hawkl's description of the game. See also Scott's Discoverie of Witchcraft, 1664, p. 235.

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt.
Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love?
Ant. Vanish; or I shall give thee thy deserving,
 And blemish Cæsar's triumph. Let him take thee,
 And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians:
 Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
 Of all thy sex: most monster-like, be shown
 For poor'st diminutives, for doits;¹ and let Patient Octavia plough thy visage up
 With her prepared nails. [Exit Cleo.] 'Tis well
 thou'rt gone,
 If it be well to live: But better 'twere
 Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
 Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho!—
 The shirt of Nessus is upon me: Teach me,
 Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage:
 Let me lodge Lichas² on the horns o' the moon;
 And with those hands, that grasp'd the heaviest club,
 Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die;
 To the young Roman boy she hath sold me, and I
 fall

Under this plot: she dies for't.—Eros, ho! [Exit.]

SCENE XI. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Help me, my women! O, he is more mad
 Than Telamon³ for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
 Was never so emboss'd.⁴

Char. To the monument;
 There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead.

The soul and body rive not more in parting,⁵
 Than greatness going off.

Cleo. To the monument:—
 Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself;
 Say, that the last I spoke was, Antony,
 And word it, pr'ythee, piteously: Hence,
 Mardian; and bring me how he takes my death.—
 To the monument. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XII. The same. Another Room. Enter
 ANTONY and EROS.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?

Eros. Ay, noble lord.
Ant. Sometime, we see a cloud that's dragonish;⁶
 A vapour, sometime, like a bear, or lion,
 A tower'd citadel, a pendent rock,
 A forked mountain or blue promontory
 With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
 And mock our eyes with air: Thou hast seen these signs;

They are black vespers' pageants.⁷

Eros. Ay, my lord.

1 i. e. for the smallest pieces of money. The old copy reads, 'for doits'; and, at Mr. Tyrwhitt's suggestion, Steevens reads, 'to doits.'

2 Shakespeare was probably indebted to Golding's translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, b. ix. for the story of Lichas.

3 i. e. than Ajax Telamon for the armour of Achilles, the most valuable part of which was the shield. The boar of Thessaly was the boar killed by Meleager.

4 When a hunted animal is so hard run that it foams at the mouth, it is said to be emboss'd.

5 — It is a surfeiting, panging
 As soul and body's severing.

King Henry VIII.

6 'Like to a mass of clouds, that now seem like
 An elephant, and straightway like an ox,
 And then a mouse.' Chapman's Mons. D'Olive.
 '— like empty clouds,
 In which our faulty apprehensions forge
 The forms of dragons, lions, elephants,
 When they hold no proportion.'

Bussy D'Amboise.

7 The beauty both of the expression and the allusion is lost, unless we recollect the frequency and the nature of these shows in Shakespeare's age. The following apposite passage from a sermon, by Bishop Hall, is cited by Mr. Boswell:—'I fear some of you are like the pageants of your great solemnities, wherein there is a show of a solid body, whether of a lion, or elephant,

Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought,
 The rack dissolves,⁸ and makes it indistinct,
 As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord.

Ant. My good knave,⁹ Eros, now thy captain is Even such a body: here I am Antony;
 Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
 I made these wars for Egypt; and the queen,—
 Whose heart, I thought, I had, for she had mine;
 Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto't
 A million more, now lost,—she, Eros, has Pack'd cards¹⁰ with Cæsar, and false play'd my glory
 Unto an enemy's triumph.—

Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us
 Ourselves to end ourselves.—O, thy vile lady.

Enter MARDIAN.

She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony;
 My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled
 With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy eunuch; peace;
 She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once;
 And that she has discharged: What thou would'st do
 Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake
 Was Antony! most noble Antony!

Then in the midst a tearing groan did break
 The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips: she render'd life,
 Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead, then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Unarm, Eros; the long day's task is done,
 And we must sleep:—That thou depart'st hence safe,

Does pay thy labour richly; Go.—Off, pluck off;—
 [Exit MARDIAN.]

The sevenfold shield of Ajax cannot keep
 The battery from my heart.¹¹ O, cleave my sides!
 Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,¹²
 Crack thy frail case!—Apace, Eros, apace.—
 No more a soldier:—Bruised pieces, go;
 You have been nobly borne.—From me awhile.—
 [Exit EROS.]

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now
 All length is torture:¹³ Since the torch is out,
 Lie down, and stray no further: Now all labour
 Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles
 Itself with strength: Seal, then,¹⁴ and all is done.—
 Eros!—I come, my queen:—Eros!—Stay for me:
 Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand,
 And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze:

or unicorn; but if they be curiously look'd into, there is nothing but cloth, and sticks, and ayre.'

8 i. e. 'the fleeting away of the clouds destroys the picture.'

9 Knave was familiarly used for servant. Thus in A Merry Geste of Robyn Hood:—

'I shall thee lende lytle John my man,
 For he shall be thy knave.'

But it had already begun to have no favourable signification when Baret published his Alvearie, in 1573.

10 'To pack the cards' was to put them together in an unfair manner. It is often used metaphorically, for contriving together to deceive another. The poet meant to say, that Cleopatra, by collusion, played the great game they were engaged in falsely, so as to sacrifice Antony's fame to that of his enemy. There is an equivocal between trump and triumph. The game of trump (trionphe, Fr.) was then popular; it was a rude prototype of whist.

11 'The battery from my heart' means 'the battery proceeding from my heart, which is strong enough to break through the sevenfold shield of Ajax; I wish it were strong enough to cleave my sides and destroy me.'

12 i. e. the thing that contains thee.
 13 Steevens thinks that the poet wrote life, and not length. But length may signify extension or protraction of life.

14 A passage in King Henry V. explains this:—
 'And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd
 A testament of noble-ending love.'

Dido and her Æneas' shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours.—Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter EROS.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra died,
I liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword
Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back
With ships made cities, condemn myself to lack
The courage of a woman; less noble mind¹
Than she, which, by her death, our Cæsar tells,
I am conqueror of myself. Thou art sworn, Eros,
That, when the exigent should come, (which now
Is come, indeed,) when I should see behind me
The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command,
Thou then would'st kill me: do't; the time is come:
Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Cæsar thou defeat'st.
Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me!
Shall I do that, which all the Parthian darts,
Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Ant. Eros,
Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy master thus with pleach'd² arms, bending down
His corrigible³ neck, his face subdued
To penetrative shame; whilst the wheel'd seat
Of fortunate Cæsar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensu'd?⁴

Eros. I would not see't.

Ant. Come, then; for with a wound I must be cur'd.
Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn
Most useful for thy country.

Eros. O, sir, pardon me.

Ant. When I did make thee free, swor'st thou not then
To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.
Eros. Turn from me then that noble countenance,
Wherein the worship⁵ of the whole world lies.

Ant. Lo thee. [Turning from him.]

Eros. My sword is drawn.

Ant. Then let it do at once
The thing why thou hast drawn it.

Eros. My dear master,
My captain and my emperor! let me say,
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said, man;—and farewell.

Eros. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now, Eros.

Eros. Why, there, then:—[Falls on his sword.]

Thus do I escape the sorrow

Of Antony's death. [Dies.]

Ant. Thrice nobler than myself!
Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what I should, and thou could'st not. My queen and Eros
Have, by their brave instruction, got upon me
A nobleness in record: But I will be
A bridegroom in my death,⁶ and run into't
As to a lover's bed. Come, then; and, Eros, Thy master dies thy scholar; to do thus

[Falling on his sword.]
I learn'd of thee. How! not dead? not dead?—
The guard!—ho!—O, despatch me.

1 Warburton remarks that Dido and Æneas were not likely to be found thus lovingly associated, 'where souls do couch on flowers.' Either the poet forgot Virgil's celebrated description in the sixth book of the Æneid, or confounded Æneas with Sicchenus inadvertently.

2 'Less noble mind' must be accepted as if it was written less nobly minded. The termination dy is often written by old writers, and is frequently to be found so in Shakspeare. To mind or purpose is a verb extensively used in former times. We have it in the Third Part of King Henry VI.:

'Belike she minde to play the amazon.'

And in another place:—

'But for my mind to hold your true obedience,'

So Barret:—'I am fully purposed, mind'd, or determin'd so to do.' The passage in North's Plutarch, which Shakspeare copied, runs thus:—'I am sorrie

Enter DERCEAS and Guard.

1 Guard. What's the noise?
Ant. I have done my work ill, friends; O, make an end

Of what I have begun.

2 Guard. The star is fallen.

1 Guard. And time is at his period.

All. Alas, and wo!

Ant. Let him that loves me, strike me dead.

1 Guard. Not I.

2 Guard. Nor I.

3 Guard. Nor any one. [Exeunt Guard.]

Der. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly.

This sword but shewn to Cæsar, with this tidings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Where's Antony?

Der. There, Diomed, there.

Dio. Lives he?

Will thou not answer, man? [Exit DERCEAS.]

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me

Sufficing strokes for death.

Dio. Most absolute lord,

My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did she send thee?

Dio. Now, my lord.

Ant. Where is she?

Dio. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear

Of what hath come to pass: for when she saw
(Which never shall be found) you did suspect
She hath dispos'd⁷ with Cæsar, and that your rage
Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead;

But, fearing, since, how it might work, hath sent
Me to proclaim the truth; and I am come,
I dread, too late. [pr'ythee.]

Ant. Too late, good Diomed:—Call my guard, I

Dio. What, ho! the emperor's guard! The guard what, ho!

Come, your lord calls.

Enter some of the Guard.

Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra bides;

'Tis the last service that I shall command you.

1 Guard. Wo, wo are we, sir, you may not live to wear

All your true followers out.

All. Most heavy day!

Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fate.

To grace it with your sorrows: bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it,
Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up:
I have led you off; carry me now, good friends,
And have my thanks for all.

[Exeunt bearing ANTONY]

SCENE XIII. The same. A Monument. Enter above, CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. O, Charmian, I will never go from hence.
Char. Be comforted, dear madam.

that having been so great a captain and emperor, I am indeed condemn'd to be judged of lesse courage and noble minde than a woman.

3 i. e. arms folded in each other.

4 Corrigible for corrected, and afterwards penetra- time for penetrating. So Virgil has 'penetrabile frigus' for 'penetrans frigus,' in his Georgics.

5 'Branded with baseness the poor wretch that fol- low'd.'

6 i. e. the honour, the dignity.

7 This thought occurs in Measure for Measure:—
'I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in my arms.'

8 i. e. arranged with him, agreed with him. The word is used in this sense in Trollop and Crossida, Act
ii. Sc. 3:—

'Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyes. He doth rely on none,

But carries on the stream of his disposé
Without observance or respect of any'

Cleo. No, I will not:
All strange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we despise; our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great

Enter DIOMEDES.

As that which makes it.—How now? is he dead?

Dio. His death's upon him, but not dead.
Look out o' the other side your monument,
His guard have brought him thither.

Enter ANTONY, borne by the Guard.

Cleo. O, thou sun,
Burn the great sphere thou mov'st in!—clarkling stand

The varying shore o' the world. O, Antony, Antony, Antony!

Help, Charmian; help, Iras, help: help, friends
Below, let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace:
Not Caesar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,
But Antony's hath triumph'd on himself.

Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony Should conquer Antony; but wo 'tis so!
